The "Cannon Ball House"

Tryon, to punish the rebels of Ridgefield, fired the Episcopal Church (because it was used for military stores) and six dwellings. Among the latter was the Keeler Tavern, owned by Timothy Keeler. This was fired upon by the British artillery, and at least one of the cannon balls is still to be seen embedded in one of the timbers of the house. One of Keeler's nearest neighbors was a royalist, and he seeing his own home threatened by the sparks from the burning tavern, received the permission of General Tryon to extinguish the fire. He did so. And when Keeler, late in the day, returned from fighting the British, he was met by his royalist neighbor.

"You may thank me," said the Tory, "that your home is safe."

"No, sir," emphatically asserted Mr. Keeler, the belligerent patriot, "I refuse to thank a Tory for saving my home, but I do thank God for a north wind."

My guess is that the zealous old Continental placed the gratitude about where it belonged.

Old Keeler Tavern is now the residence of Mr. Cass Gilbert, a leading architect of the United States. Through the activity of Mr. Rockwell and the courtesy of Mr. Gilbert, the Olmsteds were permitted to see the Cannon Ball House, as it is termed, and to see the cannon ball itself. And beside that two or three of us, meeting Mr. Gilbert himself in the garden of his fine old place, spent about an hour in very pleasant converse with him. His interests are broad. He has traveled much, and his professional services as architect have taken him into many States of the Union, to design some of our outstanding public buildings. In conversation he is thoughtful, of easy expression, and liberal in view.

I left Ridgefield on Sunday afternoon well pleased at the opportunity to have seen the fine old town and particularly, to have had opportunity to meet my distant relatives, and learn something about another one of the very many historic places abounding in the East. And I hope my readers have felt a little of the pleasure I derived from the visit. It was another respite or recreation which helps one on his road of duty.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 5.

Independence

Quarterly Conference

Since the first of this year the church membership in Independence has grown by the addition of one hundred and seventeen members according to a report read to the quarterly conference in Zion at the Stone Church, Monday night. In the months between January and October there were 176 baptisms and 247 transfers to Independence, making a total gain of 423. But during that same period 256 were transferred to other districts and there were 50 deaths, making a loss of 306.

President F. M. McDowell was in charge of the conference, assisted in the stand by Elders H. G. Barto and D. S. McNamara and Bishop J. S. Kelley. Ruby Johnson was secretary, and Frank McDonald, assistant secretary.

Important among the actions of the conference was the approval of the church court's recommendation to grant the requests of the following to withdraw from the membership: John W. Crick, Lillian Fry, Irene Dorothy Stockdale, Joseph Charles Cole, Valentine N. Dick, Julia A. Dick, Mary Elizabeth Dick Davis, Ella Dick Winter, and Virgil Dick. It also unanimously approved the recommendation for re-instatement in church membership of the following: Nellie Overcast, H. H. Robinson, and Mary A. Robinson. Two were suspended from membership, Cedric S. Webster and John Worsham, and one expelled, Mrs. Hazel Gallagher.

The conference was pleased to learn from a report of Bishop J. S. Kelley that three quorums of deacons have been organized in Independence, an action authorized by the last conference, and approved by adopting the report.

The following names recommended for ordination by the pastors in Independence, were approved: Sam M. Inman, elder; Roy E. Settles, teacher; Archie Davis, deacon, and Eli Kester, deacon.

President McDowell brought the meeting to a close with a brief address in which he spoke of the growing spirituality of the church and its consistent up-building towards the objectives set forth by the last General Conference.

These are busy days for the Young People's Council of Independence. It has enlisted the young people in a number of community movements. The contribution of the council to the Harvest Home Festival was outstandingly helpful and beautifying in effect. To them was given the task of decorating the long alley ways around the entire lower room of the Auditorium; painting and trimming the great pillars which support the main floor and upper building, and adding harvest touches to the ramps descending from the foyer of the building to the lower hall. For several nights preceding the festival young men and women worked industriously, brightening dull, bare corners and nooks of the room.

And now that the festival is over, the council is launching into something new. It will sponsor an indoor carnival in the lower room of the Auditorium Saturday, October 22, with clown band, stunts, and other special features. Proceeds from this event are to be applied to the expenses of a young people's rally next month.

Also, the young people's council is this fall sponsoring a literary contest. This contest has two divisions, play writing and story writing. Cash prizes are offered, and the winning contributions will be presented by the young people of Independence to the young workers of the church. The finals of this contest will be held December 16.

An Independence scholarship at Graceland is the goal of the new and active chapter of the Graceland Alumni Association in Independence. The approach of Home-coming and College Day brought all ex-Gracelanders to the fore last night when two one-act plays were presented by the chapter to Graceland friends and supporters at the Dining Hall. "The Hour Glass" was directed by Mrs. Leonard Lea, and "Calico," by Miss Pauline Siegfried. The casts of these productions were exclusively composed of Graceland people. Music was by George Anway, tenor, and the Midwesterners, a male quartet composed of Roderick May, Duane Swalley, Robert Crawford, and Edward Cronenbold.

Stone Church

The memorial service for Brother John T. Gresty, held at three o'clock in the afternoon and attended by friends and church officials who loved and revered the departed one, was one of the principal events of Sunday at the Stone Church. Elder John Blackmore, a native of Australia, was in charge of the service, and Apostle Paul M. Hanson, one-time missionary to that country, preached a beautiful memorial sermon. Musical offerings gave a harmonious background to the service, and floral pieces were abundant.

Brother Gresty's body was found in the Missouri River October 11, near the Lexington-Richmond bridge, and identified beyond all doubt by those who knew him best in this country. The body was brought to Independence where a private funeral service was held Saturday afternoon from the Latta Funeral Home in keeping with the funeral services of Brother Gresty's native land. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Brother Gresty, who was seventy years of age, disappeared from the V. V. Smith home in Kansas City, March 25. For several weeks previous to that time, he had been giving intensive work to the preparation of the oratorio, "The Messiah," for the April General Conference of the church. He had been ill, and it was thought at the time he disappeared that he might have been sufficiently despondent to attempt to take his own life.

This zealous lover of the gospel and musical enthusiast came to America in 1930, in time to direct the presentation of his own oratorio, "The Course of Time," at the Centennial Conference. He found many friends in America. Brother Gresty is survived by relatives in Australia.

In his sermon to the congregation Sunday morning Pastor John F. Sheehy emphasized the Saints' responsibility in the civic relief campaign being conducted this week in Independence. He also stressed certain other responsibilities of church members.

The Stone Church Choir, faithful at its post, presented its half hour musical broadcast program from eleven to eleven-thirty, and assisted Brother Sheehy in the congregational service.

Brother Enoch Cox, fifty-seven years of age, died at his home here October 13, and the funeral service was conducted from the home Saturday afternoon. Elder John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Brother Cox had many friends in Independence where he and his family are known as faithful church members and loyal helpers. He was baptized a member of the church March 30, 1894.

In the evening all the church congregations of Independence were invited to participate in a mass meeting at Memorial Hall, to launch the annual drive for civic relief. This year the goal set is thirty thousand dollars, and the purpose of Sunday evening's meeting was to inspire citizens with a desire to do their part in putting across this drive for funds. Mayor Roger T. Sermon presided, and music was furnished for the occasion by the Wahdemna Choral Club, Paul N. Craig leading community singing. Elder J. F. Sheehy was there and assisted with the benediction. There was no evening service at the Stone Church.

Early Monday morning Stone Church people were out with other organized civic relief workers, giving their best efforts to the drive.

Sunday night there occurred at the Auditorium the wedding of a young woman who is a well known worker in the Stone Church congregation, Miss Gladys Teeter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Teeter. She became the bride of Mr. Eugene Overbey, of Kansas City, at a colonial wedding ceremony which had for its setting Mount Vernon's veranda at the Harvest Home Festival. Elder George Mesley, of Kansas City, officiated. The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Gilbert Meinershagen, of Higginsville, as matron of honor, and P. A. Husseton, of Kansas City was best man. In the bridal party were members of the Y. P. R. and Y. K. T. Classes. A large crowd of friends, fellow workers, and acquaintances witnessed the pretty ceremony, and a reception followed at the young people's room at the Auditorium.

Sister Viola Short, widow of the late

Morris T. Short, early missionary and church man, slipped and fell at the Auditorium the night of September 13, breaking her hip. She was attending a community banquet the main feature of which was a lecture by Doctor William P. McGarey of the Anti-Saloon League. For a number of weeks Sister Short suffered at the Sanitarium, and she is now at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ruby Short McKim, in a very serious condition. Sister Short is seventy-eight years of age, and during her life-time has won many friends through her charming personality and her spirit of willing helpfulness. She is well known for her literary contributions to the church, and is the author of the book, The Fourth Relatord.

Second Church

Two hundred and eighty-nine people were recorded as being present at the church school, October 16, an increase of sixteen over the attendance of Sunday, October 9.

Following the example of the junior service of last week, Ralph Watkins was in charge. Bethel Davis played and Nadine Inman directed the music. Elder J. W. Miller talked on the subject, "The Kingdom of God by Our Works." Several special numbers were given on the program including a story by Miss Geraldine Fields, "How Tilat Found God."

The hymn, "Gracious Spirit Dwell With Me," was sung by the choir at the beginning of the eleven o'clock preaching service. Elder R. D. Weaver, speaker of the hour, took his text from Peter 2:1. At the conclusion of his excellent sermon, Brother Weaver quoted from Saint Luke 6:41, Christ's words, "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye?"

Brother G. B. Inman celebrated his seventieth birthday with a dinner given him at his home Sunday by his children and grandchildren.

Elder J. T. Curtis, who has been ill at the Independence Sanitarium is now convalescing at his home.

Maddy Fern Murdock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Murdock, of Second Church, won a prize in the Better Baby Show held at the Harvest Festival.

Walnut Park Church

Local members are proud and happy to have won second prize among the Independence Harvest Festival exhibits. This year Walnut Park workers did not work for a prize, but to present in as beautiful and acceptable a way as possible their gift to the festival.

Elder C. L. Olson spoke to the Saints the morning of October 9, reporting the financial condition of District Three. It was very encouraging.

At the close of the church school Brother E. E. Moorman called for a volunteer choir. About fifty responded and sang "Faith of Our Fathers" from the new Saints' Hymnal. This was inspiring.

Class work at six o'clock began that evening with larger attendance than on the previous Sunday evening. Several more classes were organized. Mrs. Clifford Moore presented her little pupils with readings and songs.

On that night local members were happy to listen to Patriarch F. A. Smith who spoke on the proofs of the Book of Mormon. The choir, although small in number, sang the anthem, "As Pants the Hart," arrangement from Spohr's "Crucifixion," Marian Campbell, soprano, singing the obbligato. The production was directed by Minnie Scott Dobson, Drexel Mollison at the piano.

The church school last Sunday morning was in charge of Elder R. Barnhardt. Violet Chase directed the orchestra and the hymns. Elder Welton Wood gave a fine talk at the close, his text being, "What Fruit Have You Gathered for Jesus?"

At the next service a quartet composed of Delta Nace, Evelyn Phillips, Milford Nace, and Arlon Chapman, sang, "Close, Close to Thee," from the new Saints' Hymnal. Elders Mansel Williams and Cloris Closson were in charge of this service, and Pastor Frank McDonald was the speaker.

Enoch Hill Church

The theme of the church school October 9, was "Faith in Our Fellow Man." E. H. McKean gave an interesting talk on the theme and Mrs. Ruth Hayes sang "Just a Little Help From Me."

At the morning preaching hour the choir sang "Blest Be Thou, O God, of Israel," and the ladies' quartet sang "Jesus Savior Pilot Me."

Bishop A. B. Phillips, the morning speaker, talked on "Responsibility," discussing the three aspects—accountability, trustworthiness, and ability.

Elder C. V. Hopkins was the evening speaker, and took his text from the words of Christ, "Feed My Sheep."

"Faith in Ourselves" was the church school theme October 16, and was presented by a talk by Nellie Mae Kramer, a reading, "It Couldn't Be Done," by Mrs. Henrietta Allen, and "Consecration," sung by the school.

Elder H. E. Winegar occupied the morning hour, taking "Confidence and Trust in God" as his subject. The choir sang "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning," and Mrs. Ruth Hayes sang "Song of Redemption."

If great ideas are sufficient to make men Christians, how does it happen that the disciples were so joyous and so impotent until the day of Pentecost? . . . Ideas will never save a man. . . . There is no church without fire and power, there is neither fire nor power without the Holy Spirit.—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

Hold Meetings at Taylorville During Coal Miners' Strike

Most of our work for the month of September was done at Taylorville, Illinois. Almost as soon as we arrived in our new mission, we received word from Apostle J. F. Garver that the branch at Taylorville had written him, requesting a series of meetings there. As we had our schedule made out until Labor Day, we were not able to go until that time.

It looked as though the miners' strike would prohibit our series at Taylorville, but upon receipt of advice from Brother Henson, branch president, that everything seemed quiet, we went there and started meetings.

From the first Sunday the meetings steadily increased in attendance, and by the beginning of the second week, chairs had to be carried up from the lower auditorium, and on Sunday night, the last night of our stay, the church could scarcely hold the crowd.

Special Permit to Hold Meetings

But we labored under a disadvantage all the time. After we had been there a week there was a riot between the two factions of union miners, the new organization called the Progressive Miners, and the United Mine Workers. This caused the sending in of troops, and for the last two weeks the city was patrolled by soldiers. On the day the soldiers came, the sheriff issued orders that no public meetings of any kind would be allowed. As our meetings were very successful we disliked to cancel them. So we went to the captain of the troops and also to the sheriff and stated our case. The captain said that he had no objection to our holding meetings, and upon his putting the matter squarely to the sheriff for settlement, we were given a written permit to proceed with our services so long as no discussion of the strike situation was permitted in our building.

In securing this permission we were most fortunate. A big revival had been in progress in a tabernacle erected by the Pentecostal people, and this was closed. The reason given by the sheriff for closing their meetings was that they permitted testimonies, and the men and women testifying took advantage and voiced their sentiments regarding the operators and the United Mine Workers. Also a revival which was to have been held for several weeks in the city park was ordered closed, because the park was such a public place that it permitted the men to congregate and air their difficulties. After the coming of the soldiers, the minds of the people were very upset.

Various Programs Included

On the first night of the meetings a great number of children were present, and so Sister Baldwin took charge of them. Each night for half an hour preceding my sermon, she told stories and gave blackboard talks, and was very successful in her work. The children, about twenty-five in number of junior and intermediate age, attended all during the meetings.

During the morning hours we held several priesthood meetings. The men were not working, and this seemed the only time we could meet as there was class work in the afternoon.

On the first day of class work we met from three to four o'clock in the afternoon, but the Saints said this was not nearly long enough, and so we met from two thirty till four. On the last afternoon, in order to finish the outlines Sister Baldwin had prepared, we met for two hours. About sixty attended these classes and Sister Baldwin was teacher. Her subject was "Worship in the Church Services." I helped her with it, and one afternoon talked on "Dignity in the Priesthood," stressing especially dress and pulpit manners.

We had a big day on the last Sunday with sacrament service and the baptizing of two young women, one the mother of a young family.

One pleasing feature of our stay at Taylorville was that we were permitted to keep house. The Saints fitted up the basement of the church, separating it into rooms by means of screens and curtains. Sister Baldwin and I did our own cooking, and the Saints saw to it that we lacked nothing in the way of food. They even provided a radio, and with the piano already there, we had a fine home. We enjoyed it thoroughly, and are grateful to the Saints for their expressions of love and appreciation. They thanked us heartily for our work among them.

Sister Baldwin and I were loath to leave them, but felt that we could more profitably return at a time when the strike is ended and their minds not so confused over conditions and the problem of how they are to live this winter.

RICHARD BALDWIN.

Kansas City Stake

Kansas City Stake feels keenly its loss in the passing of Evangelist John T. Gresty whose memorial service was held at the Stone Church, in Independence, Sunday afternoon. Though many knew him as a musician of exceptional ability, he was better known to Kansas City Saints as a patriarch. He had many friends in this city, and though he was of advanced age, his going seems untimely. The members feel that not only a great but a good man has gone from them.

The Harvest Home Festival at the Auditorium was enjoyed by Saints of Kansas City who reveled in the display of garden and farm products. Again

Kansas City Stake was awarded first prize in the group of visitors' exhibits. Elder H. Arthur Koehler and Brother C. C. Hoover were the artists who with brush and other handwork beautified the exhibit.

Gladstone Church

Owing to the continued illness of Pastor C. A. Selbe, the stake presidency appointed Robert E. Jones, of Independence, as pastor. The Saints have endeavored to give Brother Jones loyal support in every way.

In the past two weeks Elder J. Charles May, stake missionary, has conducted a series of meetings in this group. His sermons were inspiring, and there was special music by the Chelsea O. B. K. Choir, soloists, and numbers by Brother May.

Brother William Barham has been appointed as bishop's agent of the group. He and his family have entered into active service with this congregation.

Donations were sent from here to the Harvest Home Festival.

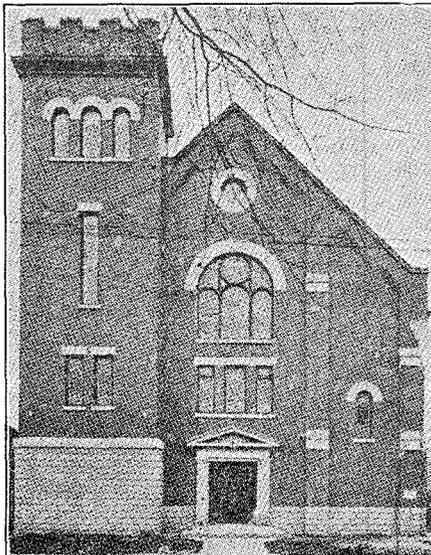

London, Ontario

Impressive Graduation Exercises

There was very large attendance at the last sacrament service, and the meeting was in charge of Pastor J. E. MacGregor. The Saints were prompt in their testimonies and a good spirit was manifested to the encouragement of all. The members were eager to renew their covenants with Christ.

"Auntie" Likins is improving very slowly from her recent illness. She became seriously ill at Woodstock while visiting her son, Edward. Was brought to her daughter's home in London last week.

The church school held its graduation and rally day on a recent Sunday. The primary room and auditorium were beautifully decorated for the occasion and Sister Grace Perry, primary superintendent, after addressing the graduating class, presented each scholar a lovely framed picture of Christ. In the upper auditorium the class was welcomed by Elder Frank Gray, church school director, and his assistants. The program included two excellent papers, "The Responsibility of Youth to the Church," by Sister Marie Mottashed, and, "The Responsibility of the Church to Youth," by Brother Arlo Hodgson. Then Pastor J. E. MacGregor delivered an able address.

OUR CHURCH AT LONDON, ONTARIO

Members of the Laurel Club and organized classes are busy preparing events for the fall and winter. There is some excellent talent among the classes, and the Saints look for "big doings" this season. The dramatic club is also busy.

Many were happy to see Brother Fred Timbrell in attendance again after a two week's illness from blood poison.

The friends of Brother Carl Harnden, of Hamilton, were shocked to hear of his sudden passing last week. Much sympathy is extended to Sister Pearl and others of the family in their bereavement.

The church school loses two of its active workers in Brothers Raymond Sinclair and Laverne Richardson. The former went to Toronto to take a course in normal work, the latter is taking the road as a traveling salesman.

Brother Alvin Perry, of Sarnia, was present at the last sacrament service in London.

Shidler, Oklahoma

Growing in Numbers and Interest

This branch is progressing. Some have moved away, but fifteen new members have been baptized here this year.

Branch and church school elections were held September 25. Elder Edward Workmon was sustained branch president, also church school supervisor. The following were sustained in their offices: Elder, J. E. Montague; priests, Paul Storm, and R. E. Montague; teachers, James Duncan and George Swain, and deacon, Frank Fender.

The branch has taken on added responsibility since October 1. It furnishes house, fuel, and lights for the pastor and family, permitting him to devote more time to the work of the local.

District President F. Ed. Dillon was recently here and preached two sermons which were greatly appreciated.

Shidler members are pleased with the new Saints' Herald, and hope soon to be able to put it in every Saints' home here.

Our strongest and most effective testimony of this work is our daily walk among our associates.—B. A. Howard, in the Western Oklahoma District Letter.

state was able to dominate for a dozen years. A legislative investigation made in 1905 revealed an almost unbelievable extent of political corruption."—Prohibition Facts, page 49.

PROHIBITION INCREASES BUSINESS AND WEALTH

The proof is overwhelming that prohibition has been one of the greatest economic helps to the people that any age ever produced. Per capita savings more than doubled from 1916 to 1925, and the National Bureau of Economic Research reported in 1927 that the nation's income in 1926 was forty per cent greater than in 1918. The Wickersham Commission reported "a real and significant gain" had followed prohibition, and President Hoover stated: "The dry law has proved its worth in dollars and cents." Roger Babson declared that "Prohibition has been a great factor in promoting business prosperity," and Professor Irving Fisher, well known economist, states that it is "one of the most successful" as well as "the greatest economic experiment in history." Henry Ford issues a warning that all may well heed. He says:

"If the impossible should occur, I mean the return of legalized liquor, the first effect would be the widespread reduction of wages due to the demoralization of labor, which liquor always causes."—Prohibition Facts, page 38.

Five years after prohibition came, twenty-three million more persons had money in savings banks than formerly, and from 1914 to 1931 bank deposits increased over 260 per cent to the enormous sum of $52,000,000,000. If liquor license should return, it is estimated that it would shift the employment of about 89,000 people, but in doing so would throw out of work approximately 250,000 people, thus demoralizing much of the labor industry, and greatly decreasing the sale of milk and other farm products. Something of the effects which would result to labor if liquor license should return is shown in the report of the Massachusetts legislature Commission in 1914, which states that 104,936 arrests for drunkenness were made in that state in one year ending September 30, 1913. The report stated:

"Yet the statistics of arrests for drunkenness fail to indicate the gravity of this problem because only a small percentage of intoxicated persons are taken into custody."—Prohibition Manual, page 20.

On the basis of the present population and the same proportion of arrests for drunkenness in all states, a return to liquor license would mean that over 3,230,000 arrests would be made in the United States every year on account of drunkards, thus decreasing employment and wages and causing destruction in thousands of homes.

PROHIBITION HELPS THE FARMER

Liquor license, by increasing money spent for booze, would greatly decrease consumption of milk, causing untold injury to the farmer. Pabst and other brewers in 1917 admitted to the United States agriculture committee that the brewers used less than three fourths of one per cent of grain produced in the United States. This insignificant amount could not possibly offset the great loss of milk business which liquor license would cause. Besides this, the farmer has received about thirteen cents more per bushel for corn and from twenty-four to thirty-nine cents more for rye since prohibition, as reported in 1930 to the House Judiciary by Mr. Taber, Master of the National Grange. Under prohibition milk consumption increased from forty-two gallons to about sixty gallons per capita. The Ohio Farmer, a leading agricultural paper, states:

"Prohibition has been a great benefit to American agriculture, to the increase of dairy products, and the increased standards of living of the consumer."—Prohibition Facts, page 34.

PROHIBITION PROTECTS OUR YOUTH

Statistics from all authentic sources prove that there is far less drinking and delinquency among high school and other young people under prohibition. Delinquency is only forty to sixty per cent as great as in liquor license days. President Hoover's Law Observance Commission reported much less drinking and much better behavior in high schools, though enrollment had increased 150 per cent under prohibition. Commander Booth of the Salvation Army States:

"Eighty per cent of the suffering among the families of the common laborers of our cities was wiped out by prohibition."—Ibid., page 25.

This comes from a source of very wide experience. Another person of great experience, John Mitchell, while president of the Mine Workers of America, said:

"I believe that liquor has contributed more to the moral, intellectual, and material deterioration of the people and has brought more misery to defenseless women and children than any other agency in the history of mankind."—Ibid., page 40.

Former President Theodore Roosevelt, one of the greatest men of a generation, said that "liquor works more ruin than any other one cause." With these overwhelming proofs of the evils of liquor, surely no one of good morals can vote for those who seek its return to our nation and people.

through obedience to law they may be saved.

THE FALL AN UGLY ACT

Some people seem to regard the fall of man as simply a bit of theology, a dogma, or outworn doctrine. The fall of man is an actual fact which any man can verify if he keeps his eyes open. Such personages as Abraham Lincoln, Florence Nightingale, President Joseph Smith, and hundreds of others, Christ being preeminent, have witnessed the fact that men may live on a high plane, even on the plane God intended they should occupy; they have exhibited the attributes he had in mind when he said, "It is good." They have shown the potentialities that he put into man. They have witnessed to us that the high plane is within the reach of man—that plane the Psalmist David had in mind when he said:

"Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hand."—Psalm 8: 5, 6.

In a passage that is only a little less sublime than scripture, Shakespeare makes Hamlet indulge in this soliloquy:

"What a piece of work is man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a God!"

Is man living on that high plane today? We have but to read the daily papers to have that question answered. Let any man take an excursion, if he will, into the great cities and visit the districts where the very poor are herded together, those who never had very much opportunity, witness their manner of life, and see if he does not think that man is living far beneath his possibilities. Then let him go into the quarters where the very rich live, those who have had every opportunity that the greatest age of the world could offer them, of culture, of travel, and of leisure, those who have time and money to burn, and look into their private lives.

On the Fourth of July, the day America dedicates to freedom, I saw a man lying on his back in the gutter, dead drunk. The sun was blistering his face and the bluebottle flies were swarming in and out of his mouth. Every dog in that village had a right to feel more dignified when he saw that spectacle. And down the ages in the gutter of time, there have lain millions of such spectacles, as proof that man has fallen. It is not a mere bit of theology.

We are told today that man has risen from the beast. If so, how is it, then, that so many times we find him so much lower than the animals? That need not be taken on the strength of a statement from a preacher alone. Doctor James

Foster Scott, a physician of repute, says: "By sinking to a depth of infamy far below the level of any examples to be found among the dumb brutes, the unchaste members of the human family have transmitted the filthy venereal diseases through the ages, while the lower animals are exempt."—The Sexual Instinct, page 83.

WHY JESUS CAME

Jesus came in the meridian of time to save men from that fall. He came to tell man how to live; and, much better than that, he came to show men how to live; for the statement is made that "the Word became flesh and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth."

Jesus said, "Blessed are they that do." He did not simply hand us a list of instructions as to what to do, such as you see on factory walls. He came and interpreted the law in terms of life. The law became flesh and blood.

We might ask ourselves the question, Why was it that Jesus chose to come in the flesh? Why did he determine to put the law into flesh and blood? I think it was because he wanted to appeal through every possible avenue that opens to the soul of man. He said, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." And in pursuance of that, then, I think he wished to appeal to both the heart and the brain of man. We are moved often by our intelligence; but we are moved more often by our emotions. Jesus wished to appeal to both. They do not always work together.

TAKING HOLD ON HEARTSTRINGS

If you are a father and have a little boy, you know that it will not do much good to write out a list of the things that you want him to do and the things you do not want him to do, "Thou shalt, and thou shalt not," and give it to him: "Thou shalt go to Sunday school; thou shalt not play marbles for keeps," and so on. That would not reach him at all. There are only two ways in which you can control the conduct of that boy. You may stand over him with a club and compel him to obedience so long as he is afraid of you; or you may get down on his level and be one with him, play his games and talk his language and get right into his heart, so that he will love you so much he will always wish to do the thing that you wish him to do, and then, having obtained that hold on his heart, be ready to draw him to a higher plane.

Jesus said, "I will draw all men unto me." Jesus came down to earth and identified himself with us that he might secure a hold on the hearts of mankind just as the wise father gets hold on the heart of his child. He took hold on the heartstrings of humanity, and every normal man and woman knows that all that is in us that is virtuous and lovely and good and fine is drawn out and rises up powerfully to the appeal of Jesus Christ. That is the reason he was born as a baby. That is the way we all came. That is why he lived as a man. That is the way we all have to live. That is why he died. We all have to die. (At least, that was one reason.) He suffered homesickness and disappointment and the betrayal of friends, and finally died on the cross that he might be one with us and identify himself with us in everything and get hold on our hearts. Thus he has an appeal to every man and woman and child.

HELPING THE BRAIN TO COMPREHEND GOD

Jesus also wanted to get a hold on the brain of every man, on his intelligence. It is very difficult for a man to analyze abstract ideas. That power distinguishes man from the animals. They may think about things objectively; but apparently they have no power to think about things in the abstract. They do not reason about duty and virtue. That is beyond their grasp. Man can reason about the abstract. He can shut his eyes in a dark room and think about things unseen. But it is difficult for him to do so. That is the reason he has recourse to pictures and illustrations and symbols, something to look at with his eyes that will help him to grasp the abstract idea.

The idea of God in the abstract is the hardest abstract idea to comprehend, because that is an infinite idea: infinite power, eternal time, without beginning and without end. This is beyond our reach, beyond our comprehension. Even God himself seems to have experienced some little difficulty in making us understand, because we are told that he said, "Unto what shall I liken these things, that you may understand?"—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

Deity himself, looking down on humanity, pondered, "Unto what may I liken these things that you may understand them?" The trouble was not with God; but he had to reach our limited comprehension.

And Jesus Christ came to help us to understand God. He gives lucidity to the written word. There is not a page in the Bible that is not made clearer by his life—I doubt if there is a page in the Bible we could understand without his life.

I have concluded that the only way man will ever understand God in heaven is by way of Christ on earth. The law became flesh and dwelt among us that we might understand. Does the law command obedience? He was obedience. Does the law command love? He was love. It was only after John the Beloved had lived with him and leaned on his breast that he was able to say, "God is love."

That was the work of Christ. And here is the significant lesson for us. He said, "The works that I do shall ye do also." In other words, we ourselves are to be living epistles in which the gospel is written in characters that men can best understand. We are to interpret the word in terms of life. Under his commission we share in the work of atonement; that is, we may help to bring about an at-one-ment between man and God and man and his fellow man:

"All things are of God, who hath reconciled us unto himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself . . . and hath committed unto us the ministry of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."—2 Corinthians 5: 18, 20.

The Pigeonhole

Joined Hands

The following story, quoted by the Literary Digest from Harvey D. Gibson, president of the Manufacturers' Trust Company of New York, is so good that we wish to pass it on to our readers:

One evening, years ago, in the Province of Alberta, Canada, a happy father and mother went out for a stroll through a near-by wheat field with their little boy. As they wandered through the field, each thought the other held the hand of their child.

All at once they realized that the boy was not with them. They called, but there was no answer. They became more and more disturbed, then terrified, and hunted everywhere with no results.

Finally, the father went back to the village and got a searching party to assist them. Many willing helpers searched all night without avail. After many hours some one finally suggested that they join hands and cover the entire grainfield, and not leave a single square foot uncovered in this last effort.

They joined hands and soon came across the body of the child, and a hush spread over them all, because they had found the child too late. As the group stood there in silence, with bowed heads, some one was heard to whisper, "If we only had joined hands before it was too late!"

This story means something to the church. Now is the time to join hands. It is not yet too late, as it was for those who were seeking the lost child. But we must join hands now if we are to accomplish the good that we should, relieve the church of its indebtedness, and free it to carry on the great work of evangelizing the world, and the building of that ideal of society, Zion.

Empty Thrones

The revolution which followed the Armistice was the first real revolution in Germany since Luther's time. Even after the Armistice the German people did not intend to destroy the monarchy. The Princes, by their conduct, forced the revolution upon them. That so many dynasties should disappear without the least sign of a fight was to the German people a sign of decay.

Today there are more than 100 heirs apparent in the various German States. All they do is complain of their fate instead of becoming eminent in some profession and showing their mettle. That is why this monarchy business is steadily losing customers; that is why all over Germany there are empty thrones, gathering dust like empty boxes in a theater.—Emil Ludwig.

Can you not check off, in imagination, a number of persons who are insufferable, because they never suffered? They would be much pleasanter companions if only pain and sorrow had rubbed off some of their angles, made them less cocksure of things, humbled their pride somewhat. They need the discipline of hard knocks. The choice souls are those who have shaken hands with disaster.—J. Elliot Ross, in Truths to Live By.

Editorial

Why a Sacrifice Period?

A Few of the Necessities That Make It Necessary

As the general officers of the church travel among the branches in the interests of church work, they often encounter this question: "Why these Sacrifice Weeks? Why can't the church get along with the regular tithes and offerings?" For these people we shall give a few reasons below:

First. The church is in need of funds. It must meet its obligations, and continue to meet them, or it faces a disaster from which it would hardly be able to recover. Our spiritual program can not go on unless we show the honesty to meet our financial obligations. Who would have any confidence in our moral and spiritual integrity unless we pay our just debts?

Second. The people have not lived up to the law of tithing and offerings. If they had, no Sacrifice Weeks would have been necessary. These special seasons of sacrifice are necessary, however, to catch up. People who have not paid tithing are reminded of their duty, and thus the church secures funds that should have come to it anyway.

Third. Our sacrifice periods, and the weeks of preparation that precede them are times of education for people in the keeping of the law. It is a chance for them to make up their delinquencies, and square themselves with the law. The sacrifice period is a time for the education of the people.

Fourth. Sacrifice period is a time for presenting the plan, the program, and the work of the church to the people. Sometimes months go by when the people hear inspirational sermons from the ministers, and they are allowed to forget the more important aspects of our church work. The sacrifice period is a time to catch up in setting forth the plan of the church to the people.

Fifth. People need the Sacrifice Period to turn their thoughts from themselves to the needs of others. This is a principle of redemption, to care less for self and more for others. We often forget people who are less fortunate than ourselves. Sacrifice Week teaches us to remember them.

Sixth. Only through the payment of the debt can the church get in a position to render the service to the world that God intended. We could not face the world with our spiritual program with a bankruptcy on our record. We must bear the work of the Lord with clean hands.

Seventh. As a result of the program of economy we have reduced expenses to a minimum. Hence all funds received during the Sacrifice Week will materially place us in a better position, and hasten the day of complete recovery.

Eighth. The people of the world contracted debts in prosperous times, and have to pay back now. Many of them are going bankrupt and losing all in the endeavor to pay. We are in a similar position, but we do believe that we will not go bankrupt, and we do believe that we will pay out. Our experience has been a lesson to us. And the quicker we pay our debt, the less interest we will have to pay on it.

Every dollar counts!

Through sacrifice the debt will be paid!

The Trial of Faith

It seems inevitable that people should look for material blessings as a result of their faith. Perhaps it was because they could not reap physical blessings from their faith that many people of our modern world, with their minds centered on material things, forsook religion. There are too many people who want to barter their penny's worth of faith with the Lord for a dollar's worth of blessings. He doesn't trade that way. People who set a higher value on riches than they do on righteousness are bound to suffer disappointments.

Jesus, in trying to divert the attention of his disciples from material to spiritual things, once declared to them: "The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment." His followers were men not largely endowed with this world's goods, and every living day had confronted them with problems of physical existence. Consequently their thoughts turned naturally to food and clothing even after their conversion. But the Savior made many attempts to turn their minds to spiritual things. It is His task and aim to turn the thoughts of the people of our own generation to spiritual things.

To those who love comforts and possessions more than souls and ideals, it is a great trial of faith to see bad times and adverse circumstances stealing away the things they have enjoyed. And when want brings physical suffering, we see a demonstration of the old prophecy, "The love of many shall wax cold."

But a true faith is not dependent upon external things. If the world robs us, we should love God the more, for He preserves unto us the peace and hope of the future which can not be taken away by mortal agency. Faith is worth little that takes flight with a vanishing balance in the bank book. We need that faith in hard times more than ever.

In the trial of faith that the church is experiencing at the present time, let us prove to ourselves and others that our faith is not a faith of the pocketbook. Let us prove that it is a faith that comes from an understanding of the importance of our spiritual life.

OFFICIAL

Regarding Colonization Project Near Kennett, Missouri

During the last two weeks inquiries have come to our office relative to the publicity given by many newspapers to a colonization project being undertaken by members of our church on land near the town of Kennett, Missouri, which is located in the southeastern part of the state.

Due to the extended publicity given this project the Presiding Bishopric deems it advisable to inform the Saints that the general church is not sponsoring, or in any way assuming any responsibility in connection with it. We do not have sufficient information available to pass either favorably or unfavorably on the merits of the undertaking.

Home-coming

Graceland Once More Thrills Alumni Visitors

Even in these times Graceland College and Lamoni bring back large numbers of their adopted sons and daughters. For ever so many the college and the community is another kind of "home"—a sort of spiritual and intellectual birthplace. No matter where one's body was born, he values most that place where his mind is awakened to the great world of ideas and where he comes into a real consciousness of the identity of his own soul.

One's car slithers sideways getting up the hill after a shower, but the mud is precious—probably the same bit of mud that cluttered collegiate heels twenty years ago. There are new and imposing buildings, but at heart it is the same beloved old place. The same old stores and merchants in town, the same trees—very little is changed. Nobody in Lamoni seems ever to get any older—a few children grow up, but that is all.

Going back to Graceland is like going home—only much better, for there is a large crowd of the old "family" and friends to greet one.

NEWS BRIEFS

President F. M. Smith at Home

President Frederick M. Smith arrived home from the East the morning of October 15, in time to see the Harvest Home Festival. Since that time business at the office has demanded his daily attention, and his plans are to spend the remainder of the year in the Middle West. He spoke to the Saints of Independence Sunday night at the Auditorium.

Fifteen New Families at Atherton

General church and stake officials have just completed a reapportionment of the land areas owned by the church at Atherton, Missouri, with a view to providing settlement opportunities for fifteen new families whose industrial situation calls for the attention of the church. Within the next year or two these officers expect to add as many more new families to the Atherton farm community. Atherton is in Holden Stake.

Missionary O. J. Hawn Passes Away

Elder Orso J. Hawn, who served the church as missionary more than thirty years, died at the Independence Sanitarium early Sunday morning, October 23. At the time of his death he was still under assignment by the general church as missionary to Eastern Michigan District. His health, however, had not permitted him to labor in Michigan, and forced him to relinquish hope of functioning locally at Eldorado, Missouri. He was in the Sanitarium frequently in recent times. Brother Hawn was sixty-three years old, and had been a member of the church since June 26, 1895, when he was baptized at Detroit, Michigan. Besides his family he leaves a host of close friends. He was a stalwart in the faith. The funeral was at the Stone Church, Independence, yesterday afternoon.

Things Are Happening

Scores of ex-Gracelanders remembered that October 21, 22, and 23 was Graceland Home-coming. As many as could went home to their alma mater to participate in the program.

Glaude A. Smith returned to Denver Branch of which he is pastor, early in October after a tour of Eastern Colorado District with Apostle Roy S. Budd. Leaving Denver September 11, these workers visited all branches in the district, holding a special meeting in each place. They found the Saints strong in the faith and interested in the welfare of the church.

Reports from all the branches of Kentucky and Tennessee District show twenty-six baptisms in the last six months.

Recently Elder Harold I. Velt conducted a series of lectures on South American archæology and Book of Mormon evidences in Portland, Branch, Oregon. He aroused much interest and is now visiting nonmembers who heard his talks. Not long ago Brother Velt wrote a series of articles for Zion's Ensign entitled "The Riddle of American Origins."

Lewis Walters, one of the oldest Saints in Ohio's church history and a member of the old Syracuse Branch, is now enrolled on the records of Third Columbus Branch. He was born in 1854, and entered the church in July, 1864.

Sacrifice Week for Australasian Mission

Sacrifice Week for the financial year 1932-1933 was observed throughout the Australasian Mission, commencing on "Children's Day," September 18, and ending on Sunday, September 25, according to the Gospel Standard.

Apostle J. A. Gillen Guest of Honor

Portland, Oregon, young people had Apostle James A. Gillen as their guest of honor at a dinner in the basement of their church, October 14.

Not many days ago Brother Gillen visited his home in Independence, to rest for a short time after a summer of intensive reunion and missionary work in the Northwest.

Women Establish Storehouse

The women's working group of the branch at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, has established a local storehouse with the consent and cooperation of branch officers. Every member of the branch has been requested to donate food, clothing, or household necessities for which he has no further need. The women have pledged themselves to re-condition these things and distribute to worthy poor during the winter.

Sister M. A. McConley Passes in Death

Sister Fern F. McConley, wife of Apostle M. A. McConley, passed away at her home in Los Angeles the morning of October 19, after a long illness. As a missionary wife and helper she was beloved of the church. She was born in Custer County, Nebraska, February 5, 1885, and entered the church by baptism at Denver, Colorado, May 15, 1893. Became the wife of Brother McConley June 5, 1908. She leaves her husband and a young daughter, Alice, as well as many friends in the United States and in the Islands of the Sea. The funeral was held from Los Angeles Central Church, October 21, and her body was taken to Denver for burial. In another column of this issue President Elbert A. Smith writes briefly of Sister McConley's life.

"The Worker's World Is Better With Prohibition," Says Whiting Williams

When Whiting Williams expresses the views and explains the conditions of the working man, he speaks authoritatively. Formerly vice-president of the Cleveland Hydraulic Steel Company, he is now adviser in Industrial Relations to concerns employing hundreds of thousands of workers. Mr. Williams fraternizes with mill and factory hands, miners and steel workers on their own grounds. He steps into a pair of overalls, speaks their language and lives on their wages—or lack of them.

From that level, this employer, social worker, lecturer, student of labor and industrial consultant, looks at Prohibition and says, "We need more of it."

WORKERS ARE DRIER

In spite of its defects, Prohibition has taken the weight of the liquor traffic to a very significant extent off the necks of the hundred-odd million of our fellow citizens whose narrow margin forces them daily to choose between booze and shoes, and has put it onto the white-collared necks of the few-odd million who can afford all the booze and all the shoes they want. Yes, the workers are drier—decidedly.

Now this is by no means to say that the Eighteenth Amendment is popular with the rank and file wage earner. On the contrary, I heard with disheartening frequency from his lips the opinion that:

"What's wrong with this country is Prohibition! If we could start up the breweries and distilleries, then money would start circulatin' again and everything would be jake!"

"Three million!" was usually the number named as thus put back into overalls again—"what with all the beer-makin', bar-tendin', truck-drivin', 'n everything." In one case an ex-saloon-keeper in Gard, Indiana, gave the total sum as "not a soul less than seven million—and I've been in the business long enough to know what I'm talkin' about!"

Just why this opinion is so widespread—just why the dry effort is so unpopular with the worker, can be better discussed later. The point here is that his unfriendly attitude by no means changes what, I submit, is sure to be the finding of anyone who will go carefully amongst them in something more than just one or two localities. I mean the fact that unquestionably the country's workers are today spending vastly less money and absorbing vastly less alcohol than in the pre-Volstead days.

WHAT ABOUT SPEAKEASIES?

"But the speakeasies!" some one is apt to remonstrate. "Aren't they just as bad as the saloon, or worse?"

To that the answer—another finding that greatly surprised me—is as simple as it is unquestionable. It is:

No, the speakeasy is not only nothing like so effective as the old saloon. It is also an entirely different breed o' cats.

Where the speakeasy is today likely to be off the main streets, and at a distance from the factory gates, the old saloon was always as close as could be imagined to all the runways of the worker. Where I have lately found the speakeasy dark and furtive and sloppy, the old saloon was brilliantly lighted, warm and genial. The treating that was the rule in the old days is now looked upon as dangerous.

Most important of all is this: whereas in the old days a worker could count upon both a drink and a welcome wherever he cared to push open the saloon door, he is today almost certain to be refused both, unless he is known to the speakeasy proprietor. Obviously enough, this restriction makes a huge difference in the opportunity of the unemployed man, especially, to obtain liquor during the course of his daily movements about the city in search of work.

These disadvantages indicate, certainly, that the way of the blind-pigger has been nothing like so easy as has been generally supposed. In some districts, indeed, the risks of operating any fixed place of business have become so great that practically all transactions are by "runners"—men who carry on their person only two or three small bottles at a time, returning to their secret cache after passing over a bottle or a drink to the buyer, in, for instance, the unattractive secrecy of some dingy wash-room. Such a scale of operations is of course infinitesimal as compared with that of the open saloon.

GENERALLY IMPROVED CONDITIONS

Beyond question, the absence of the saloon has brought to the worker and his family and to the industrial supervisor and his job a whole group of gains entirely too large to be offset by the worker's homebrew, speakeasy or bootlegger. Properly enough, the closed saloon is not given entire credit for all the various improvements visible since 1919 in the field of the worker's well being. Shorter work-days, more machinery, and the resultant increased requirements of skill, fivvers, movies, radios, more intelligent and social-minded captains of industry and labor leaders—all these are to be assigned their share along with Prohibition for what is undoubtedly a marked improvement along practically the entire industrial front.—From the Allied News, September, 1932.

Men have mechanized the world and subdued it to their will. Today the machines that have been their servants are becoming their tyrannical masters, and they are faced with problems for which mechanics and chemistry furnish no answer. In their souls they are finding a need and a hunger which their fathers satisfied in the search for God.

Science and the Modern Problems

Man's Unending Quest Goes On

By John W. Rushton

At the British Association of Science which held its one hundred and first annual meeting at York, England, recently, the president, Sir Alfred Ewing, gave expression to some searching thoughts with reference to humanity and the present problems which are challenging our intelligence and moral stamina.

During the century which is past this authoritative body has seen and registered many changes, and the voice of many great leaders in philosophy and science has been heard in varying moods. Sometime strident with the pride of achievement, sometimes contemptuous of religion and the church, but always there has been a devoted allegiance to truth which has characterized this great institution and its representatives. The remarkable feature in President Ewing's address is the chastened spirit in which he reminds his hearers that "the command of Nature has been put into the hands of man before he knows how to command himself."

Some few years ago an Anglican bishop suggested perhaps facetiously, that it might be well for science to take a holiday for about ten years and give mankind a chance to catch up morally with progress. Of course the whole world laughed at this idea. Perhaps the bishop intended the world should laugh. But increasingly it is made clear that the charge which Alfred Russel Wallace brought against his day and found in his posthumous work, is justified: He said that he doubted very much if mankind was any better now than they were in the days of the Egyptians of Rameses II. We are clever, but we are not morally good, was his complaint then, and he was in his ninety-second year.

It seems to be agreed that one of the most vital matters demanding attention is that of equitable distribution. And that is a matter of morality. In the competitive world, the man with strength to claim what he wanted, took it and his success was applauded and justified his methods. Today we have the tragic spectacle of men and nations who have known the apotheosis of such success in the grip of a terror they could not face. All their possessions have not been able to save them from the Nemesis of conscience. And with a plethora of wealth, power and greatness such as was never known before, leaders are panic-stricken, humanity in tragic want, and our future civilization in grave danger.

If possessions and power could save us, then humanity was never so secure. But in the midst of material splendor the Stygian blackness of despair grips all alike. It is not merely a question of adjusting things, or of regulating the hours of toil, or of giving all an equal share in the produce of labor, but how to take care of and use advantageously the leisure time and the margin of possessions which each indisputably can claim as his own. This is a matter of intellectual and moral concern. In the light of what is the present experience, it is not too much to say that with increased leisure of time and possessions, the results without an improved moral and intellectual sensibility, would be worse than before. The selfish claim while stated in old-fashioned terminology, is just as literal today as then—"Have I not a right to do as I please with my own?" This claim to the right to enjoy position and power without a recognition of moral responsibility underlies all the world's troubles today. And this is the soul of what we call "Stewardship." Apart from all attempts to mechanicalize this theory of mutuality in human relationships, we must first get the soul of it, the essential meaning of it into the heart and mind of man. This surely is the first thing that must have our first attention.

With the background of the emphasis put upon this teaching by the church in recent years we can perhaps find in these remarks of Sir Alfred Ewing a deep meaning.

Alarm at the "sweeping pageant of discovery and invention" was expressed by Sir Alfred Ewing in his presidential address to the British Association at York yesterday.

"In many cases," he said, "unemployment is thrust upon man—and unemployment which is more saddening than any drudgery.

"And the world finds itself glutted with competitive commodities produced in quantities too great to be absorbed.

"The command of Nature has been put into man's hands before he knows how to command himself."

"In the present-day thinkers' attitude towards what is called mechanical progress we are conscious of a changed spirit," said Sir Alfred.

"Admiration is tempered by criticism; complacency has given way to doubt; doubt is passing into alarm.

"There is a sense of perplexity and frustration as in one who has gone a long way and finds he has taken the wrong turning.

"To go back is impossible; how will he proceed? Where will he find himself if he follows this path or that?

"An old exponent of applied mechanics may be forgiven if he expresses something of the disillusion with which, now standing aside, he watches the sweeping pageant of discovery and invention in which he used to take unbounded delight.

"MOMENTUM AWES US"

"It is impossible not to ask: Whither does this tremendous procession tend? What after all is its goal? What is its probable influence on the future of the human race?

"The pageant itself is a modern affair. A century ago it had barely taken form and had acquired none of the momentum which rather awes us today.

"The industrial revolution was of British origin; for a time our island remained the factory of the world.

"But soon, as was inevitable, the change of habit spread and now every country, even China is become more or less mechanized.

"The cornucopia of the engineer has been shaken all over the earth, scattering everywhere an endowment of previously unpossessed and unimagined capacities and powers.

"But we are acutely aware that the engineer's gifts have been and may be grievously abused.

MAN NOT READY

"In some there is potential tragedy as well as present burden. Man was ethically unprepared for so great a bounty.

"In the slow evolution of morals he is still unfit for the tremendous responsibility it entails.

"The command of Nature has been put into his hands before he knows how to command himself.

"Geologists tell us that in the story of evolution they can trace records of extinct species which have perished through the very amplitude and efficiency of their personal apparatus for attack and defence."

This carries a lesson for the consideration of Geneva.

"More and more does mechanical effort take the place of human effort, not only in manufactures, but in all our tasks, even in the primitive task of tilling the ground.

MIXED BLESSING

"So man finds that while he is enriched with a multitude of possessions and possibilities beyond his dreams, he is in great measure deprived of one inestimable blessing, the necessity of toil."

"We invent the machinery of mass production and, for the sake of cheapening the unit, we develop the output on a gigantic scale.

"Almost automatically the machine delivers a stream of articles in the creation of which the workman has taken little part.

"He has lost the joy of craftsmanship, the old satisfaction in something accomplished through the conscientious exercise of care and skill.

"In many cases unemployment is thrust upon him, an unemployment which is more saddening than any drudgery.

"And the world finds itself glutted with competitive commodities produced in a quantity too great to be absorbed although every nation strives to secure at least a home market by erecting tariff walls.

FAIR SHARE FOR ALL

"Where shall we look for the remedy? I can not tell.

"Some may envisage a distant Utopia in which there will be a perfect adjustment of labour and the fruits of labour, a fair spreading of employment and of wages and of all the commodities that machines produce.

"Even so, the question will remain—how is man to spend the leisure which he has won by handing over nearly all his burden to an untiring mechanical slave?

"Dare he hope for such spiritual betterment as will qualify him to use it well? God grant that he may strive for that and attain it. It is only by seeking that he shall find.

"I can not think that man is destined to atrophy and cease through cultivating what after all is one of his most God-like faculties, the creative ingenuity of invention."

ENERGY LOCKED AWAY

Earlier in his speech, Sir Alfred reviewed the great atomic events of the year—the discovery of the neutron by Doctor Chadwick and the splitting of the atom by laboratory generated forces by Cockroft and Walton.

"The atom," he said, "however seemingly inert, is mighty in being, a magazine of energy which for the most part it locks safely away.

"This is fortunate, for if the secret were discovered of letting loose the atomic store, we should invite dissolution at the hands of any fool or knave."

Travelling back on the road which leads from the first meeting of the association in York 101 years ago, he spoke of the great discoveries which had been announced at the association's meetings.

These included Sir Oliver Lodge's demonstration of the "primitive form of wireless telegraph based on the experiments of Hertz, a precursor of the devices brought into use a little later through the practical skill and indefatigable enterprise of Marconi." That was in 1894.

"My own recollection," he said, "covers many surprises that have become common-places today: the dynamo, the electric motor, the transformer, the rectifier, the storage battery, the incandescent lamp, the phonograph, the telephone, the internal combustion engine.

"Also aircraft, the steam turbine, the special steels and alloys which the metallurgist invents for every particular need, wireless telegraphy, the thermionic valve as amplifier, as receiver, and as generator of electric waves.

"To that last we owe the miracle of broadcasting.

"Who a generation ago would have imagined that a few yards of wire outside a window and a magic box on the sill should conjure out of space the strains of Bach and Beethoven, the pessimism natural to those who forecast the weather and the optimism of orators who have newly dined?

"I do not know of any product of engineering more efficient than that magic box.

"Go where you will, to the ocean or the wilderness of the Pole, you can not escape from that vast company of attendance. Is there any fairy tale so strange as that reality?

"In all the wizardry of science there is nothing more wonderful than this."

Perhaps there are those who remember Hutchinson's famous novel written after the great war. They will remember with sympathy the perplexities and struggles of Mark Sabre as he sought to know what was right and then to do that right at all costs. We shall not forget the terrible losses he had to endure because he tried only to very simply follow the ethic of Christianity. The physical torture and the mental anguish which were his as he struggled towards that light which he was sure must come to all men if the world was to be saved, was terrible indeed. We take the time to quote some of his soliloquy.

The Foundations of Our Faith

VI.—The Gospel Works. It Is Practical.

By Elbert A. Smith

Luke mentions "the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." What did He have the day he purchased it? Judged by surface indications He had made a bad bargain. The treasurer of His organization had sold Him out for a handful of silver. The leading apostle had denied Him profanely. All the other frightened and poverty-ridden and bedraggled crew "followed Him afar off." But the Lord knew the potentialities of his purchase. He knew what the gospel would do for those men and women. Today things look different—looking back. Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, Peter, Jude, James, Paul—these names go down the ages. The gospel did the work in them that it was intended to do.

How about today? Some people conclude that the Lord has made a bad buy if he gave any of his priceless blood for the church of today. They do not look below the surface. They weigh the brethren in their own scales and not in the Lord's scales. The Lord knows the transforming power of his gospel.

At a district conference during prayer service I heard an elderly man testify: "When the gospel came to me it showed me a new way to live." That was all he said—it was enough. The conviction that the gospel actually does develop a changed life is strengthened by observation and experience and lies close to the foundations of our faith. The gospel is not merely a pretty theory—it actually works. When applied to life with its hard problems it is found to be practical.

AN EXPERIMENT

That is the thesis that Alma lays down in his remarkable sixteenth chapter. He challenges his hearers to an "experiment." The world is fond of experiments, here is one worth while. He compares the word to a seed. This is the line of his argument. "If we plant a seed in the ground and it grows, we know it is a good seed"—that is, it is vital. (Bishop Joseph Roberts used to argue that men are like corn planted in the ground, "some grow, some merely swell up.") The vital seed grows. Then when the fruit is tasted and found "to be delicious" we further know that the seed was good.

So Alma urges those who can no more than "have a desire to believe," those who say, "I wish I could believe," to make an "experiment" and encourage that desire; to receive the word into their lives and live by it. Presently the desire to believe gives place to faith, and by and by faith gives way to knowledge. The knowledge is based on this fact: that the word of life promotes growth: "It beginneth to enlarge my soul; yea, it beginneth to enlighten my understanding; and it beginneth to be delicious to me." (Book of Alma 16: 154.)

There is the final, incontrovertible evidence of the divinity of the work.

CULTIVATING DOUBT

The greatest miracle to "follow the believers," is a changed and a bigger and better character. Unfortunately too many reverse Alma's experiment. Instead of encouraging the desire to believe they encourage the tendency to disbelieve. They are negative in outlook. They think and talk about the things that they do not believe and thus naturally and constantly enlarge the field of their atheism. Most things respond to cultivation; and doubt, like weeds, responds luxuriously if it is cultivated instead of being rooted out. But the fruit of it is never delicious and it never enlarges the human soul.

ALMA'S EXPERIMENT WORKS

Let any man make Alma's experiment faithfully even for a period of one year and he will find himself a bigger and better man, and so can say, "I know it is true."

Let a man think and talk affirmatively. If there be no more than one or two great truths that he believes strongly enough to live by, let him cultivate his belief in them; they are the beginning of his foundation. Let him search for other truths that he can affirm, and not be constantly seeking things to doubt and deny. Thus shall faith and knowledge grow and his foundation of truth be enlarged and strengthened. If he shall take into his life the true principles of life and conduct found in the gospel he will find that they actually work.

FROM THE HEART OUT

Most social reformers and political agitators seek to reform man from the outside. They would change institutions and governments and forms. That is the program of Communism. But after the government is overthrown and the social order torn apart and a new system set up there are the same men to be reckoned with that perverted the old order.

A Great Church Drama of 94 Years Ago

The Camp of the Seventies Comes to Missouri

By Leta B. Moriarty

At high noon July 6, 1838, Kirtland Temple, the pride and joy of the Saints of Latter Days, looked down upon a strange scene. Where half an hour before the tents of the camp of the seventies had stood in a hollow square and horses and oxen had browsed about at wagons' ends and little children had been at play, everything was now astir. Tents were being struck and stowed away in the cumbersome ox carts or white-covered wagons. Teams were being hitched to carriages, prairie schooners, and all other vehicles, camp goods packed hastily away, families gathered about for a word of prayer. One by one the wagons swung out over the Ohio hills, forming a long line of cross-country caravan. Men rode horseback driving the slow plodding cattle. The order had come: "Break Camp! Westward ho!" Thus began one of the most interesting dramas of the early church—the camp of the seventies was moving toward Missouri.

Five hundred and fifteen souls composed the company that left Kirtland on that warm, summer day. With them they took twenty-seven tents, fifty-nine wagons, ninety-seven horses, and almost a hundred head of cattle. But that was not all they took—oh, no. There were faith, courage, and zeal in the hearts of that company as they began their journey to the Promised Land of Missouri.

Exactly four months before when the question of how the Seventies of the church at Kirtland were to go to Missouri began to trouble them, the Seventies had assembled in the Lord's house (the Temple), to discuss the best means of taking their quorum westward, and to pray over the matter. It was March 6, and four days later these faithful ones were told by vision and prophecy that they should go up in a camp, "pitching their tents by the way." Three days later they adopted a constitution and laws to govern them on their journey, and these were signed by one hundred and seventy-five of the brethren. Others were given the privilege of making the journey with this company if they were willing to abide by the constitution.

Then the camp was organized. Elders James Foster, Zerah Pulsipher, Joseph Young, Henry Heriman, Josiah Butterfield, Benjamin Wilber, and Elias Smith were commissioners to lead the camp, and the people were divided into companies of ten with a captain over each company. Elias Smith was chosen clerk and historian, and Jonathan H. Hale was treasurer.

On the first day, or rather the first half day, the camp traveled to Chester, seven miles, and pitched their tents in a hollow square formed by their wagons, and that night men, women, and children sat down to eat of simple fare with thanksgiving in their hearts that their journey was begun, and a prayer to their heavenly Father for guidance, protection, and help in the days to come.

Hardships were many. The Saints were poor, and many began the trip without enough expense money to take them the five hundred miles to Missouri. They were traveling on faith. It rained, and often they were forced to camp in damp places, and sickness resulted. In the camp were old people and tiny babies. Some forgot their covenant to live according to the camp constitution, and were lazy and unfaithful.

Of these conditions history tells us: "Sunday, July 8. There was some sickness in the camp. They held a public meeting, and the leaders informed them that the destroyer was in their midst, and some would fall victims unless they adhered strictly to the covenant they had made, laid aside all covetousness, and lived by every word that proceeded out of the mouth of the Lord. They were threatened this night with tar and feathers from the mob of the place, and were obliged to keep a close watch to keep their horses from being stolen by the mob, who threw a club and hit Elder Tyler on the breast."

But the next day undaunted, they continued their march. Sometimes they were threatened with arrest, severe persecution, and often with ridicule, but they went forward assured that the Lord was with them.

On July 24, being in need of means to pay their way, we are told, the company remained in camp. The women did the washing, and the men cleared seven acres of land and reaped and bound three acres of wheat, for which they were paid nineteen dollars.

August 12, was Sunday and the Seventies' Camp had fallen in with another camp from Canada, under the charge of John E. Page. These held services together, Elder Page addressing them.

On through the weary, warm days of summer the trek continued. It was on September 9, when the camp had reached a place near the western line of Edgar County, Illinois, that, because money was getting scarce, it was agreed some should stop and seek employment for the winter. The Seventies, however, it was decided, should go on, locate their families in Missouri, and prepare themselves to go out and preach the gospel. Here nine or ten families were left behind.

The camp knew what it was to be hungry. Sometimes they were short of food for man and beast. Once for several days, during which time they covered one hundred miles of their trip, their living consisted of boiled corn and shaving pudding made of new corn ears shaved upon a jointer or fore plane. This they ate with milk, butter, or sweetening, or with an occasional mixture of pork, flour, potatoes, pumpkins, and melons. The cobs and remaining corn were given to the horses so that nothing was lost.

The camp crossed the Mississippi River September 20, at the town of Louisiana. It was a much smaller camp that arrived in Missouri than left Kirtland, there being about two hundred and fifty who crossed the river. For the great loss in number of travelers history accounts thus: "They have been scattered to the four winds; and it is because of selfishness, covetousness, murmurings, and complainings, and not having fulfilled their covenants that they have been thus scattered."

Six days after crossing the Mississippi because of rumors of military opposition and many false and threatening stories concerning the "Mormons," the camp held council. Some thought it would be wise to break up the camp, allowing a family or two at a time to drift into Far West. They urged that it would arouse much opposition and even violence if the camp were to arrive collectively. Nevertheless, all were willing to follow the instructions and will of the Lord. And then their prayers and consultation were divinely answered. A man directly from Far West and on his way East, left his carriage and entered the camp, pitched a good distance of the road. He assured the Saints that there was no trouble at Far West and Adam-ondi-ahman, and that they might go forward without encountering danger. Further, he told them that the one hundred and ten volunteers gathered to resist the "Mormons," had been discharged at Keytsville. After this stranger's visit, the camp voted to proceed together on their journey.

Opportunity Is Knocking

By Mrs. S. C. Bethel

There is an old saying that opportunity knocks but once at a man's door. I heartily disagree with that idea.

The dawn of each new day presents us with twenty-four golden hours of opportunity. No one is slighted. Here is one time when all are equal. Each man receives his full quota. One man receives no more and no less than his neighbor. Does every man make the most of this opportunity? What do you do with this priceless treasure?

"We have got to recognize that idleness is the unforgivable sin which wherever it is found breeds rot and decay."

The future is before us. We can not hope to realize our desires for the future unless we make the best possible use of today. Today is the time to act. The only time we can be sure of is right now.

Start out in the morning with the firm resolve that you are going to make good use of every moment. Seek your heavenly Father at the beginning of each new day, and ask for guidance and strength. Be enthusiastic about your work. Put forth special effort to do your very best. Seek to be contented. Study diligently and read those things that are uplifting and worthwhile. Make the most of every fleeting moment. Be an optimist.

Optimism is constructive—it builds up—it helps us to benefit by our mistakes. It helps us to profit by them, by encouraging us to make right the wrongs of yesterday. This can not be done in the future. It must be done today. "Never put off till tomorrow what can be done today." Procrastination is the thief of time.

This especially holds good for every individual in the church. We should not look into the past and brood over our own mistakes, or try to lay the blame of the present situation on any one person or group of persons, or excuse our own misdemeanor by looking for faults in others, and at the same time hope to progress. We dare not feel that the church has been a failure.

We must take an inventory of ourselves and then proceed to make the best possible use of our opportunities. If we have failed to give of our ability in service, if we have neglected to keep the laws and commandments of our heavenly Father, especially the financial law, today is the time to begin anew.

God's word will not return unto him void. His promises are sure. Our Lord has said, "My work will go on. Zion will be redeemed."

Today is our opportunity. Let us push forward. Keep going forward—if it is only an inch—but go forward.

Prayer and Testimony

Spiritual Transformation

By G. H. Wixom

I am pleased to report that the work is moving forward in this part of the great vineyard. After attending an inspiring and uplifting reunion held at Hearne, Texas, July 8 to 17, which was well attended, and much appreciated by all, I began at once a series at Dallas, Texas, where I was given a real welcome and the hearty support of the workers of that branch. I closed my services there July 31, and began a series of open air services, in Lion's Park, at Breckenridge, Texas. August 2, where I continued till August 21.

The park was well lighted and we had good seats and enough to accommodate the fine crowd that attended. We have a membership of twenty now at Breckenridge, and a Sunday school of forty members. This group of workers is anxious to work in harmony with the program of the church, and in order to carry out this program, I organized them into a church school. Sister C. B. Ritchie was elected director, and Olive Andes, was elected secretary. They meet for class work at 2.30 p. m. on Sunday at the home of Sister Ritchie. At 7.30 p. m. they meet for a short study hour and then the rest of the time is given to entertainment. All are given an opportunity to take part on the program.

Upon the invitation of the Reverend Ribble of the Church of Christ, I gave a two week's series in his church at South Bend, Texas, twenty-five miles northeast of Breckenridge. We had good attendance and interest at this place and, members of the Methodist, Baptist, and Church of Christ attended.

At the close of this series, the minister announced that he did not believe as I did, and that he would follow with a series setting forth his views on "The Message of Jesus to This Age."

I left for Dallas where I was to begin another series. After I had gone, Mr. Ribble announced he would speak on Joseph Smith and "the Mormon fraud." There was a large crowd present to hear this lecture. The speaker gave the usual "re-hash" of the many exploded stories of the early life of Joseph Smith and of his deluded followers.

At the close of this lecture, Sister Ritchie being the only member of our church present, arose and asked the privilege of speaking on this question. She was granted the privilege of the floor, and in a few well chosen words she proved to the audience that Mr. Ribble was decidedly unfair in his attack and had resorted to slander and heresy evidence to misrepresent an innocent people. She asked the privilege of producing her evidence in the following service, which was granted.

Sister Ritchie had to drive fifty miles the next day to secure the books she wanted, some she had loaned, and after a careful study, and, having marked the pages she wanted to use in rebuttal, she asked her husband to read them for her. (Mr. Ritchie is a member of the Methodist Church.) He consented to do so and was on hand at the next service to take the floor in defense of Joseph Smith and his work in restoring the gospel. After the reading had continued for a few minutes, Mr. Ribble said that he had heard all he cared to hear. Mr. Ritchie then asked if anyone in the audience objected to his reading further on this subject, and when no one objected he was permitted to read on.

It was considered by all that Sister Ritchie had won her case, and Mr. Ribble decided to take up other subjects that he knew more about, and this ended his attempt to expose what he called "the fraud," or the "Mormon delusion."

While holding services in Dallas, I was called to Breckenridge by wire, to speak at the funeral of Sister Lillie Miller, who passed to her reward, September 7. The minister of the First Christian Church of Breckenridge came to me and offered to give us the use of his large church which has a seating capacity of 1,700, and also said that he would have some one play the pipe organ for us and he would also furnish a choir of thirty voices to sing. After talking this over with the family, it was decided to accept this kind invitation.

Sister Miller was well known and had many friends, and it was very fitting that she be buried from this large church, of which many of her friends are members.

Brother Vern and Sister Lillie Miller had not been in the church long, but they were fully converted to the restored gospel, and before Sister Miller passed away, she urged her husband to be faithful to the covenant he had made when he was baptized last May. Her favorite song was "The Angel's Message," and before she passed out of this life she requested that the Saints sing this song again to her, and she requested me that I would see that the song was sung wherever I held a series of meetings if I could possibly do so. She fell asleep with the full assurance of a glorious resurrection when the Master returns to reward all those who have obeyed the gospel and put their faith and trust in him.

I returned to Dallas September 10, to take up the work where I had left off, and during this series I was called to speak at the funeral of Sister Grace (Handcock) Campbell, who passed from this life September 10, at her home north of Dallas. She leaves her husband, J. M. Campbell; her father, Elder J. W. Handcock; four brothers: Dan, Fred, Hubert, and Harold, of Thayer, Missouri, and six small children. The funeral service was held from the grave. The mixed choir of the Methodist and Baptist Churches, sang two beautiful songs.

I closed my services in Dallas September 18, and came on to Houston where I began a series at the Saints' church September 22, and where the pastor, Elder C. W. Tischer, gave me the hearty welcome, the Saints of the south know how to give.

I will be here over Sunday, October 2, when I plan to go on to San Antonio, to attend the district conference which will convene at the South Church in San Antonio, October 9. Apostle R. S. Budd is expected to be present at this conference.

In my effort to present our message to the people everywhere I have traveled, since the close of the late General Conference, I have been encouraged to note an awakening on the part of the people. They are more anxious to hear our message than ever before. There is an uneasiness among them and a feeling of alarm, Many are wondering what it is all about.

In dealing with this subject, Ex-President Calvin Coolidge said: "We do not need more national development; we need more spiritual development. We do not need more intellectual power; we need more spiritual power. We do not need more knowledge; we need more character. We do not need more government; we need more culture. We do not need more law; we need more religion."

One writer expressed the following prayer, as he looked out over this nation, and witnessed its great resources, and beheld its wickedness, and the greed of men. He could hear the cry of the poor and needy on every hand, living in the midst of overwhelming abundance of God's blessings to this nation.

"God send us men with hearts ablaze,
All truth to love, all wrong to hate;
These are the patriots nations need,
These are the bulwarks of the State."

And Josiah G. Holland is heard to say:

"God give us men!
A time like this demands strong minds,
Great hearts, true faith, and ready hands;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog,
In public duty and in private thinking;
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions, and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo!
Freedom weeps, Wrong rules the land, and waiting justice sleeps."

The world needs the restored gospel, and it needs it right now. We hear the Macedonian cry all over the world: "Come over into Macedonia and help us." The call comes today for volunteers like the gifted Isaiah of long ago. While he was bowed in prayer in the Temple of the Lord, and goaded by his great need, he turned his eyes away from the throne that had been occupied by the fallen Uzziah, to the throne of heaven that is for ever occupied by the King Eternal. It was then he saw the Lord, high and lifted up. The Lord was there all the time, but Isaiah had to have his heart broken before he would look.

Such is the experience of many today; they refuse to look. The trouble with many is they are so well satisfied with the secondary, with the passing, with the things of a day, that they do not seek him. Too often we require a bit of heart break to make us turn our eyes to our very present Savior. Thus it was in the year that our baby died: in the year that you lost your wealth; in the year that your health was shattered: in the year that you turned from a new made grave. It was then that you saw the Lord. Isaiah's transformation was the result of his vision of the Lord Jesus Christ. We can not account for Isaiah apart from his vision. There were many reasons against this gifted young man's ever becoming a prophet of the Lord. One great hindrance was the fact that Isaiah was a man of high social position. He was at home in king's palaces. It was true then as it is true now, that "not many mighty, not many noble are called." God longs for the rich and the privileged, just as much as he does the poor and the unprivileged; but how rare it is to find one of these who is willing to break from the golden fetters that bind him, to become a free man in the service of God! Isaiah was one of those few. He refused to allow either his wealth or his position to stand in the way of his volunteering for the service of the King. When Isaiah saw this vision of the Lord, it gave him a sense of sin. "I saw the Lord," we hear him say: "Then said I, who is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts." A sense of God always brings a sense of sin. Where there is no sense of sin there is no sense of God. This vision led Isaiah to confess his sin and to pour out his confession into the ear of Christ. He had no good word to say for himself. He offered no excuses. He laid no claim to anything of moral worth, but confessed his spiritual bankruptcy.

As a result of this vision, Isaiah found and accepted his task. To this man, conscious of the forgiving love of God, there came a call to service. "And I heard the voice of the Lord saying: Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" To this appeal Isaiah did not turn a deaf ear. His heroic response must thrill every soul like a trumpet call to battle: "Then, said I, here am I, send me." He made the matter personal. Unreservedly he put himself into the hands of the Lord. And how mightily did the Lord use him!

God is calling. This same Christ is making the same appeal to us that he made to Isaiah. He is calling to his friends, calling through their love to him, through their sense of gratitude, through the needs of a shattered and broken-down world: "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" We must make Isaiah's manly response, or the world can not be saved. May the Lord help all those who have heard and obeyed this glorious gospel, restored in our day, to be valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord, faithful to the end.

Requests for Prayer

Ella Sherman, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, asks prayers in behalf of Mrs. Marcella Marsh, of Walker, South Dakota, who is in dangerous condition from an internal cancer, and who has a family of six small children and a sister dependent upon her. It is realized that human skill can not save her, and the only hope now remains in the Great Healer. Because she is needed so badly the people are specially urged to pray for her.

W. A. Mariner, of North Topeka, Kansas, route 4, writes that he has fallen and broken his leg between the hip and knee, and now is confined to the house. He asks that the Saints will pray for him that he may have spiritual strength to bear his trials, and for physical strength to make a complete recovery. May we suggest that some might cheer the tedious hours of his confinement by writing to him.

Elder Benjamin F. Warner, pastor of the Fayette City, Pennsylvania, Branch has been suffering from arthritis during the whole of this past year. In June his affliction became so bad that he had to cease work entirely, he has been treated by three or four doctors but has received no relief. This week he was put to bed with a badly weakened heart. He desires to be remembered by the Saints in prayer and requests that notice be printed in the Herald to this effect.

Very sincerely,

T. M. CARR.

PUNXSUTAWNEY, PENNSYLVANIA.

Among the experiences which Brother O. K. Manning, of Brewton, Alabama, Route 4, tells as proof of God's love, mercy and watchcare, is the healing of his little son some years ago of a severe case of malaria. The child fell ill one fall when crops had brought little to the farmers of that region, and the family could ill afford a big doctor bill. In a few short days after the suffering child had reached the climax of his illness, God saw fit to answer the prayers of the father, and heal the little boy. This experience has served to remind Brother Manning through the years of his debt to God. He acknowledges his weaknesses but expresses the hope that he shall henceforth serve the Lord with faith, devotion, and love.

QUESTION TIME

Is not the right name of the church given in scripture as the "Church of God"?

The New Testament does use the term, "church of God," a number of times, but not in a formal way as indicating the name of the church. It should be remembered that the Greek word translated "church" means the called-out ones. In the places referred to, therefore, it would be like saying: the called-out ones of God. Christ came from God to call out from sin and worldliness those who would serve God, hence those heeding this call would be thus referred to quite naturally by the apostles who wrote the record. I do not recall any text in the Scriptures that attempts to state the name of the church formally, but that name is rather indicated by certain facts bearing upon the nature of Christ's mission.

It was Christ himself who said, "I will build my church." In Hebrews (12: 23) it is called the church of the "Firstborn," which, of course, is Christ. Paul refers to the churches as the "churches of Christ," and repeatedly he declares that Christ is the "head of the church," and that the church is Christ's "body." In another place Paul says:

"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood."—Acts 20: 28.

Here it states that God "hath purchased" the church with his own blood, but this blood was the blood of Christ, and Paul refers to Christ (1 Timothy 3: 16) as God "manifest in the flesh." In Ephesians (5: 30-32) he refers to the church as the wife of Christ, and in 2 Corinthians (11: 2) he refers to Christ as the "husband" of the church or body. From these and other texts it becomes evident that the church on earth should take the name of Christ as the one who is its builder and to whom it belongs (Mark 9: 41).

Please present some of the predictions of scripture on the apostasy.

The term apostasy is used to mean an abandonment or departure from the faith. The word is not used in the King James version, though the Greek equivalent is found in one text, which reads:

"Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition."—2 Thessalonians 2: 3.

The words "falling away" are derived from the Greek word apostasia, which is the same in meaning as the English word apostasy, and is so translated in the Weymouth Version and the Emphatic Diaglott. In the Douay version it is translated "revolt," and in the Moffatt version it is rendered "rebellion." This seems to contain the most definite statement in regard to the apostasy, so far as the term itself is concerned. But several other passages are of similar import, though using different phrases to express the meaning. Jesus himself warned the people, "Yet a little while is the light with you." He also warned them that "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force" (Matthew 11: 12).

Paul and others referred to the same thought on several occasions, stating to Timothy that the time would come when they would not endure sound doctrine, and that evil men and seducers would wax "worse and worse." In Revelation (2: 4, 14, 20; 3: 1, 17) the degenerate state of the churches is described and warnings of rejection are repeated. Peter refers to the "heresies" that would be brought in by false teachers (2 Peter 2: 1), and Paul states that they would have a form of Godliness" (2 Timothy 3: 5) but deny the power thereof.

Does any text of Scripture indicate that baptism is a saving ordinance?

Several texts so indicate, such as John 3: 5, which declares that without it one can not enter the kingdom, and 1 Peter 3: 21, which states that "baptism doth also now save us." Jesus also said, "he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved."

But nowhere does the record tell us that baptism alone, regardless of any other thing, will save any person. Baptism is a saving ordinance in the sense that it is an act of obedience, faith, and desire to do God's will. We are also told that we are saved by hope (Romans 8: 24), by grace (Ephesians 2: 5), by the name of Christ (Acts 4: 12), by the gospel (1 Corinthians 15: 1, 2), and by obedience (Hebrews 5: 9). To love and serve God are the essentials of salvations, and this is impossible unless we heed his commands.

Short Talks for Home Missionaries

"Have Faith in God"

By LEONARD LEA

"And Jesus answering said unto them, Have faith in God."

This simple imperative is the fundamental of all Christian philosophy; it is the very beginning and foundation of our spiritual life.

It is too bad that our age is, for the most part, without a real faith. The world is filled with men who are too wise for it. They are so obsessed with the pursuit of knowledge that they have no time to perceive the tremendous importance of faith. They are so hedged about with their millions of unimportant little facts that they never have a chance to see the importance of the great truths.

It was easy for the skeptics to teach the world to abandon its faith in God. But they did not see the far-reaching consequences of their teaching. We know now that a world which lost its faith in God very soon lost its faith in man. Not only that, but it lost faith in its laws, its governments, its institutions, and finally in itself. There has been almost no limit to this decadence of faith. There is now hardly any faith left in anything. No one can predict at this date where this disintegration of the spiritual fibre of the world will stop.

Faith is as necessary to the higher spiritual life of man as air is to the body. It is a strange and incapable fact that we must believe the best in order to achieve our best. Man defies the laws of gravity and lifts himself as if by some invisible boot straps from the carnality of his relation with the physical world to the high spiritual realms of kinship with God. It is only when a man believes that he is a son of God that he can act as if he actually were. It is only when he is dominated by the belief that he is an immortal soul that he can govern his life with the disinterestedness, impartiality, and justice which is prompted by his consciousness that his life on this earth is but one phase of an endless destiny.

A PRACTICAL CONSIDERATION

We have been taught by the world to be practical. We have learned the lesson of pragmatism, which tells us, "That is true which works." The whole world has come to accept the challenge of our native Missouri, "You've got to show me!"

Let us make ready for the demonstration. We assert that there is a God, and that He is good; we assert that we have faith that He who formed the world had a great purpose in doing so, and that He is mindful of the lives and works of men. And we assert further that those who try to reconcile themselves with God and adjust themselves to His purposes will be the happiest and most fortunate in the end, and that He will bless them through the operation of natural laws which are both within and beyond the comprehension of our finite minds.

And a very skeptical world says to the earnest Christian believer, "You've got to show me!"

Very well, then, take this demonstration for what it is worth. The so-called Christian nations, no matter how lightly and insufficiently they have espoused the principles and teachings of the gospel of Jesus, are the leaders of the modern world. They are the standard bearers of civilization. They have been blessed above the other nations of earth. No matter how much they may complain of poverty and disease, of war and trouble, their lot is far better than that of other races. As yet their blessings are unequally distributed, but the poorest of people among the so-called Christian nations are at least as well off as the best of the non-Christian nations. You may call this a coincidence if you wish; you may seek to explain it by other causes. And yet if you think about it you can not escape the conviction that the Christian faith has had its beneficent effect on even the least worthy of its adherents. Let the skeptic claim, if he will, that the Christian faith is not justified in the life of the nations.

WINNERS AND LOSERS

Or you may consider individuals if you wish. The happiest lives and the most serene, the most radiant in commendable virtue, the most peacefully confident, and the most expressive of victorious personality, are those that are dominated by faith. The man of faith lives by a great affirmation, the skeptic is only a symbolic negative. The man of faith has something for which to live; the skeptic has nothing.

If the man of faith is right he gains everything. If he is wrong, his is a generous mistake committed in a noble cause. If the skeptic is wrong he has sacrificed to inactivity some of the finest opportunities of his life, and if he is right, the correctness of his guess can be worth nothing to him in a state of extinction. The man of faith has everything to gain, and the skeptic has everything to lose.

I PREFER FAITH

I have tried faith and I have tried doubt, and I have tested the both of them from every conceivable angle, many times over. A thoughtful person can never fail to examine and re-examine the foundations of his faith, and in doing so he runs counter to many a doubt. I have tried both faith and doubt, I say, and I infinitely prefer faith. I prefer faith because it seems to me to fit with the facts of life and the world as I have been able to see them and read about them. I prefer faith because it makes me happier and gives me something to live for. I prefer faith because it gives me some responsibilities and gives me a worthy cause in which to exercise the powers with which I have been endowed. I prefer faith because it makes me better, physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually. I prefer faith to doubt because I have seen both of them at work in the lives of my friends and acquaintances wherever I have been. It is my observation that a real and vital faith tends to make men and women cheerful and clean-minded, unselfish and kindly, and gives them something outside of themselves and their own private interests for which to live.

A "GIVING" FAITH

Many people make a great mistake about faith. They think that it is something that you get, rather than something that you give. They think that it is something that you get, and that once you possess it you have the right to keep drawing blessings and benefits out of some inexhaustible reservoir of perpetual good. They view it entirely from the selfish viewpoint, and because they do they never experience its great benefits, and they gradually become disappointed and declare that there is nothing in it.

Faith is like friendship. You can not run it as a financial proposition, nor trade with it. Heaven will not keep your miserly accounts for you, and if you expect to deposit your pitiful nickel's worth of faith in order to draw your dollar's worth of blessings, you are in for a bad disappointment.

Faith is like friendship. You have to start giving a while before you can do any getting. You have to give your friendship. You have to prove that you are a true friend and that you are willing to do something without any hope of ever getting any reward. Then and then only do you demonstrate the true quality of your friendship. Faith is like that.

Too many people are of a venial mind in regard to faith. They think of it as some sort of a bribe offered to the Almighty, in return for wealth to be wrought out of laziness and poverty, or health to be wrought out of dissipation and unwise living, or power or satisfaction. Those who seek faith in such a mood forget that God will not violate the laws of the universe to satisfy their individual greed and vanity. As long as they seek faith in such a mood they are doomed to bitter disappointment, and it is quite likely that they will be returned, sooner or later, unregenerated to their skepticism.

If faith never does any more for you than this, it will have justified itself: if it teaches you that there is a God whose nature is to love and whose purpose is to work out by the slow but sure mechanisms through which His will operates, and that you are a brother to the rest of his mortal creations—if it teaches you this, I say, and teaches it to you with all its implications of duty and devotion and service and righteousness, it will have justified itself in your life.

Faith in God can sweeten your life and purge it of the sourness and bitterness of disappointment. It can put you at peace with the world and your fellow men. For the ashes of tasteless pleasure it will substitute the inestimable riches of true happiness.

Faith is the beginning act of the giving of one's self to God. It is the first gesture of reconciliation between the Creator and the creature. It closes the breach of estrangement which the mortal flesh interposes between the immortal child and the immortal parent.

To how many things men and women are giving themselves these days! Some give themselves to empty and fruitless pleasures, and some give themselves to sin. Some give their lives to the pursuit of wealth, and some become the slaves of their own property. How tragically lives can become bound up and enslaved to things of earth—things that perish, things that can not give one moment of happiness, things that in the eternal order of the universe and in the affairs of the human soul do not matter at all.

Has it not struck you as tragic that men will become the servants of apartment houses, and farms, or businesses, so that they wear out body and mind in the service of inanimate things? Until they can do nothing, nothing at all in life but think of those things, and serve them? It is tragic that men try to gain all the wealth in the world and then lose the freedom of their own minds, and the possession of their own souls.

The gift of one's self to God in an act of faith is the greatest, the noblest, the purest of all gifts. In the end this sacrifice of one's all to God is no more than the sacrifice that millions of men make every day to their businesses which return them nothing of any real consequence. And in the end one gains immeasurably by the gift.

The world at the present time does not greatly need wealth. It has far greater need of faith: faith in God, faith in his righteousness and wisdom, and faith in their fellow men. The world can never be better than it is, no matter what we do for it, until it has learned the lesson of faith.

"Have faith in God," said Jesus of Nazareth.

The Measure of Service

Jane Makes a Difficult Decision

By Gladys Mae Smith

"HIT'S purty, Miss Jane—like music." Valda May, leggy and nearsighted, squinted through thick lensed glasses at Jane Houston's bowed, brown head. Jane raised that head with an impatient jerk.

"Pretty, Valda May, it's pretty. How often must I remind you that one doesn't say purty, hit, and haint?"

"Pretty, it's pretty," intoned the child obediently, and her sensitive nostrils quivered. The nervous tapping of Jane's pencil ceased abruptly.

"Now, what's pretty, Valda May—like music?" she asked kindly.

"The twenty-third psalm, Miss Jane. I like the way h—it says, 'The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want.' Will you copy h—it for me so I can learn it all?"

Above the girl's unkempt red head, Jane caught a glimpse of amused brown eyes and quirking mouth corners, and was reminded of another problem to be solved before she could leave the church where Vacation Bible School was in session daily.

"Look it up in your Bible, Valda May, that's easier."

"We haint—er—haven't got a Bible, Miss Jane. The baby tore it up."

"All right, honey, run along now, I'm very busy. I'll copy it for you tonight." The child slid quietly to the door, and disappeared into the late, torrid, summer afternoon.

Eleven junior boys, seven junior girls, fifteen beginners and primary children, twelve intermediates, a total of forty-five, counted Jane, checking up the class books. How had they ever got through the afternoon with two teachers absent? Ten Methodist—you'd think the Methodists would conduct their own Bible school—five Presbyterian—the Presbyterians had just closed their school, now their youngsters were running in on her—four belonged to the House of God, and the rest were L. D. S.

Jane's pencil marks had reached the teachers' names. Junior boys, teacher, present,—she could always depend on Lola Seaton—Junior girls, teacher, absent,—Mrs. Flayton's baby was cutting a tooth. Cutting a tooth, mind you, right in the middle of Bible school. Jane had serious doubts that the tooth was the real cause for Mrs. Flayton's absence. She guessed shrewdly that it was an excuse only, and the knowledge did not soothe her growing irritation. Primary and beginners teacher, present—both fairly regular in attendance, but undependable without constant supervision. Intermediate teacher, absent,—what a day. How had they ever got through?

Most of our readers are already acquainted with Jane, who made her debut in "Vision," and endeared herself to them with her energetic resourcefulness and her charm of personality. In this story Jane makes a heroic sacrifice—and then at the last gets her reward. Could anything be nicer?

A DISCREET cough brought her from her mental wanderings to the issue at hand. With a sigh, she mopped her burning face with a crumpled handkerchief and went down the aisle to the waiting boy.

"You're tired, aren't you, Miss Houston?" he asked politely before she could speak to him. Weary, hot and miserable, tears very near the surface, Jane steeled herself against the sympathy in his boyish voice, and remembered severely that he had been "kept in" for pulling Lita Ann's curls.

"Joey," she said in a matter-of-fact tone, "you know I'm tired. You're almost a man now, Joey; you ought to realize the responsibility that rests upon you in helping me to put this thing across." He hung his head sheepishly. She continued patiently, "When you are naughty as you were this afternoon, and I am compelled to punish you, you are simply hurting three people—me, yourself, and God.

"You're retarding the Lord's work, Joey, do you know that? I know you don't want to do a thing like that." His smiling lips had drooped pathetically and his downcast brown eyes were grave.

"It's taking all that's in me, Joey boy, to go through with this work," she confided, and because it was so very true, her voice broke slightly, "won't you help me from now on to have an obedient and successful school?"

He gulped audibly, and dashed a tear from his small nose.

"Honest to goodness I will, Miss Houston. I won't forget like I have before." In spite of his earnestness, his apparent honest intentions, Jane knew he would forget, not because he wished to be disobedient, but because the exuberance of youth was flowing in his veins. She sighed again and let him go, a reprimanded and chagrined bundle of energy eager to dash away and lose his remorse in new adventures.

WEARILY, Jane leaned against the door and watched him sprint down the street. The sun, still fierce in its intensity, beat down upon her uncovered head. But the weariness that encompassed Jane went deeper than mere physical fatigue. Despondency such as she had never known before held her in its grip. Today, with its heat and trials, had brought her face to face with an avalanche of questions she had been shunting for weeks into the background of her thinking.

Why should she, a girl of twenty-two, carry a heavier community load than others? What constituted a reasonable service, and where should self-sacrifice begin and end? Was it worth the price to perform the labor of others while those same others flitted at will between service and selfish indolence?

Would any lasting good come of her present strenuous efforts, she wondered? What did mortal man know of service? How could one gauge the measure of service, know when one had served enough? She brushed her hand across her eyes and saw that it was wet.

"Self pity has caused the ruin of better women than you, Janie," she rebuked herself, "fess up now—you know the reason you are so teary today is because you're all tied up here when you really want to go vacationing with Nan."

Back again with longing, her thoughts flew to Nan's last letter; the letter so indelibly stamped upon her memory. It offered temptation that was almost impossible to resist. Nan had written in part:

"Think of it, Janie, two weeks in the Black Hills! Two weeks of camping, tramping, exploring, pure unadulterated joy! Ha, my dear, I know your yen for travel. You'll go, won't you? Dad said to tell you we wouldn't take 'no' for an answer," etc., etc.

A two-weeks' vacation in the Black Hills country! Jane had quivered in ecstasy at the possibility. For two days she had gone around in agony, torn between her desire to join her uncle's family on their trip, and her loyalty to the Bible school of which she was supervisor.

Baffled, desperate, she had appealed to Mr. Aikens, branch president. That worthy man shook his head sympathetically, "It sure is too bad, Jane. Can't they wait a week?"

She had explained that her uncle's vacation consisted of a certain number of days, that the day of starting was set.

"Well, I don't know of a soul we could get to take your place. We're always handicapped, more or less, for workers in a small place like this. You are doing such excellent work, too. My boy Eben tells me . . ."

Wounded by disappointment, Jane did not even hear what his boy Eben had told him. Her heart was sick with but one thought—she would have to refuse Nan's invitation; she couldn't go. True, there was but one more week of Bible school, but the program had not been completed. Jane refused to consider dismissing the whole thing at this point. She had covenanted to put first things first, and she'd do it regardless of cost to self. But . . . was it worth the price? That was the question.

She closed the windows, locked the door, and turned her aching feet toward the garage where she had left Buck's small coupe for repair.

"The repairs did not come, Jane," Cliff Meyers, the mechanic with whom she had gone to school, informed her. "They missed the bus, the company said when I called them. They promised to get them out sure tonight. Got a way home?"

"Some of the neighbors will be in," she replied listlessly, and retraced her footsteps to main street.

"OOOO, Jane," sang out a shrill voice, and Lola Seaton dashed across the street. Grasping Jane's arm, she lead her into the corner drug store.

"There," she said breathlessly, pushing Jane into a chair at a small round table, "we'll have a soda while I tell you the news." She drew an envelope from her bag and dangled it before Jane's nose.

"What do you think has happened? Yes," to the white coated fountain boy who approached to take their order, "bring us two chocolate sodas."

She swung her attention back to Jane, and her eyes shone with happiness.

"I've received an invitation to spend a week at Lake Okoboji. Isn't that swell? Think of it! Boating, bathing, moonlight on water, eligible beaus. Could anything be more thrilling?"

Jane smiled quietly at the other girl's excitement.

"I'm as pleased as punch, Lola," she said sincerely, for she adored Lola Seaton upon whom she could depend, "when do you go?" Lola cupped her chin in one palm, and dabbled at her soda with a straw.

"Tomorrow evening. They are coming past after me—the Norton's." She paused, then continued with a rush of words, "I hope it won't put you in a hole, Janie—me going away before Bible school is over. It worries me . . . I . . ."

"Oh," breathed Jane weakly, "you're going so soon. I supposed—I—er—thought you'd have to take time to get ready. Well . . ." Lola laughed nervously, a little unnecessarily loud.

"Be ready to fly anytime when its vacation time, is my motto . . ." she prattled on smoothly, but Jane was not listening.

"She knows she ought not to leave me in the lurch like this," thought Jane in despair, "but she wants to go so badly she can't resist."

"Have a good time, Lola," she said at parting, and swallowed a lump in her throat.

THE SUN was low in the west when Jane started out upon her three-mile trek to her farm home. There were many who would have driven her out gladly, she knew. But sore as she was, both of heart and feet, she welcomed the hike. She felt a need of seclusion. She wanted to be alone to face her disappointment squarely; to fight her battle through to a finish. To serve or not to serve—in this lay her decision.

Treading the green grass at the roadside was restful. As the stifling heat of the day lessened in favor of evening's advancement, she was glad she had chosen to walk.

She left the road presently for a short cut across the pastures. Chirping crickets sprang from her path and disappeared in taller grasses. Somewhere across the hills the lowing of cattle came to her. It reminded her of her father's herd each night at the barnyard gate.

Gradually, amid familiar scenes, the breeze caressing her face and brow, her bodily fatigue slipped away as if by magic. The headache, the uncertainty remained, but it now assumed an all-enveloping sadness.

Then, the creek that watered the Houston's thirsty stock in summer came into view. The shade of its over-hanging trees invited her. She placed her books upon the ground and sank to a luxurious bed on its soft bank.

There was something soothing about water that placated the soul, she thought, watching idly while blue-green wavelets dashed over the clean stony bottom, and ran on in an endless succession of gurgling and murmuring.

Small wonder that Jesus loved the water, she meditated; that He sought the water's edge to preach, to teach his most powerful lessons. Lying flat upon her back, she reached a groping hand for her Bible. She opened it at random, and her eyes fell upon these words: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me."

"What is that to thee? Follow thou me." She repeated the words drowsily. Somehow now in her moment of doubt and indecision, the words spoken so long ago by the Master held new significance. She closed her eyes and visioned the occasion that had prompted their utterance.

She saw the shores of Tiberias where Jesus appeared to His disciples, where Peter in his haste to reach his risen Lord had cast himself into the sea. She saw the glowing fire of coals where the fish was cooked, and beside which the fishermen whom Jesus had called to be fishers of men, had eaten their fill.

Then the scene shifted, and she saw the three walking, Jesus with Simon Peter close beside him, John, the beloved and faithful, hovering near. The gentle voice of Jesus was admonishing Peter, "Feed my sheep." She heard Peter saying in chagrin, "But Lord what shall this man do," indicating John. Then strangely enough the speaker faded from her vision, and she saw herself in Peter's place at Jesus' side; heard the low, sweet voice of Him who had conquered death, saying to her, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me."

So strong was her impression of the reality of the scene, that she struggled to a position on her knees, that loving council ringing in her ears. In humility, the like of which she had not experienced since her mother's death, she knelt in contrition there at the water's edge. Her lips moved and she heard herself repeating the words of the Psalmist David:

"The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want, He maketh me to lie down in green pastures,

"He leadeth me by the still waters, He restoreth my soul."

"Oh," she breathed, "it's beautiful. It's as lovely as music, and, oh, how true."

Lenthening shadows sent her scurrying the remaining distance to her home. Her heart was light; she seemed to be treading on air. She was bathed with the peace that passeth all understanding.

"I'll type the twenty-third psalm for Valda May right after supper," she said, her mind already busy with plans for vacation Bible school next day.

At the gate she was met by Bubs, her youthful brother. He was grinning from ear to ear. Jane knew from past experience that he was the bearer of good news.

"Guess what, Janie," he stated without preliminary, "Uncle Frank wired that they had to postpone their trip for a week. Some adjustment at the office, I guess. Fine, isn't it, Sis? Now you can go along."

Jane stood very still, her eyes riveted upon the first evening star. She remained thus so long that Bubs pushed forward.

"Listen, Janie, didn't you understand what I said. Uncle . . ." She turned then and held up her hand.

"I heard you, Bubs darling," she said in a strained voice, "and I'm very happy and grateful . . . only I'm glad I didn't know it before."

Bubs stared. Sometimes Jane was odd; a fellow just couldn't understand her at all.

"She's a queer one, Prince," he addressed his airdale later, a puzzled frown creasing his smooth, boyish forehead.

"When I asked her why she was glad she hadn't known it before, she mumbled something about finding the measure of service, and ran up the walk. Now, I ask you, ole boy, does that make sense to you?"

The living Christ is the only Christ that will save the world. This living Christ must be revealed to the world by the Church which bears his name. This is the message of this church. Herein is the heart of the Restoration Movement.—F. M. McDowell, in a sermon at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

"The remedy's the old remedy. The old God. But it's more than that. It's Light: more Light. The old revelation was good for the old world, and suited to the old world, and told in terms of the old world's understanding. Mystical for ages steeped in the mystical; poetic for minds receptive of nothing beyond story and allegory and parable. We want a new revelation in terms of the new world's understanding. We want light, light! Do you suppose a man who lives on meat is going to find sustenance in bread and milk? Do you suppose that an age that knows wireless and can fly is going to find spiritual sustenance in the food of an age that thought thunder was God speaking? Man's done with it. It means nothing to him; it gives nothing to him. He turns all that's in him to get all he wants out of this world and let the next go rip. Man can not live by bread alone, the churches tell him; but he says, 'I AM living on bread alone, and doing well on it.' But I tell you that plumb down in the crypt and abyss of every man's soul there is a hunger, a craving for other food than this earthly stuff. And the churches know it; and instead of reaching down to him what he wants—light, light—instead of that, they invite him to dancing and picture shows, and you're a jolly good fellow, and religion's a jolly fine thing, no spoils-sport, and all that sort of latter day tendency. Why, man, he can get all that outside the churches and get it better. Light, light! And the padres come down and drink beer with him, and watch boxing matches with him, and dance jazz with him, and call it making religion a Living Thing in the Lives of the People. Lift the hearts of the people to God, they say, by showing them that religion is not incompatible with having a jolly fine time, and there's no God there that a man can understand for him to be lifted up to. A man wouldn't care what he had to give up if he knew he was making for something inestimably precious. But he doesn't know. Light, Light—that's what he wants; and the longer it's withheld the lower he'll sink. Light! Light!" (Mark Sabre, in If Winter Comes, by A. S. M. Hutchinson, pages 255, 256.)

Finally it dawned upon him that this Light was really an old revelation which had been put into words two thousand years ago. "God is love; and he that abideth in love abideth in God, and God abideth in him. Herein is love made perfect with us, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment; because as he is, even so are we in this world. There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear, because fear hath punishment; and he that feareth is not made perfect in love." (1 John 4: 16-18.)

There are the same crooks and grafters, malingers and murderers. They have not been changed at all. And even if some be lined up and shot there is no certainty that the men who direct the firing are any better than they.

Christ has an entirely different approach. "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." (John 3: 3.) Men must be changed before they can even see the kingdom, much less build it. That the gospel will change men and make them the sort of men of which the higher order of society must be made has been too often demonstrated to be denied. Christ himself, who came preaching the gospel, is the one outstanding example that it does work; after him came the apostles.

AN EXAMPLE KNOWN TO US

We have examples in our own time. The late President Joseph Smith was a man who demonstrated to the world that the gospel works. Most men who are not prejudiced, men who think and are fair, must admit that for neighbors and citizens they prefer the very type of man produced by adherence to the teachings of Christ. No matter how many hypocrites there are in the church or how many have failed because they did not fully apply the principles of truth to their lives, whenever one man is found who has lived according to the gospel there is found a demonstration of its truth.

If one man successfully works out a mathematical formula, that proves it can be done; another man's failure in no way diminishes the truth or practicability of the formulae. If a student is told to add together a series of numbers, and then in working his problem omits one or more of them and gets the wrong answer, no one as a result loses faith in the principles of mathematics. We are told as definitely in the Scriptures to add to our faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, and so on. Some church members omit virtue or charity or wisdom, and then people say, "If that is religion, count me out." The results in spiritual matters are as sure and definite and dependable when the law is obeyed as they are in mathematics when the rules of mathematics are carried out.

President Joseph Smith was but one of many to demonstrate that the gospel works, but he did so in such a striking manner that in the very city from which the Saints had at one time been driven with fire and sword he won universal respect and confidence. When he died one of the great daily newspapers of the middle west said:

"He was the prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and the good citizen. As such he lived, as such he died, as such he will be remembered by all outside the household of his faith.

"Kindly, cheerful, loyal to his own creed, tolerant of those of others, standing for modesty, simplicity, good citizenship, embodying in his private and public life all the virtues which adorn a character worthy of emulation—such is the revelation which Joseph Smith leaves to the world, as the real interpretation of an ecclesiastical message translated into terms of human character."—Kansas City Journal, December 12, 1914.

It is such lives as these that prove the divinity of the work more than any argument can do. And that system of belief and life that will change the individual will change society if given a test; that is the driving force back of the commandment: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." It is the thing and the only thing that will save the world.

IT WILL WORK AMONG OUR OWN PEOPLE

As with the individual, so with the church. The gospel is to work from the heart out. We must first apply it in our own relations within the church. I have marveled oftentimes and been disheartened momentarily at the frequency of quarrels and bickering even among those set to be exemplars to the flock. That is not because the gospel will not work—but because it is not given a chance to work. It is not tried. Any two men who observe carefully the precepts of Christ and maintain his spirit and attitude can work together in peace. When two men in the church quarrel it is because one or both are not living their religion.

Any one man who will conform to the precepts of Christ and maintain Christ's attitude and spirit, though he may find some few men so hostile that he can not work with them, will find his personal quarrels reduced to a minimum. In the majority of cases he will find a response to his approach. President Joseph Smith quarreled with very, very few men during more than a half century of active work in a most responsible position—and do not think that it was because he had no opportunities or provocations.

NINE PLASTERERS

Ephraim Brown, one of our elders in Independence, who is a plasterer by trade, had occasion to go to a city where the church is not represented. He took with him eight other plasterers who are church members to do a job of work on a large public building. At first they were a curiosity in the community where they worked. But soon they won high respect and confidence. And on his return he testified in prayer meeting that those nine plasterers worked together without friction during the entire time, each helping the other, and maintaining the bonds of fellowship and love. If nine plasterers from Zion can do that at a hard and trying job in a strange city, is there any reason why there should ever be quarrels among the Presidency, the Twelve, the Bishops, the High Priests, or any of the ministry, all along the line of those who are to set an example to the membership as to the manner in which men should live who are followers of Christ?

The gospel worked among those nine plasterers and it will work with any other body of men who will give it a fair chance to work. When I have lived by the principles of the gospel I have gotten on well with the brethren—I have even been called "diplomatic." The only diplomacy that I know is embodied in the golden rule. When I have forgotten the golden rule and been impatient or unkind or unjust, I have had trouble. I have been most "undiplomatic."

IT WILL SAVE ALL MEN WHO OBEY

Our epitome of faith avers: "We believe that through the atonement of Christ all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel." Then follows an enumeration of the "so-called first principles of the gospel."

In the first of these is embodied the active principles that underlie a changed life: faith in God, repentance of sin, the rebirth and regeneration through the baptism of water and of the Spirit. These principles accompany and produce a real change in the lives of those who actually and faithfully comply with the law. They are then enjoined "to go on to perfection" in accord with that "law of the Lord which is perfect, converting the soul."

Again and again men and women have demonstrated that the plan is practicable and sure in its results—it works. It is so very simple in many of its details that men overlook it and grasp for something more complex and impressive. But those who do live its principles remain "the salt of the earth." They are the hope of Zion. If you find but one family, one home of such people, in it you see all the hope and promise of Zion the beautiful. If it works in one home it will work in a million homes. And, thank God, we have many homes in which it has worked.

Our spiritual stewardship is the task of living our gospel.—Ernest E. Crownover, in the Western Oklahoma District Letter.

Weekly Health Letter

High Blood Pressure

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

During the last General Conference, I was frequently asked to deliver a lecture on blood pressure and hardening of the arteries, but unfortunately, time would not permit for me to comply with the numerous requests but promised, if the lecture was not delivered, that I would write a short article for the Herald.

Blood pressure is a test of two tissues, the blood vessel wall and the heart muscle. It is one of the early symptoms of approaching old age and premonitory symptoms of Bright's disease. Everyone who reaches the age of forty years should have his blood pressure taken at least once a year.

The insurance companies pay out most of their money for wear and tear diseases of this kind. When old age begins, the blood pressure rises because of the narrowing of the small arteries, the burden being placed upon the heart on account of the resistance. It must not be forgotten that the man is "as old as his arteries." Therefore, high blood pressure means old arteries, whether the individual is forty or eighty. The standard for normal blood pressure, the pressure always found in a healthy person twenty or thirty years of age, varies from one hundred to one hundred and twenty. It is an abnormal condition whether the person is thirty or eighty years of age. If one has healthy arteries, the blood pressure should be the same as that of a person of twenty or thirty years of age. Blood pressure wears out the heart, causing it to dilate, and finally it gives out on account of the enormous amount of additional work placed upon it. If the blood pressure is two hundred, the heart is compelled to double the work required at one hundred.

When an uncontrolled, persistent high blood pressure continues long, there is a breaking down, at the same time, of the blood vessels and the kidneys. Such a condition is very grave and requires prompt and persistent treatment. When all these complications occur as a result of persistent high blood pressure, it is often spoken of as cardiovascular-renal disease. If this unfortunate condition is discovered in the early stages, much can be done by changing the habits of the patient. Those who have a persistent blood pressure with a kidney complication, are usually suffering from the result of constipation, meat diet, and the use of tea, coffee, alcohol and tobacco. Early hardening of the arteries is found by the use of the ophthalmoscope. Hardening of the large vessels near the heart may be detected by the X-Ray, also in the parts of the arterial system. If much lime is present, the arteries may sometimes be felt at the wrist, the arm, the temple and at other parts of the body. Auto-intoxication and syphilis are the most common causes of this unfortunate condition.

When the blood pressure is high, without any other complications, it is usually the result of bad dietary habits, the indulgence in alcoholics, tea, coffee and tobacco. Some drugs have been found to give, at least, temporary relief. These should be prescribed only by a physician, but the best treatment is the removal of the cause. It is always an indication of poisons having gained entrance to the system. The systematic use of warm baths, rest, and moderate exercise has been found to be of much benefit in lowering the pressure. The bowels of these patients should move, at least, three or four times a day to prevent the absorption of poisons from the colon, together with the discontinuance of condiments, alcohol, meats, tea, coffee and tobacco.

Citizen's Rights and Duties

"... The definition of citizenship, or of a citizen, can not be separated from the statement of his duties, of what he ought to do. To be a citizen is to be an actively responsible person, a person, that is, who ought to do things, a person with duties. The citizen is, no doubt, a recipient of services from his fellow citizens, enjoying benefits which the State or the social system confers upon him, the fortunate heir of the social inheritance, a person protected by the law, sitting in security under his own vine and figtree, none daring to make him afraid. But this good fortune of his, as the recipient of benefits conferred upon him by his fellows, or as the heir of former ages, measured the service the age demands of him. The greater the benefits conferred upon him, the more extensive become his responsibilities. His security is guaranteed him, not that he may enjoy it in selfish isolation, but that he may have an assured basis for serving the community. His rights are nothing without his duties. At no point do his rights relieve him of his responsibilities; they create them at every point. His chief right, as I have said, is the right to responsibility."—L. P. Jacks, in Belief and Life.

The world would be better off if every believer did not feel himself superior to the doubter in nobility of soul, and every doubter did not have the same attitude towards the believer on the score of intelligence. The doubter can also be an imbecile, and the believer a scoundrel—and vice versa.—Arthur Schnitzler, in Vanity Fair.

Real Christianity is a revolutionary idealism which estranges conservatives because it is revolutionary, and the revolutionary because it is idealistic.—Dean Inge.

Babes in Christ

By E. B. Hull

Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby: If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious.

Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul; having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, whereas they speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation.—1 Peter 2: 1-3, 11, 12.

Growth is the natural order of life, as we see it manifested in this world. The farmer plants seeds in the ground, they spring forth under natural conditions and a perfect growth is observed; the housewife plants her bulbs in her garden and the lily comes forth. The Savior said, "Consider the lilies of the field how they grow." The Lord was making an illustration to show that man can grow the same as the lily. The beautiful lily gets its nourishment from the ground where sometimes all around it are weeds growing. Does the presence of these weeds change the beauty of the lily in any degree? No, the lily keeps itself pure although evidently in bad company. Has the Lord endowed the plants of the fields with a power that he has denied the human family? No, it is possible for a Christian to live and keep himself pure, although surrounded by evil companions, if he has the strength of his convictions. "If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small."

The most beautiful of all natural growth is manifest in the human family. The baby comes to us the most helpless of all, but how we respond to its love and give it care. It wants to grow, and will grow if it is normal. Soon all the family are planning for its future.

Babes in the Church

When we are born again, baptized into the family of Christ, we, too, need a little attention, just as the babe in the family does. Everything is new—our environment, and our associates. There is much to learn, and some one must do the teaching. We must have first things first. Paul says that "newborn babes desire the sincere milk of the word." Later on they can be fed stronger food.

Everyone that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe.—Hebrews 5: 13.

If our children are to grow and be strong in the things of God, they must be taught, and the Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants (68:4) that the parents must do some of this teaching, if they do not the sin be upon their heads. God has placed in the church certain officers as public and private instructors, but when a new baby comes into the family the whole family are concerned in regard to his care and education, not just father and mother. So with the new babe entering the family of Christ (the church); should not the members be concerned in regard to the welfare of this new convert? The Lord says, "We are to teach one another." We must not forget that this new convert is a babe, no matter how old in years, he must be given attention as soon as he is born; in fact, his education should begin before he is born in the church. He should not be given strong meat before he has assimilated the "sincere milk of the word."

Babes in the church should not continue very long as such, any more than the babe in the family. There are certain signs that show who are the babes in the family and also in the church. We can tell the babes in the family and the church by the kind of food he can assimilate. Milk is the natural diet for a normal babe, but as he grows other things are demanded. Paul says:

For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk and of strong meat. For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.—Hebrews 5: 12-14.

It is a lamentable fact that in many churches there are members whose names have been on the books for a long time, but they still have to be rocked in the cradle of first experiences, and when I say rocked, I mean just that, for in every church we find at least four kinds of people—the tired, the retired, the tireless and the tiresome. Paul says:

Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men.—1 Corinthians 14: 20.

There are at least four rules whereby we can understand a babe. First, a babe in the family can not help himself, he needs attention and much attention. The natural procedure of a healthy babe is to grow, get out of the cradle, then try to help his little brothers and sisters, until they, too, can get out of the cradle.

Second, little children, especially babes, get cross very easily, and sometimes it takes the whole family to get them back into good humor again. They require a great amount of petting and attention in order to live with them at all, and this uses up a lot of the strength of father and mother, and sometimes the whole family.

Third, sometimes the spiritual babes are like the little babes in a home, they, too, need much attention and petting, and when they think they are neglected, they set up a howl, and show to all their displeasure. Then the father of the church and his helpers have to spend a lot of valuable time in reclamation, and because of this kind of work the very young babes and the rest of the children are somewhat neglected.

Fourth, there is another rule that is noticeable—a little child is easily led, they do not always know the right from the wrong, they are as liable to be led in one direction as in the other. There are many of the spiritual children in the church today that seem to be “tossed to and fro and carried about by every wind of ‘gossip,’ by the sleight of men and their cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive,” and wreck the church, if possible. Paul says: “Envy, strife and divisions are signs of the childhood state.” (1 Corinthians 3: 3.)

Sickness in the Body

Paul says that “the church is the body of Christ,” and we have learned from natural things around us, that in order to enjoy life we must be alive, alert, active, not sick. A brilliant pianist can not produce good music from his instrument, if it is out of tune—neither can Christ work with success in a church that is full of discord. When a man is paralyzed, no matter what he desires to accomplish, he can do nothing, for his body will not respond. There are some churches that have come into this paralyzed state, they do not respond to the love of the Master, they have lost their touch with Christ and his work. The reason is neglect of duty.

When people are sick, they are not themselves, they are not enjoying the things that healthy people enjoy. Members of the church that are spiritually sick are in darkness, their lamps have gone out, the oil is gone, the eyes of their understanding are blinded by the craftiness of Satan. How can these be brought back to normal health? A little attention on the part of the family will sometimes accomplish this, they need a little kindness and love, and unless they get some help they will surely die, for “the body without the spirit is dead.”

What a great sorrow it must be to our heavenly Father when he sees some of his family on earth that have stopped growing, their strength small and their vision short.

When a babe in the home does not continue to grow as it should, there is much concern in the family. Specialists are called to try to fathom the cause. No one has reached the full estate of manhood in Christ until he can grow no more, and we believe this will never be, not in this life at least. Our business in this life is to grow, develop, become acquainted with things, acquainted with our own talents and powers and to try to overcome hindrances. To have a greater vision in faith, in knowledge, in love and in character, until our work here is over, and we are carried over into the next existence, where we will continue to grow and learn.

How Can We Know an Adult?

He is one that lives neither in the past nor in the future, though his memory and foresight may both be good and clear. He is the man of today who has the widest and most fruitful use of the resources of today. He does not fear competition of his own generation, for he has found his place in life; he is willing to help others find theirs, too, for it can not endanger him. Though selfexpression, adventure, and romance are not lacking in his character, they are not the things that give him his highest joys. The exercise of his judgment on theories and situations gives him the pleasure that others find in dancing, love-making, travel, reading or the theater.

We may compare him to the leader of the orchestra, combining the talents of solo artists and accompanists into an harmonious whole, while for him the orchestra itself is an instrument of expression. The true adult is the man who can be trusted. He brings out in other men resources that they did not know they possessed. He creates confidence in others rather than envy. We trust him.

The Great and Small

This week the drive for funds for civic relief is going on in Independence. Workers report strange experiences. Contrasts of selfishness and generosity appear side by side. Piteable conditions are revealed in homes where worthy people are more in need of charity than able to give to it.

One worker reports that on the same street both rich and poor are living. The most generous gifts came from poor widows who really could have been excused from giving. Meager gifts came from some who could easily have given more. And some who could well afford to give generously haughtily refused to give anything.

One can not help wondering how it would be with these proud folk if the tables were reversed. And fate does sometimes reverse the tables.

Some of these selfish people have never been cold and hungry. They do not know how cruel cold and hunger can be. A taste of them would be good for hard hearts.

There will be great suffering this winter. That is fairly certain even now. If it is a cold and severe winter, things will be all the worse. We should not let our hearts be hardened against the appeals to our mercy. Let us imagine ourselves as we would feel in the places of those who are cold and hungry. Then we are likely to be kinder.

Harmony in Northern Wisconsin District Conference

Vote to Join Minnesota District in Reunion at Chetek

The Northern Wisconsin district conference convened with Black River Falls Branch, October 8 and 9. As in former years it was a time of pleasant meeting and greeting for the many who assemble only at conference time once each year.

Meals were served by Black River Saints in the basement of the church, giving more time for visiting and lessening the work of preparing meals in the homes.

While the depression is severely felt in Wisconsin, the good Lord has sent a fine harvest of nearly all kinds of food for man and beast.

Brother Lee Root, bishop's agent for Wisconsin, and wife, from Madison, were there and assisted. Also several of the local priesthood helped to make the conference more pleasant. Among these was Brother Manley Shedd, of Post Oak, Missouri. Brother Manley and his wife are natives of Wisconsin, but have spent the past few years in Missouri. They are now visiting their former home in the Porcupine Valley near Durand. The Saints were glad to see them and to have Brother Manley assist in the singing as well as to enjoy the radiance of his cheerful, kindly personality.

There was little division of opinion with regard to matters considered in the business meeting. It was voted to join with Minnesota District in trying to hold a reunion at Chetek again next year. The Saints will be pleased at that time to have former missionaries of Wisconsin and other Saints attend. Pleasant memories of days gone by at Chetek reunion linger in the minds of many.

The Saints of Northern Wisconsin are earnestly trying to do their part in paying tithing and otherwise assisting the general church in its present financial task. These trying times are causing the Saints to realize the necessity of Zion, and how rapidly prophecy, ancient and modern, is being fulfilled. Many are asking themselves: What will the years of the near future bring? Are we doing all in our power to answer the call of the Lord to the church? Are we among the wise virgins? Are our lamps burning with faithful service?

Brother Frank Sherwood, jr., of Black River Falls, was chosen director of Religious Education, and his wife secretary of the Sunday school. The district is fortunate in having such faithful young people as Brother and Sister Sherwood to do this work. Sister Mary Mair, of Chetek, was again chosen district secretary. Brother Leonard Houghton is the district president, and his associates are I. H. Bowen, of Black River Falls, and F. A. Atwood, of Chetek. Sister G. E. Hemstock, of Bangor, is librarian, and Horace Scafe is treasurer.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

Drama, the Event of Rally Day

In observance of Rally Day, a two-act play, "The Ten Virgins," was presented by seventeen young people Sunday morning, October 9, and was well received. Sister Veneta Warner played "Redeemer of Israel," as a prelude, and Sister Nettie Bigler read the story of the play. During intermission a quartet sang, "No Work to Do?" and "Let Us Pray for One Another," and all sang as a closing number, "Dare to Do Right." Sisters Nettie Bigler and Anna Cramer deserve commendation for their efforts and success in interesting the young people in the work of the church.

The work of the local branch is making progress, and members of the priesthood have been active in contributing splendid messages. At a special prayer and testimony service, September 18, in which a large number participated, Brother Charles Vance was called to the office of teacher. At the morning service, September 25, members of the junior church provided the program. Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths was also present and occupied the pulpit at both services of the day.

The infant son of Sister Margaret Patrick was blessed Sunday, August 21, by Elders William L. Goudy and Charles Cramer, and given the name John Larrie.

Elders John D. Carlisle and William L. Goudy officiated at the funeral services, August 27, of John H. Warner, seventy-seven, a nonmember. Due to a large number present it was necessary to conduct services from the South Side M. E. Church, and interment was in East Fair Street Cemetery.

Elder William Goudy was in charge of private funeral services, conducted from his late residence, September 22, for Harvey W. Harper, a nonmember. He is survived by his widow, Sister Mary Harper and four children who are all members of the church. The sympathy of the Saints is extended to this family. Members of the branch were saddened by the death of Sister Rebecca Sautters, of Canton, Ohio. Death followed a stroke of paralysis. Last rites were conducted from her home, September 23, by Elder William Goudy. Sister Sautters was a faithful member of her branch and also had many friends in this branch.

Last rites were held Sunday, October 2, for Sister Carrie Benbow who received the final summons September 29. Elder William Goudy was in charge, assisted by Elder John Carlisle. Interment was in Evergreen Burial Park. Deepest sympathy is extended to her family. Sister Benbow, who is survived by her husband and seven children, was a faithful and active member of the church until her last illness made her an invalid for many years.

The young people's department enjoyed a picnic at Tuscora Park in September before taking up their school work for the winter.

Missionary Series Encourages Isolated Saints in Illinois

I closed services at Deer Grove, Illinois, the night of October 2. That day was full of activities. I preached at eleven o'clock; baptized five at two thirty; presided at a confirmation and sacrament service at seven thirty, and preached again at eight o'clock. Altogether I conducted fifteen meetings there in the past two weeks, the average attendance being forty-nine.

About twelve years ago Brother and Sister F. M. Burgess and family moved from the old Brush Creek Branch in southern Illinois to this community. About a year later Brother and Sister L. E. Burgess and family moved here from the same place. Later came Brother and Sister Everett Presnell and family, Sister Noble Henson and family, Joe Burgess, and a number of relatives, all from the vicinity of Brush Creek. Most of these were not members of the church.

The few Saints in this community were isolated from church privileges until I came and opened up the work with an all-day meeting on the lawn of the farm home of Brother and Sister F. M. Burgess near Tampico, June 28, 1931. At that time there were only about eight members of the church in the community.

September 20, 1931, Brother Edward Jones and I conducted an all-day meeting at the farm home of Brother and Sister L. E. Burgess. October 25, I returned and held another all-day meeting. Since that time Brother C. A. Beil, president of Clinton Branch, Iowa, has conducted an all-day meeting in this community once a month and sometimes has come twice a month.

July 10, of this year Brother Beil baptized six, and October 2, at the conclusion of a two-week series of meetings I baptized five. There are at present twenty members of the church in this vicinity with good interest and several prospects.

With the assistance of Brother Beil and others, I hope to continue the monthly meetings at Deer Grove until a more perfect organization can be effected.

E. R. DAVIS.

Douglas, Arizona

Nineteenth Street and C Avenue

The Saints from Bisbee, twenty-five miles distant, spent Sunday, October 9, here and an enjoyable time was had. Brother T. R. Davis was the morning speaker, his subject being, "Power to Become Sons of God," and many good points were brought out.

After the morning service a picnic lunch was had by the members of both branches at Douglas Fifteenth Street Park.

In the evening, P. O. Puckett was the speaker and all enjoyed hearing from him again. Elders W. P. Bootman was expected to be present, but word had been received that he was having good success at his meetings at Portales, New Mexico, where he had already baptized several and expected others to come into the kingdom soon, so did not deem it wisdom to leave while the interest was so good.

It became necessary to replace the church building roof recently to avoid damage to the ceiling and piano, and so an oyster supper was held October 7, to help pay for the expense. Something over fifteen dollars net was made which, under existing conditions, the workers consider encouraging for the initial effort to pay off this expense. Brother June Taylor was the chef and did great credit to himself judging from the compliments paid by people who partook of the splendid repast. Tickets were sold at fifty cents each and full value served. The women loyally supported the chef as well as the younger folks.

An entertainment will be provided in November to raise further funds for this purpose and supplemented by subscriptions pledged. The branch hopes to have this nearly paid for before the new year.

Brother Forrest Golding was in charge of the roofing job and was assisted by Brother Alva Corley and several non-member friends. A splendid job was done. Good cedar shingles, dipped in a special solution, were used and the building now has a roof good for nearly forty years.

There have been a number of good meetings in the past few months. Interest in the Sunday school and department of recreation and expression has been good, and there seems to be a better interest in the Lord's work in this place than for some time in the past.

For over a year, they have had a Bible class study each Tuesday evening, sometimes combined with a prayer service, and as some of these meetings have been held at the homes of nonmember friends and at the homes of some members who seldom attend the regular services, considerable good has been done.

An invitation has been extended to this branch to visit Bisbee Branch on November 6, and spend the day with them. This Douglas Saints hope to do.

We are looking forward with pleasure to a visit from Elder Bootman upon completion of his series of meetings in New Mexico. Brother Bootman presented a ten-day series of meetings here at the City Park and at the church some weeks ago, and much good seed was sown which local members trust will bear fruit in due time.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

Visited by General Church Workers

A tang in the air, mountain sides covered with reds, yellows, browns, and evergreens, snow cap on old Pike's Peak, and those who live in "the shadow of the Rockies," know that autumn is here.

Several weeks ago the entire membership was made to grieve for a young brother, Ellsworth Ebeling, who fell from the State bridge being constructed up Ute Pass, and sustained very serious injuries. He is now slowly improving, but will be confined to the hospital some time still.

The circle of shut-ins is large this fall. Sister Liggett is improving slowly. Brother and Sister W. B. Root, of Houston, Texas, are here this fall. Sister Lida's broken wrist is mending nicely, but Brother "Billy" is confined to his bed.

Sister Katskowsky, of Independence, is located at 616 North Weber Street, and is improving in health and making a circle of friends.

Brother B. M. Anderson, of Lincoln, Nebraska, paid this branch his annual visit during August, and went home feeling fine.

Colorado Springs members have been fortunate. In addition to the regular splendid Sunday morning sermons by J. D. Curtis, the meetings were recently enriched by a visit from Elder J. W. A. Bailey who gave three uplifting lectures. He is a student and his talks were enjoyed. A short time ago also Apostle Roy S. Budd preached on two evenings. He was accompanied by Elder Glaude A. Smith, of Denver, the district president.

Young Harold Schnebeck has been gladly welcomed as a member. He was baptized by Elder J. D. Curtis.

Works With Tennessee and Kentucky Saints

At the request of Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, I attended the conference of Tennessee and Kentucky District, to assist in the regulation of some matters. Having attended the reunion of that district four years in succession, I have learned to love the Saints.

The conference passed into history and many things were done for the good of the district. Because of local matters, I am staying another week and while here am holding meetings at Paris in a large hall. The latter part of the week meetings will be at Foundry Hill Branch near Puryear in our church.

Elder Connie B. Gallimore was chosen district president with Elders Daniel Dortch and Brown Bowlen as counselors. Sister Flossie Gallimore is the district secretary. The ordination of Brother Daniel Dortch was provided for by the conference when approved by the Presidency.

Financially times are hard for Saints here. Cotton is worth from two to six cents a pound, and sweet potatoes from sixteen to twenty cents a bushel.

J. O. DUTTON.

Mallard, Iowa

Helped by General and District Officers

September 10 and 11 this branch enjoyed a two-day meeting. Brothers W. R. Adams, E. Y. Hunker, and Gerald Gunsolley had charge, and services both instructive and pleasant were experienced.

Seven days later Mary Maxine Ward was baptized by her uncle, B. Fish, and confirmed by E. L. Edwards. This young sister is gladly welcomed by the membership.

Elder E. Y. Hunker conducted a series of meetings here the latter part of August.

Early in September Mallard Saints had a George Washington program, using slides to present historic scenes in connection with the lecture.

The young people sponsored the Sunday school picnic about the middle of August.

Nearly all the officers were sustained at the branch business meeting, September 30. Sister Bernetta Hahn was chosen secretary, and Sister Martha Ward takes the place of Sister Carmichael as publicity agent. Sister Carmichael is unable to perform in this office because of a recent accident.

Independence

Most of the congregations in Independence dismissed Sunday evening services, and the Saints assembled in the main room of the Auditorium to hear President F. M. Smith in his first sermon preached to Independence people in many months.

Selecting for a text the words of Paul to the Hebrews: "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," President Smith called attention to numerous things in the past year which have caused the church to sorrow, warned the Saints of other trials and burdens to come, and pointed the way to a more secure and happy position of the church in the future. He pled for love, devotion, humility, and resignation such as were shown by great characters of old, Job, Jesus, Paul, and in the recent past, by his own father, Joseph Smith. Through their sufferings these men were given a greater breadth of sympathy and understanding for all who suffered. So it is with the church today.

Music for the evening was supplied by the Auditorium Orchestra led by Orlando Nace, and by the Stone Church Choir. Elder J. F. Sheehy directed the congregational hymns. Elder H. G. Barto and Bishop J. S. Kelley were in charge.

Many people here mourn the passing of a faithful worker of the church, Elder O. J. Hawn, who died at the Sanitarium early Sunday morning. For many years Brother Hawn was a missionary, ceasing his labors in that capacity only a few months ago at the dictates of failing health. He had earned many friends in Independence. The funeral was from the Stone Church yesterday afternoon. Brother Hawn was sixty-three years old.

A jolly time was enjoyed by a large crowd of young people and their friends at the big indoor carnival Saturday night. The lower room of the Auditorium was the scene of festivities. Sponsored by the young people's council, the event combined an attractive variety of features and stunts including a one-act play and tricks by a professional magician. The proceeds will finance a young people's rally next month.

Five hundred women responded to a special call Monday afternoon, meeting at the Stone Church in charge of Pastor J. F. Sheehy. In response to the appeal of the general church for the women to pool their efforts, concentrating upon the raising of funds to meet pressing obligations, Independence women are moving forward in unity and under skillful leadership. Though Sister C. C. Koehler, leader of women here, and her district supervisors had met previously to discuss ways and means, the five-cents-a-week club plan, ten cents a week, twenty-five cents a week, and on up, was comparatively new to the women who met.

After a clear presentation of the financial situation of the church and of the way in which the women can help, by Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, and a hearty expression of confidence from President Frederick M. Smith, Sister C. C. Koehler used a blackboard to explain the plan proposed by the officers for the women of Independence.

And now, fired with enthusiasm, the women are organizing themselves to make personal weekly sacrifice, paying in their offering to assist in the obligations of the church. At present they are much interested in contributing to the amount due missionary families and others dependent upon the church, a sum of eighty-five thousand dollars. The Presiding Bishopric will turn all they can of the women's money to this sum outside of that which they are compelled to use for other necessary expenditures. Not only do the twenty-five hundred women of the center place want to live the financial law of the church, regularly paying their tithing, but they wish to sacrifice personally in a way they have never sacrificed before; and they wish to engage in activities which will increase their contributions to the church. To that end are they organizing. To that end are they hoping and praying and working.

Many in Independence were grieved to learn of the passing of Sister Myron A. McConley at her Los Angeles home, October 19. Death has released this beloved woman from much suffering and pain. Friends here extend deepest sympathy to the bereaved family.

Stone Church

Substituting the word "brother" for that of "keeper" in Cain's question of the Lord: "Am I my brother's keeper?" (Genesis 4: 9), Bishop J. Stanley Kelley preached a good sermon at the Stone Church Sunday morning. This was his first sermon to his home congregation. One of the younger sons of the late Bishop E. L. Kelley, Brother Stanley is one of the dependable young officials and workers in the center place. His sermon Sunday morning on "Brotherhood" was happily received by a congregation of friends.

Elders H. G. Barto and C. I. Carpenter were in charge, and music was by the Stone Church Choir directed by J. Glenn Fairbanks.

This Sunday was the opening day of Girl Scout Week, and the two troops of the congregation, 46 and 37, attended in a body with their captains and listened to Brother Kelley's sermon.

The Stone Church will observe next Sunday as College Day. The week's postponement was due to the fact that many of the ex-Gracelanders who will take part in the program, attended Home-coming services at Lamoni on last Sunday.

Mr. Whiting Williams spoke to a large crowd of Saints and townspeople at the Stone Church Monday night. This internationally known lecturer and industrial consultant was brought to Independence under the auspices of the Allied Forces. He spoke on prohibition and the present political situation from the point of view of the working man.

Second Church

Following the church school held at nine thirty Sunday morning, the junior service was held in the basement of the church.

Norman Inman was chosen to be in charge of the meeting, and Orson Murdock offered the benediction. Sister Sarratt and Nadine Inman were the directors of the music. On the program were several special numbers including a duet by Melison McCormick and Bethel Davis. Pastor A. K. Dillie talked on "Thy Kingdom Come Through Study." For a text Brother Dillie chose "Study to show thyself approved unto God."

At the eleven o'clock preaching service the choir sang, "The Valley of Prayer." Elder D. S. McNamara's sermon was on "The Gospel, the Highway Leading to Christ."

Mrs. Gladys Inman played a short prelude on the organ at the seven thirty service. Since the service was in honor of Graceland College, three graduates of the college talked. Sister Alice Chapelow, the first of the three, said, "Graceland is a big thing, at least it seems so to me." Deacon Ellis Murdock was the second speaker. Dorothy Peek sang a vocal solo, "This Is My Task." Following this, Mrs. Hatch talked.

The eight o'clock prayer meeting was different in that Elder William Inman read the hymn, "Take Time to Be Holy," and suggested that the thoughts of the meeting be centered around the song. The service was a fine one.

Mrs. Conyers, who has been ill for sometime, is improving.

The young people of this congregation worked earnestly for the carnival, and were rewarded with success.

Walnut Park Church

Sunday, October 23, being College Day, this congregation was fortunate in securing as morning speaker Elder Amos Berve. Brother Berve was for several years connected with Graceland College, and he gave an interesting talk. The volunteer choir sang a hymn preceding the morning's talk, and then "Graceland Forever."

This day also marked the opening of Girl Scout Week, which is internationally observed. Troop 10 of this congregation attended church in a body, sitting in a reserved section in the front of the church, and being welcomed by Pastor Frank McDonald.

The church school was well attended, and a piano solo was played by Lola Fallow, an intermediate. At six o'clock the evening study hour opened, and there were several fine classes. The program of songs and readings, though brief, was pleasing. Last Friday evening this study group met in the basement for a covered-dish supper and get together. About one hundred people were there.

The Sunday evening meeting was dispensed with on account of the general services at the Auditorium. Many from Walnut Park wished to hear President Smith speak.

Saints of this district extend sympathy to the family of Elder O. J. Hawn. Brother Hawn died at the Sanitarium Sunday morning. On coming to Independence a few months ago, he and his family settled in this district. He is loved and respected by Walnut Park Saints for his untiring missionary labors and his love for the church.

Spring Branch Church

On Friday night, October 21, the young people of this congregation presented four one-act plays and the church was nearly full of people. This entertainment provided enjoyment for all, and displayed the talents of Spring Branch's young men and women.

Prayer meetings have of late answered the spiritual needs of this people. Local priesthood faithfully preside over these services. At one of the recent meetings Elder O. J. Hawn was remembered in prayer. A former pastor, Elder J. E. Cleveland, was a visitor on this occasion.

At the eleven o'clock Sunday morning hour Elder Amos Allen talked. The choir sang an anthem with Gladys Dixon as soloist.

Many visitors attended the evening church school, and enjoyed the study and program. Elder Tankard was the eight o'clock speaker, choosing his Scripture lesson from Numbers 35.

Not long ago the musicians of the branch presented a recital free for all who wished to attend.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The annual stake leadership school offered classes in "Fundamental Beliefs," taught by Apostle F. Henry Edwards, and, "Youth and Modern Revelation," by Elder John F. Sheehy for the first week, October 17 to 21. The enrollment was one hundred and twenty-six. The enlightenment and spiritual uplift imparted was a blessing to those attending. Continuing this week, are classes on "Health" taught by Doctor Charles Grabske; "Open Avenues in Christ's Service," by President F. M. McDowell, and "Our Leadership of Church Services," by Stake President C. E. Wight.

Quindaro Church

A manufacturers' dinner will be served at this church located at Hutchings and Quindaro Avenues at 6 p. m.,

October 27. To this all are invited.

Sister H. A. Higgins is going to start her Book of Mormon class again on Friday afternoon, and will hold another on Friday evening in the homes of the Saints.

Argentine Church

On the evening of October 9, Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker to a small but interested crowd. The following Sunday, Elder Henry Gunion occupied the sacred desk at seven forty-five, and the evening speaker, October 23, was Elder George Essig.

A big dinner will be held in this branch November 8.

Amity Club Organized at Saint Thomas, Ontario

Young Women Sponsor Many Activities

As a result of Elder P. E. Farrow's missionary series of meetings held at the Saint Thomas, Ontario, church on Balaclava Street last winter, a number of young people were added to the group. The young women of the congregation organized into a club known as the Amity Class for study, devotional and recreational purposes. During the summer months they met in the various homes every two weeks. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. P. Ford; vice-president, Miss E. St. John; secretary, Mrs. E. Ford; treasurer, Miss Alice Hayes; chorister, Mrs. J. Le Courtois; pianist, Mrs. H. Gould; teacher of eugenics, Mrs. F. Lipsitt; teacher of etiquette, Mrs. Babcock; convener of the sport committee, Mrs. A. Mann. During the summer the club studied eugenics.

Warm weather activities of the club included besides the regular meetings a food sale in June, also a social in the basement of the church and an early prayer meeting one Sunday morning in charge of the visiting missionary, P. E. Farrow.

Important in the undertakings of the club was a banquet the young women gave in honor of their mothers September 28. The lower auditorium was made into a pretty setting for the long white tables, and much of the success of the banquet was due to the efficient convenership of Mrs. Preston Ford and her able assistants. Mrs. F. Lipsitt was toast-mistress. The program opened with singing, and the invocation was offered by Mrs. H. Small, the eldest mother present. Mrs. Kinsman gave an after-dinner talk which was pleasurable instructive. Then came appropriate toasts and songs and the mothers accepted the invitation to listen to a lecture on eugenics by the teacher of that subject. Numbers especially enjoyed were a solo by Mrs. W. Babcock and a reading by Mrs. A. Mann.

Since the banquet the club has been meeting on Wednesday evening of each week. Interest has been keen, more attending each time. Saturday, October 8, the club held another successful food sale and October 19 they had a masquerade party in the lower auditorium of the church.

Saints of this church have been very busy this year. About twenty-four were added to the church last spring, and interest is great among nonmembers.

The church edifice now has a new full basement for the lower auditorium room.

Death of Sister M. A. McConley

Sister Fern F. McConley, wife of Apostle M. A. McConley, passed away at her home in Los Angeles, California, at two o'clock Wednesday morning, October 19, after a long illness. Sister McConley was one of the finest and noblest of those women of the church, who, as missionaries' wives, have won the love and confidence of the Saints. The native Saints of the Island Mission almost idolized her. The Saints of Southern California District, where she has lived for many years, will miss her sorely.

Brother Myron has been both house-keeper and nurse for months, with un-failing devotion caring for his wife with his own hands day and night to the end. It happened that he and his daughter, Alice, were alone with Sister McConley when the end came.

The services were held in Los Angeles Central Church Friday at two o'clock, October 21. The body was taken to Denver for burial. The Los Angeles Saints have rendered help as they could, and join the whole church in sympathy for Brother McConley and Alice.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Moorhead, Iowa

Prepare Program for Joseph Smith Centennial

In August Missionary E. Y. Hunker was here for two weeks, and his sermons were much enjoyed. Brother Marvin Fry and family were here a week during that time, and Brother Fry spoke on two occasions. Brothers Hunker and Fry sang many gospel songs together.

August 22, the Saints met at the "Aid" building after church to help Brother Hunker celebrate his birthday. It was quite a surprise to him, and about seventy-five enjoyed a good time. Ice cream and cake were served.

Institute was held August 13 and 14. Brothers Gerald Gunsolley, William Adams and E. Y. Hunker were in charge. Some splendid meetings were enjoyed and good advice was given. The Saints hope to put into practice the things they learn, for in so doing they know that they will be a "distinctive people" and in a condition to help the world.

The depression is having its effect on Moorhead Saints along with everyone else. Attendance is not so large as it was because of this. Many of the members live several miles from the church. The midweek prayer services have been of a high order although attendance is small. More were present, however, at the last meeting.

Saints of this region are glad to see Herald, Vision, and Ensign combined. The adult class in church school is taking up the study of the Herald.

A program is being prepared to celebrate the centennial of the birth of Joseph Smith.

Recent speakers here have been Brother Hansen, of Dunlap, Iowa; Brothers Mark Jensen, T. O. Strand, Thomas Ward, Chester Davis, Arnold Adams, and Pastor J. J. Boswell.

Cherokee, Iowa

Spiritual Meetings Enjoyed.

The faithful members of this branch are endeavoring to keep the gospel work alive, and as a result they have had some very spiritual services during the summer months.

Albert Haynes and W. W. Reeder attended the institute at Logan in June, bringing home notes and references for the instruction of the branch.

Elder E. Y. Hunker came to Cherokee from the Logan institute, delivering three helpful sermons.

The sacrament and prayer services have been spiritually uplifting to those who have taken active part. Attendance was fair with a nice increase in the past few weeks.

Two sisters, Cora Leonard and Mary Yarrington Smith, who had been ill for many months, were relieved of their suffering by the heavenly Father, and taken to the rest promised those who are patient and endure to the end. Both sisters received many blessings during their afflictions and were ready to go. Funeral services were conducted by A. R. Crippin, pastor, in the church, filled to overflowing by friends.

Attendance at Sunday school has been good, and interest fine. Director Alfred Ballantyne has been faithful, and is assisted by good teachers. The evening study hour is under the direction of Albert Haynes.

The department of women has been working hard and holding regular meetings. A small number sent in thirty dollars to be applied on the church debt. Sister A. R. Crippen was leader the past year, but had to give up this work because of poor health. Sister Etta Evans is now in charge.

Business meeting and election of officers occurred September 15. Brother Crippen was sustained as pastor and Alfred Ballantyne as director of church school. Branch affairs were reported in good condition.

Two young brothers are attending college this year. Willard Sheldon is at Ames, Iowa, and Harold Reeder is attending a school of embalming at Saint Louis, Missouri.

Brother E. L. Edwards and sons, of Pomeroy, Iowa, have visited Cherokee several times during the summer. His excellent sermons have been enjoyed.

The event of the year for Cherokee was the two-day meeting held October 8 and 9. District President Gerald Gunsolley and Bishop W. R. Adams conducted the services which were spiritual feasts. The class work was very profitable. Prayer services were spiritual, and sermons were instructive. An effort was made to assure good attendance by sending out special invitations, and the Saints were rewarded with fine crowds. Several came from nearby towns, and everyone was well pleased with the services and the evidences of God's directing Spirit.

We are praying that conditions will improve before long. Many Saints are without employment and in need of clothing and food. But those who are able are doing all they can to assist in relieving distress.

Good Conference for Kentucky and Tennessee District

Report a Half Year's Work

The semiannual conference of Kentucky and Tennessee District convened at Paris, Tennessee, at the Odd Fellows' Hall, October 8, opening with a prayer service at ten o'clock in the morning. The business meeting at one-thirty in the afternoon was well attended by district representatives.

The Saints had hoped that Apostle C. F. Ellis could attend the conference, but this he was not able to do. He sent Elder J. O. Dutton to represent him, and the latter received a hearty welcome from the members of the district. District President Thomas Newton, superannuated, was not present, so Brother Dutton and the two counselors, Elders T. U. Thomas and C. B. Gallimore, were chosen to preside. Sister Vala Seaton, district secretary, was in her place.

Written or verbal reports from all branches showed twenty-six baptisms in the last six months. Reports came also from nearly all the ordained men of the district, showing activity on the part of most of them.

Paris was again chosen to be the place of the next conference, the time to be in March. The exact date was left to the district presidency.

Election of officers resulted as follows: District president, Elder C. B. Gallimore, who named as counselors, Daniel R. Dortch, of Springville, Tennessee, and P. Brown Bowlin, of Lynneville, Kentucky. Sister C. B. Gallimore was elected district secretary; R. M. C. Ross, chorister; Sister Gallimore, pianist. Daniel R. Dortch was recommended to the conference for ordination to the office of elder, and with the approval of the First Presidency, the ordination took place a week later.

There is a general feeling that the district is in good hands and that further prosperity will attend its work. Local men seem to be willing to move out as missionaries and to open up the work where it is possible. C. B. Gallimore was also sustained bishop's agent.

Providence, Rhode Island

Successful Year for This Branch

The last church social was a decided success, and one particular feature should be interesting to other branches, and might prove helpful to those who have social programs in charge. This feature was called by Brother Malcolm Spinnett, who had charge of it, a "radio program." Through a drawn curtain a megaphone protruded, and each participant on the program was either announced by the megaphone after the fashion of broadcast announcing, or his particular number was given through the megaphone. Such a program can be arranged at very short notice, as the participants behind the curtains may read their parts.

The September rally day also boasted several unique features. Among these was the Providence Salvation Army Band of fourteen pieces. Beautiful vocal solos were sung by the district chorister, Sister Helen Coombs and by Sister Melbro Kaye. There was also a stirring sermon by Pastor D. F. Joy.

Not long ago the junior church felt the loss of its leader when Sister Tillie Streeter underwent an appendix operation. She is now recuperating, and it is hoped that she will be able to return to church sometime this month.

Brother William Bradbury, eighty-six passed away June 10. He held the office of elder for many years besides being one of the early pioneer workers who was instrumental in building up the Providence Branch. He will be remembered by many as an ardent, zealous lover of the gospel restored in latter days. He was a faithful church attendant.

Wednesday, September 28, the following officers were elected. Pastor, D. F. Joy; associate pastor, George F. Robley; church school director, John Colburn; secretary of church, Georgie Spinnett; secretary of church school, Alice Bradbury; treasurer, James Allison Cook; chorister, Louise Fox; church organist, Laura Brown; church school organist, Ruth Grange, and publicity agent, E. M. Brown.

Sunday evening services this fall and winter, under the supervision of Pastor D. F. Joy and special direction of Elder Fred W. Roberts, will be of a missionary character with special effort to interest nonmembers also of such a nature that the young of the membership will have opportunity to learn more of the fundamental principles of the church and its objectives.

Sunday, October 2, at the Homeo-

pathic Hospital the newborn baby of Brother and Sister Herbert Floyd passed away. Sister Floyd, however, is doing nicely, and her friends are happy to know that soon she will return home.

The past year for Providence Branch has been a successful season. Harmony has characterized almost every activity. The Saints look forward to the coming year's work with keen anticipation of things to be accomplished under the newly-elected officers.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Women Establish Storehouse

Milwaukee Branch is happy to report continued growth of interest in church activities and spirituality of the membership. The Saints are grateful for the help and encouragement given by visiting members of other groups throughout the district.

Sunday, September 18, three were added by baptism, Duane Coney, Harriet Maas, and Thomas Sylvester, Brother John Mass, of Watertown, officiating. Confirmation of these candidates took place the following Sunday when an all-day meeting was held, Elders Henry Woodstock and C. Wassen officiating.

At a special business session Brother Maas was chosen branch president.

The women's working group is busy planning and preparing a fall bazaar and festival which they hope to hold October 28. They have established a local storehouse with the consent and cooperation of the branch officers. This will be supervised by the friendly visitor of the women's group. All members of the branch are requested to donate any articles of food, clothing, or household necessities for which they have no further need, and the women's group will be glad to recondition and distribute this to worthy needy families.

Milwaukee Saints are hopeful and prayerful for the future of God's work.

Traverse City, Michigan

Local Harvest Festival September 25

Apostle D. T. Williams spent September 28, here and preached a splendid sermon. The Saints look forward to his calls for they know he has a message well worth hearing and easy to understand.

Brother and Sister James Davis, of South Boardman, Michigan, visited this branch Sunday, October 2. Everyone enjoys having them here for they are like a father and mother to their many friends. "Uncle Jimmie," as he is called by everyone, testifies that he has been in the church sixty-two years, and these years have been well spent. He has always worked hard building up the cause of the restored gospel. Now that he is not able to carry so much of the burden, younger men who are his friends, are striving to qualify to help in his stead.

Brother Wayne Evans, of Traverse City, and Sister Thelma Summerville, of East Jordan, Michigan, surprised their many friends and relatives by announcing their marriage which took place October 7, 1931, at Levering, Michigan.

The local harvest festival was held September 25. At that time Traverse City people enjoyed having Saints from Ludington, Bendon, and Summit City. Meetings were well attended, and spiritual blessings were enjoyed.

Elder B. H. Doty and family, Ray Dick, wife and daughter, Marjorie, of Traverse City, also Brother and Sister James Davis of South Boardman, motored to Beaverton, Michigan, October 8, and attended the Central Michigan conference. Reports are that it was one of the largest conferences ever held. At every service on Sunday the church was filled to overflowing. Beaverton Branch has a church building of which it is well proud. The edifice is of stone and will stand as a monument to the little town and those who worked untiringly to build it. The Saints at Beaverton are growing in numbers.

Fresno, California

2412 Clay

Fresno Saints have been blessed in their missionary efforts. A mission has been established on West and Michigan Avenues at the home of Brother and Sister William F. Godfrey. Elder L. W. Roberts preached the first week, beginning August 22. Pastor T. F. Enix, Elders A. S. Votaw and Ethan Godfrey each preached one evening of the second week.

Fifteen of twenty nonmembers attended the meetings each evening. The orchestra and members of the choir did their part in furnishing a special number for each service. The children of the neighborhood asked for a church school. The group met Sunday, September 11, at two thirty o'clock, with Brother William F. Godfrey as superintendent of the school, Maxine Godfrey, junior girls' teacher, and Elder Roberts, junior boys' teacher.

Elder G. P. Levitt, district president, met with the Saints September 29, to elect officers for the coming year. The following branch officers were elected or retained: Elder T. F. Enix, president; Sister A. S. Votaw, secretary; Sister L. W. Roberts, church school director; Deacon W. F. Crane, treasurer; Elder A. S. Votaw, solicitor; Sister Ethel Godfrey, music director; Sister Maxine Godfrey, publicity agent, and Sister W. F. Godfrey, librarian. The church school director appointed Brother John Lighthowler as adult leader, Brother Harper as the young people's leader, and Sister Lillie Jennings in charge of the junior department.

Sunday, October 2, was rally and promotion day. Saints from Tulare, Dinuba, and Hanford were present. Everyone enjoyed the picnic lunch at Roeding Park.

Sister Altha Roberts became the bride of Brother Ray Richardson October 8, Pastor T. F. Enix reading the ceremony. The beautifully decorated church was crowded with relatives and friends. Sister L. W. Roberts, the bride's mother, played the "Wedding March." The bride was given away by her father. Marie Stanton was bridesmaid and Allen Roberts, brother of the bride, was best man. Letha Calton and Louise Roberts, sisters of the bride, sang, "I Love You Truly," and "The Sweetest Story Ever Told," respectively.

Thayer, Missouri

Ozark Saints Are Thankful

Many good and helpful acts have been performed in this group of Saints since it was last heard from in the Herald. Its number now totals about fifty active in the service of the Lord. All seem willing and eager to push the latter-day work toward its goal—Zion.

The Saints of Thayer feel that they have many things for which to be thankful. One thing especially pleasing is the recent visits of Saints from other States and countries. Sunday, October 16, there was with Thayer Saints Sister J. W. Adams from the Dutch West Indies. She is planning to come to Thayer to live in the Ozarks.

District President W. E. Haden was almost overwhelmed with joy at the success he and Elder A. M. Baker had in a debate near Ava. Brother Baker is a clear and fluent speaker and is well liked everywhere he goes. The prayers of the Saints of this region are with him and Brother Haden.

The women's department is doing good work. Recently they sponsored a pie supper which due to bad times netted them only fifteen dollars. But all who were there seemed glad to be able to help the church that much. Through the fine efforts of the president, Sister Hancock, the women are working hard. For this month they have a Halloween frolic planned from which they expect to collect a nice sum to go toward the church indebtedness.

Thursday, September 15, a son was born to Brother and Sister Harold Hancock.

At the last business meeting the branch official personnel was somewhat changed until regular election time. Brother H. E. Waite was voted to act as deacon; Sister Waite as chorister, and Brother Mayo, branch publicity agent. The balance of officers is as follows: Brother McLain, superintendent of school; Sister McLain, secretary; Elder Hancock, assistant pastor. Brother Davis is pastor, Sister Mayo, pianist. Leaders in the Sunday school are: Brother Hancock, Bible Class; Harold Hancock, senior young people; Sister Hancock, intermediates; and Sister Salem, beginners. At the Bible study Friday evening Brother McLain has the main class and Sister Waite, young people.

Celebrates Second Anniversary

Third Church, Columbus, Ohio

Amid the world-wide depression the church has the wonderful light of the Restoration accompanied by its hopes and blessings. It was Saturday, October 15, and Sunday, October 16, that the Saints of Third Columbus Church enjoyed the outpouring of God's Holy and Divine Spirit.

The congregation opened its second anniversary celebration with a mock trial. Neither prisoner nor witnesses were known until called upon by the constable, Homer Owens. District President A. E. Anderton and Floyd Rockwell were the prosecution. C. W. Clark was the unfortunate prisoner and defense. Of course the judge, F. C. Welsh, said "Sit down. Your objections are overruled." Nathan Weate was the Jewish pawnbroker; John Gabriel, an obedient witness. He said "Yes" or "No" when ordered to do so. John Knagie thought a lot but would not fall into "yes" for the prosecution.

Following the trial C. W. Clark gave a brief history of the beginning and growth of Third Church. This was followed by Nathan Weate entertaining in a character part.

District President Anderton talked concerning the future events of the church program, district and general, and an enjoyable evening was climaxed with sandwiches, doughnuts and coffee served by some of the women.

Sunday school the next day was in charge of Superintendent J. Knagie, and Pastor F. C. Welsh was in charge of the morning preaching service, announcing Floyd Rockwell as the speaker. "Lord, Increase Our Faith" was the anthem by the ladies from Dayton.

Then tables were prepared upstairs and a happy meal enjoyed.

Because it was necessary for him to leave in order to attend the evening service at Dayton, Brother Floyd Rockwell gave a sermon at two-thirty in the afternoon. The sisters from Dayton sang two anthems, after which the Dayton people started home. Then A. E. Anderton took the stand and delivered a sermon.

Patriarch J. E. Matthews was the evening speaker. C. H. Foster sang a solo, and Bishop H. E. French gave an interesting talk. Brother Lewis Walters was presented to the congregation as being one of the oldest Saints in Ohio's church history from the old Syracuse Branch. Third Church is happy to count him in its membership.

This chronicle of events on this celebration day can not indicate the presence of God's Spirit enjoyed at this time by a people who crowded the church. Everyone helped. The work of the deacons was a labor of love. The contribution of the sisters, the piano work by Mary Welsh and Annie May Logan, the helpfulness of the Dayton women, the flowers and plants which decorated the church, the newly washed and ironed curtains, the assistance of First and Second Churches at "the trial" and meetings—all combined to add to the occasion.

Tacoma, Washington

Elder A. C. Martin to Hold Missionary Meetings

Local Saints returned from the spiritual feast enjoyed at the Spokane, Portland, and Seattle and British Columbia reunion at Silver Lake Washington, with a stronger faith, a renewed determination to establish Zion, and fully consecrated to God's plans here on earth.

Following the reunion came the election of branch officers. Elder J. B. Snyder was sustained branch president. Brother Everett Miller is treasurer while Sister Ruth McGuire keeps the records. The office of publicity agent is held by Sister Arlene Snyder and Brother Ray Sowers is in charge of dramatics. The library is cared for by Sister Mildred Snyder. Brother E. H. Bradshaw replaced William E. Bronson as church school director. Brother Bronson has the adult division; Sister Lulu Sowers, the young people; and Sister Lottie Bronson retains the junior division.

The branch has lost one of its active leaders, Brother W. H. Kuhn, who is studying at the University of Washington in Seattle. He will attend services with Seattle Branch.

Twenty-three met at eight o'clock the morning of October 2 at the edge of a clear, quiet stream, to witness the baptism of two sisters, Sister Bradshaw and Sister Crane. Elder P. P. Reed came from Puyallup and assisted Elder J. B. Snyder in the confirmation.

Quiet music greeted the early comers to the church school, eliminating all confusion before services and putting everyone in a worshipful attitude. Consequently the sacrament service which followed was one only to be had as a result of everyone's being in a condition for a spiritual feast. Nonmembers present remarked at the wonderful meeting.

The Saints are looking forward to Elder A. C. Martin's coming the first part of November. He plans to hold a missionary series here.

Group Thrives and Increases

This branch is alive and growing. There have been seven baptisms this year with bright prospects for more.

Branch president A. W. Kriebel and Priests Keating, Kirkendall, Downard, and Williams are held in high esteem.

Elder Francis May recently gave a three-weeks' ministerial effort. The peculiar manner of presentation and the simplicity of his style enchanted every member present. Prophecies and healings accompanied the ministration of the word, and the branch is united as never before. The leading of the Spirit prevails. The question asked by many, "Where have I been all these years?" is being answered now: "Here am I, Lord, send me."

On last evening Elder Kriebel called the priesthood and members together, and a program was outlined which will prove a revival of interest to isolated Saints and shut-ins, also nonmembers. The Saints want to make this branch "the banner" in missionary activities. May each and everyone grow spiritually.

Brush Creek, Illinois

Evangelist Baldwin Holds Meetings

The Saints are enjoying a series of meetings conducted by Evangelist Richard Baldwin, beginning October 18.

Elder O. C. Henson talked concerning church finances and sacrifice the evening of October 16. He is an able speaker, and the Saints are pleased to have him and his family move to Brush Creek. They will be a great help to this branch.

Among the other recent speakers have been Brother Hayer, State Veterinarian from Carthage, and Halleck Milner.

October 2, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Knapp was blessed by Elders William Clements and John Henson.

October 16, the pastor, Elder William Clements, filled his appointment at Springerton.

This branch was saddened October 7, when one of its oldest members, Mrs. Volney Burgess, seventy-seven years of age, passed away. She had been afflicted with heart trouble for some time, having been confined to her bed since last May. The funeral was conducted by Elder O. C. Henson.

The department of recreation and expression which meets on Friday evening with good attendance is planning a Halloween social to be given some time during Halloween week.

The women's department meets each Thursday afternoon to quilt and study. Their class period opens at two o'clock, and they are studying church history in connection with the Doctrine and Covenants.

The October sacrament was marked by many encouraging and worth-while testimonies.

Miscellaneous

Conference Postponed

Southern New England educational conference will convene one week later than advertised, November 19 and 20, 7:30 p. m., at Somerville, Massachusetts. We are pleased to announce that President Floyd M. McDowell will be with us, as well as Apostle Paul M. Hanson as already announced.—Frank S. Dobbins, district secretary, 48 Fellsway West, Winter Hill, Massachusetts.

Joseph Smith III Centennial Anniversary Services

Kirtland District will celebrate this event at Kirtland, Ohio, November 4, 5, and 6. The first service on Sunday will be a prayer and testimony meeting at 8 a. m. This will be followed by a service in which an oration will be delivered on the life of Joseph Smith. There will be a special service in the afternoon, made up of special music and speeches commemorative of the event. We can not now announce the speakers, but we are trying for the most appropriate. Saints and friends are invited to bring their lunches with them and the large dining hall will be prepared for that event. On Friday evening the Kirtland Dramatic Club will give the Burgess pageant, and Saturday evening a stereopticon lecture will be given on the life of Joseph Smith. All should make a special effort to attend at least the Sunday services.—John L. Cooper, pastor; James E. Bishop, district president.

Joseph Smith Centennial in Southern Ohio

Southern Ohio as a district will observe the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith III (known as Joseph the just). This celebration will commence Friday evening, November 4, and continue all day Saturday, the 5th, and all day Sunday, the 6th. Special arrangements have been made for the care of all visiting Saints, and we urge all, priesthood and laity, to arrange to take in all of this special anniversary service. A splendid program has been arranged, and a copy of same has been sent to all branches in the district for reading. A sunrise sacrament service is a special part of this gathering. The service will open at 7 a. m., November 6. You should arrange to be present during the entire celebration. Your time will be well spent.—A. E. Anderton, district president.

Our Departed Ones

GRESTY.—John T. Gresty, evangelist and musical composer, was born in Castlemaine, Victoria, September 24, 1861. Very early in life he chose music as a profession, and ranked among the foremost musicians in Australia. From a friend in the musical profession he learned of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and finally united with this church on March 26, 1908, being baptized by Elder Alma C. Bar-more. From that time the spirit and ideals of the church dominated his entire life. He was ordained an elder June 10, 1914, and an evangelist December 24, 1916, since which he served the church actively in this office under General Conference appointment. He came to this country early in 1929, in order to supervise the production of his life work, the oratorio, "The Course of Time." His death probably occurred March 25, 1932. The remains were found October 11, 1932. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery October 15, 1932. Julia, his devoted and faithful companion, preceded him in death, August 26, 1927. He leaves to mourn two daughters, Myra, wife of Bishop A. W. Craig, of Melbourne, Australia; Elsa, wife of Elder W. J. Vaughn, of Wingham, New South Wales; a son, William, of Sydney, and three grandchildren. A memorial service was held at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday, 3 p. m., October 16, 1932. Sermon by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Elder John Blackmore in charge.

OLIVER.—James Oliver was born February 5, 1874, at Craborchard, Kentucky. Died July 22, 1932, at Springfeld, Missouri. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints November 29, 1903. He is survived by his wife, Ellen Hanna Oliver; mother, Elizabeth Oliver, of Craborchard, Kentucky; one son, Russell; three daughters, Mabel, Allene, and Betty Jean; four brothers, William, Frank, Charles and Richard; four grandchildren. His wife is a daughter of Elder Henry Spurling, of Springfield, Missouri. Mr. Oliver was a faithful member of the church and his friends and coworkers sorrow at their loss.

HARNDEN.—Alfred Carrol Harnden, son of David and Margaret Harnden, of Workworth, Ontario, was born at Eddystone, Ontario, September 17, 1892, was baptized into the church February 6, 1915, at Saint Thomas, Ontario. He married Lawedna Pearl, eldest daughter of Elder Robert C. Russell, formerly of the Quorum of Twelve, at Saint Thomas, Ontario. He died suddenly at Hamilton, Ontario, October 1, 1932. Surviving him are his wife, his sons, Robert and Kaye; his mother; a sister, Mrs. Mary Fletcher, and four brothers, Frederick, David, Alexander, and Norman. He was prominent in the social and business life of the city of Hamilton, where he was widely known and respected. A large number of Saints and friends were present at the funeral services attesting to their esteem and sympathy. Elder John Shields was in charge of the services, the sermon being by Elder R. S. Saltyards. Interment was in Hamilton Cemetery.

CORNELIUS.—James Cornelius was born February 11, 1881, at New Castle, New South Wales, Australia. He was baptized a member of the church September 17, 1899, at Wallsend, New South Wales, by J. Jones. Though he had suffered ill health for many years, his death at his home May 9, 1932, came as a shock to his many friends. He had attended church the previous day. The funeral took place on Wednesday, a short service being held at the church, Elder A. V. Robinson in charge. He also conducted the graveside service. Brother Cornelius was ordained a teacher in 1903, and an elder in 1910. He served as president of his home branch for many years. Brother and Sister Cornelius lived for some time in Independence where they formed many friendships. They were here in 1915. He leaves to mourn his departure his wife and seven children besides a host of friends. Elder A. V. Robinson preached a funeral sermon Sunday, May 22.

MAPSTON.—Elizabeth Mapston was born July 25, 1876, at Nanticoke, Pennsylvania. May 25, 1900, she was married to Gustave Erickson at Great Falls, Montana. Became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints November 4, 1917, at Deer Lodge, Montana, being baptized by Elder George W. Thorburn. Died September 14, 1932, at the family home at Anaconda, Montana. She leaves to mourn, her husband, five children: Mrs. H. E. Mason, Redwood, California; Mrs. W. E. Staton, Anaconda; Mrs. L. C. Carter, Lead, South Dakota; Henry Erickson, Springfield, Missouri; and William Erickson, Anaconda. The funeral services were in charge of D. L. Allen.

PINE.—Henry Edward Pine was born in Portsmouth, New Jersey, August 29, 1865. He departed this life October 8, 1932, the victim of an attack of heart trouble while he was working in a mine near Alpha, Illinois. His wife and one son preceded him to the great beyond. He leaves one son, George, of Rock Island, Illinois, and many other relatives and friends to mourn his departure. United with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints many years ago and was faithful to his covenant with Christ. He was respected by all who knew him, was a man of integrity, a peacemaker, and an honored citizen. A large crowd attended his funeral held at Alpha. The sermon was by L. G. Holloway, of Lamoni, Iowa. He was buried beside his wife and son in Independence, Missouri.

WILLEY.—Charles Edwin Willey was born September 10, 1851, near Marietta, Ohio, raised from this life September 22, 1932, at his home in Lamoni, Iowa. He was the second son of Ely and Elizabeth Willey. With his parents he moved to Montrose, Iowa, in 1854, and later they moved to New London, Iowa, where he grew to manhood. May 31, 1874, he married Ella Jane Stillman, and to this union six children were born: Sylvanus (deceased); Mrs. Halcyon Jackson, Lamoni, Iowa; Roscoe C. (deceased); Rufus T., Burlington, Iowa; Theodosia (deceased), and James A., Shreveport, Louisiana. November 14, 1896, he moved to Osceola, Iowa, and in 1903, moved to Lamoni, where he made his home during the remainder of his life. Until 1902, he was a farmer. Was baptized a member of the church in 1889, at New London, by Elder Fred Johnson. Shortly after he was ordained a priest, later an elder, and then to the quorum of seventy. He was called to the missionary work of the church in 1902, and continued active in this work until he was superannuated in 1920. Since that time he labored locally as opportunity and physical ability permitted. Missionary work took him to the States of Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Colorado, and Washington. Left to mourn besides his wife and children, are five grandchildren, four great-grandchildren, three sisters: Mrs. Lavinia McDonald, Keokuk, Iowa; Mrs. Florence Beers, Salem, Iowa, and Mrs. Helen Wiley, Camden, South Carolina, other relatives and many friends. He was a zealous member of the church, a kind and loving father and husband, a good neighbor, and a loyal friend. The funeral was held at Lamoni, Iowa, September 25, the sermon by Elder Amos Berve, assisted by Elder Joseph Lane. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni.

MOWRY.—Sophia Burkhart Mowry was born in Sundusky County, Ohio, July 23, 1854. She was the eldest of seven children born to George and Rosanna Burkhart. In 1873, she was married to Daniel M. Mowry at Edon, Ohio, which was their home until 1880, when they moved West, settling near Parsons, Kansas. The family located in Saint Louis in 1903. Three children, her husband, father, mother, a brother, and two grandsons preceded her to the great beyond. She leaves to mourn her departure two sons, Wilbur J., of Fresno, California, and Frank E., of Los Angeles, California; also two daughters, Mrs. Anna Harman, of Inglewood, California, and Mrs. Myrtle Trowbridge, of Nashville, Arkansas; also seven grandchildren, two great-granddaughters; three sisters, Mrs. Ida Eischenood, of Oklanoma City, and Mrs. Anna Richman, of Bryan, Ohio, and Mrs. Sarah Suffel, of Edgerton, Ohio; two brothers, Frank and Samuel Burkhart, of Edgerton, Ohio; other relatives, and a host of friends. She was a true Christian since early girlhood, worshiping and working in several churches. For a number of years her mind has been disturbed on the subject of her baptism, and on August 23 last, she identified herself with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which act brought peace and contentment. For the past ten months, she has been a patient sufferer, and was called home Thursday afternoon, October 13, 1932.

BAILLIE.—James Baillie was born in Slamanan, Stirlingshire, Scotland, October 6, 1853, and departed from this life September 11, 1932. He was united in marriage to Janet Wilson, February 23, 1879, and to this union were born six children, two daughters and one son having preceded him in death. He came to America in the year 1881, locating his home in Pennsylvania; moved to Scranton, Kansas, in 1883, and resided on his farm two and one half miles south of Scranton for the last thirty-five years. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints July 6, 1889, and was ordained an elder October 13, 1895. Was a devoted member all his church life. He was also a member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge at Scranton.

ton, Kansas. Besides his aged companion, he leaves three daughters: Mrs. L. C. Oilphant, Comanche, Oklahoma; Mrs. Dave Little, Burlingame, Kansas, and Mrs. Jean Hatfield, Ottawa, Kansas; one brother, Alex Baillie, Burlingame, Kansas; nine grandchildren; one great grandchild, and a host of other relatives and friends. The funeral was at the Methodist Episcopal Church in Scranton; sermon by James A. Thomas, assisted by B. F. Deller.

BURGESS.—Margaret Ann Burgess, daughter of Robert and Sarah Vest, was born in Orange County, Indiana, July 27, 1855. Moved to Illinois with her parents when she was seventeen years of age. She married Volney L. Burgess April 20, 1876, and to them eight children were born. A daughter, Mary Ann, died in infancy and a son, Floyd, preceded the mother in death more than a year ago. She united with the church August 10, 1913, being baptized by Elder S. S. Smith, and was faithful to her belief to the end. Passed peacefully away October 7, 1932. Left to mourn are her husband, four sons: Halleck and Lewis, of Johnsonville; Robert, of Xenia, Illinois, and George, of Centraillia; two daughters, Joice Ward, of Johnsonville, and Lizzie Henson, of Dixon, Illinois; two sisters, three brothers, thirty grandchildren, and twenty-eight great-grandchildren besides a host of friends. Funeral services were conducted at the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church by Elder O. C. Henson. Interment was in the cemetery nearby.

McLEAN.—Archibald Thomas McLean was born April 7, 1868. He was the third son of Charles and Isabel McLean. His father, mother, and three sisters preceded him in death. Married Annie Kincade in 1913, and to them one son, John, was born. At that time his wife passed away. He was baptized a member of the church by Elder Fred Gregory in 1905. He died July 2, 1932. Left to mourn are his son, John, and three brothers: William F., of Dundalk, Ontario; Samuel, of Roslin, and Charles, at home, and two sisters: Mrs. Isabel Booker, of Independence, and Mrs. Minnie Pycoc, of Toronto. Interment was in Thomasburgh Cemetery. The funeral service was in charge of Fred McLean, of Arthur, Ontario, and the sermon was by D. W. Cameron, of Toronto, Ontario.

SIM.—Sarah Jane Fawcett was born in Yorkshire, England, October 13, 1850. Came from England as a babe of eighteen months of age. Later in life was married to Samuel Overfield. To this union five children were born. Upon Mr. Overfield's death, she married Robert Sim, with whom she settled upon Manitoulin Island, where she remained till the time of her death. Here she heard the gospel and with her husband was baptized by Elder R. B. Howlett, April 29, 1907. Died at The Slash, Manitoulin Island, September 27, 1932, at the ripe old age of eighty-two, leaving to mourn her husband, Robert Sim, and five children: Mrs. William Shea, Beattie, Saskatchewan; Mrs. James Case, The Slash, Ontario; Samuel Thomas, William Neil, and John James Overfield, The Slash, Ontario. Interment was at Hilly Grove Cemetery, September 29, the funeral service being conducted by Elder H. A. Dayton, assisted by Elder Humphrey Beaudin.

President F. M.
McDowell's Message to the Church

Urges Wider Distribution of the Saints' Herald

"Eternal vigilance is the price of our progress," said President F. M. McDowell recently to a member of the Herald staff. "Only those Saints who are alert, informed, and up to date as to the purpose, work, and needs of the church can be counted as loyal in the present crisis. . . . The Saints' Herald is the one great connecting link between the church and its members."

Now that there is only one periodical for the adult membership of the church, it ought to be in every Latter Day Saint home.

The Herald must supplement the efforts of a reduced missionary force. Only thus can the work of the church go on.

RECOLLECTIONS OF
"BROTHER JOSEPH"

By Willis W. Kearney

I was baptized with a number of other young people in the creek which flows through Brother Joseph's pasture just west of Lamoni. Brother Joseph had always taken a kindly interest in me, and especially so since my baptism. He always stopped and shook hands and spoke to me pleasantly.

It was perhaps later in the summer after my baptism that I met him about a block south of the Herald Office. He had just lately returned from a missionary trip. He stopped and shook hands and said, "Well, Willis, how goes the battle?" To my fourteen-year-old mind the word battle meant physical fighting. I was a bit puzzled and said, "Battle? Why, I haven't been fighting." He laughed in his hearty way and said, "Well, maybe life hasn't been much of a battle to you so far, but most of us find it a fierce fight or battle between the forces of good and evil in our nature." He continued with a few more words which I do not now recall. I have often thought of this circumstance, and have found it to be true, that life is indeed a battle, with the forces of evil sometimes in the ascendancy, but there has always been with me, as he pointed out there would be, a source of ever-present help from the great and powerful God whom he served.

My memory is a storehouse of many such pleasant happenings, but I will mention only one more at this time, the time when I last saw him. This was while I was located at Lowry City, Missouri, engaged in running a local paper and printing office. It was at the spring conference in Independence; I do not recall the year. I had come up for the week-end and did not know that Brother Joseph was losing his sight. I entered the east front door of the Stone Church and met him coming out of the auditorium with his light overcoat over his arm. There was no one else around. I stepped up and said, "How do you do, Brother Joseph." He looked at me in a puzzled and uncertain manner. I said, "Don't you know me?" He answered slowly, "No, I don't believe I do." I told him my name. His face lighted up with recollection and he said, "Oh, is it Willis?" I said, "Yes." He said, "Well, help me on with my coat," and thrust it out at me and turned and stuck his arms back. I helped him put the coat on, and just as I had finished that service Fred. M. came in the west front door and escorted his father away. That was the last time I saw him, and I have been pleased to think I could render him even that small service. (From a letter to E. A. Smith.)

An Opportunity Pointed Out in President Smith's Message

The Cause of the Church Will Be Presented Between Thanksgiving and Christmas

In other columns of the Herald there have been and will be presented to the church members by the general financial officers, the problems which confront us in money matters. And there has been and will be presented information of some of the methods adopted to meet the situation. To the study of our finances and the best ways to deal with our creditors and meet our obligations, the men of the Presiding Bishopric have given careful and prayerful attention, and the tasks with which they have been burdened in administering the affairs of their department have been onerous and wearing. They have patiently and courageously continued at their posts despite trying times and many discouragements. Through it all they have manifested a faith in God and the church which has been a support to them and a heartenment to their fellow workers. To administer the affairs of the office of Presiding Bishopric impartially, faithfully, and wisely, is a task and a burden to which only a fine devotion could hold these men. The members of the church can well afford to show their appreciation by standing helpfully by. And to do this, a fine opportunity is offered.

The time from Thanksgiving to Christmas or the Holidays has been set aside as a period in which special efforts are to be made by all, having as the special object in view to close the fiscal year without deficit in actual operating expenses. The whole budget which included a reduction of interest-bearing debts by a large sum, seems now beyond our reach, but to raise enough money in the period designated to assure the running expenses and thus meet the obligations falling due the first month of the year 1933 seems quite within the reach of the Saints. To do this is now the call which Bishop Curry is making to the church.

This is our opportunity.

It demands concerted effort, an effort the Bishopric are quite sure the Saints will make. Suggestions are being issued to local workers on methods to be used to guarantee that every Saint will have opportunity to do his full share. To these suggestions we call the attention of our workers, and say again, here is the opportunity to show our devotion to the church. Let us match the devotion the men of the Bishopric are displaying. F. M. S.

The Women to the Rescue

Independence Women Raise $357 in First Weekly Sacrifice Offering

If the women of Independence can keep up the record established in the first one of their weekly sacrifice offerings, they will make a substantial contribution toward helping the church in its problems. A total sum of $357 was brought to the bishop as a first offering.

The plan is this: Each week envelopes are distributed to church homes by women workers, and the wives and mothers then take charge of them. At the end of the week the workers collect the envelopes, which contain the contributions and signatures of the givers. This weekly plan will continue until the women's leaders judge that the church will no longer need the special offering.

Each woman is supposed to save from her weekly food and expense budget something to give to the church. The sacrifice will be small, and will hardly be missed in some cases. Everyone can contribute, and need not feel ashamed in homes where there is unemployment if the donation is small. The main point is that the offering is made regularly every week.

A most important feature of this offering is that it is conducted through the home, rather than through church meetings, and thus contributions are lost if members fail to attend church. Being conducted through the home, no one is missed, and all the contributions together make a large sum without entailing hardships on any one.

The women of Independence are to be commended for the fine spirit in which they have gone about this work. It is to be hoped that their present energy and enthusiasm will continue, and it is believed that the women will carry on their work to an effective end.

Jesus Calls Us

Jesus calls us to free our minds of trouble and doubt. If you are not aware of the tremendous human need of this, reflect on the various devices to which people subject themselves in order to escape these things. Even our modern sophisticated world is full of those patent medicines of human thought that have ever deceived and misled humanity. In times of depression the fortune tellers flourish on the credulity of people who want some assurance about the future; newspapers print the ancient hokum of the astrologists. Modern men think they are too smart for religion but they seek satisfaction in vain from other things which their fathers used to get from the religion of Jesus. The religion of Jesus gives us peace and assurance in exchange for fear and doubt. Generations of men and women testify that this is true. The message is as true and effective today as it ever was.

Hope for Better Movies

Passage of Brookhart Bill Would Free Local Operators of Pernicious Restrictions

People often complain about the quality of pictures shown in local theatres, and wonder why their complaints do so little good. We are told that the practice of "block-booking" by which the great producing companies force local theatre managers to buy lists of movie titles in lots of twenty to fifty or more, without ever a chance of seeing or selecting the individual numbers, is responsible for a condition that the manager regrets but can not escape. He can either buy in lots as the producer wishes to sell, or he can go without the pictures.

The Brookhart Bill, order number 1079, scheduled to come before Congress shortly after it convenes in December, is directed against this evil and other evils that have grown up with the distribution of motion picture films.

Persons interested in the improvement of motion picture entertainment favor the passage of the bill. It is hoped that it will pass and that all people who can do so will exercise their influence with members of Congress for favorable action on it.

A Lesson in Loyalty

Any man who has ever had to depend on the cooperation of others knows the bitter disappointment of finding them unreliable, inefficient, contrary, and sometimes actually opposing him and blocking his progress instead of helping him.

Loyalty is one of the most precious of human qualities, and it is made more valuable by the infrequency with which it is found. One of the classic passages on the subject was written many years ago by Elbert Hubbard, famous author and lecturer, and founder of the Roycrofters society. For the benefit of our readers we present it here:

"If you work for a man, in heaven's name work for him. If he pays wages that supply you your bread and butter, work for him, speak well of him, think well of him, stand by him, and stand by the institution he represents. I think if I worked for a man, I would work for him. I would not work for him a part of his time, but all of his time. I would give an undivided service or none. If put to a pinch, an ounce of loyalty is worth a pound of cleverness. If you must vilify, condemn and eternally disparage, why, resign your position, and when you are outside, damn to your heart's content. But, I pray you, so long as you are a part of an institution, do not condemn it. Not that you will injure the institution—not that—but when you disparage the concern of which you are a part, you disparage yourself."

This has a lesson for the members of the church, and for workers as well. An ounce of loyalty is worth tons of ability that can not be depended upon. A few words simply and loyally said are worth more than voluble eloquence that speaks equivocally. Perhaps the worst creature with whom we have to deal anywhere is the one who is loyal when he is at headquarters and visiting with the officers, and subversive in his speech when he is abroad among the branches.

We need real loyalty to each other, to the church, and to the best interests of our country. Times like these demand all the loyalty we can deliver.

Curtailing Church Work

I have recently returned from a meeting. . . . I heard story after story of churches which are curtailing their work because of the depression. To me, this seems like hospitals running half time because of an epidemic. . . . The thought of curtailing church activities today and especially curtailing gifts to churches seems preposterous. For whatever else we curtail, let it not be our support of churches, charities, and other welfare work.—Roger Babson.

"Not what we give but what we share,
For the gift without the giver is bare."

Men's minds, yes, even their very souls, incline to get close and stuffy and cobwebbed with the years, and they need freshening and sweetening out more even than do the rooms in our houses on the dust-laden streets of great cities. We allow prejudices and antipathies and dislikes and little bitter-nesses to settle down in odd corners here and there and upon the windows through which we look out upon life and duty and our fellowman, until health within or freshness and wholesomeness of the look without become quite impossible. We need to open the windows and let the Sun shine in and the winds of Heaven blow right through our souls. The walls of that inner house in which we live are not very attractive by reason of the sordid thoughts and unwholesome ambitions that we have been sketching upon them, and some new decorations and adornments are quite in order. Indeed, the time for a real house-cleaning has come.—Selected.

STUDY OUTLINES

JOSEPH SMITH ON PRIESTHOOD (See pages 1102-05.)

1. What is priesthood? Does it signify divine approval—"Just as I am"—or is it rather an opportunity to become a fit worker with the Master?

2. Can a man make a mistake while acting in the priesthood? Will God let him err? Does he "act by virtue of the priesthood vested in him"?

3. Because an ordained man has enjoyed a wonderful spiritual experience, and even spoken in the name of the Lord, should he infer that his thoughts thereafter are divinely inspired? Or should he exercise an especial care over himself to be sure that he does not put his own thoughts and wishes for a divine command?

4. What respect should we show to members of the priesthood and why?

5. Can the church compel obedience? What can be done with those who refuse to obey?

6. How would the Golden Rule help in a church trial? How would a love for the church and for the Master?

7. Does diversity of labor and of responsibility mean inequality? Or is each a part of the perfect whole? How should we be equal?

8. What is the primary purpose of the church?

9. Is the church often helped by an insistence on "rights" whether of priesthood or others? Is it ever so helped? Or should the first thought of the true priest (man called of God) be the good of the whole church, the helping of others, even when they are wrong? Does your answer to this justify a wrong-doer in insisting on supineness or a complete submission by those set in the church to maintain order? When an officer acts firmly should it be to maintain "my rights"? Or to protect the body of the church and the cause of Christ? (See Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2.)

10. Church deportment has improved, we hope and believe, but there is still room for improvement. The priesthood should set an example—lead others to God and respect to His house.

11. Why should we be careful about attacking other churches and their belief? What should be our approach? Do attacks help?

12. Why should we look forward to the gathering? Will it help if we are not first prepared to live together in righteousness?

13. What is common consent? Is it unanimous agreement?

14. Is it right or at all excusable for a minority to remain away because not satisfied with those chosen to office? Does this wrong excuse the majority in coercion?

15. Has a presiding officer the right to act when elected by a majority? Why then should he think of declining and how decline? When some refuse to come to church; when a minority refuse to work with the chosen officers, they do wrong. The minority has no right to insist on having its way. But in such a case how should the majority proceed? Should they try to coerce? If a presiding officer declines to act, because a minority will not work with him, when, why, and how should he withdraw?

He should only withdraw in such a way as to reunite the branch, placing the good of the work and his love of God, before his personal honor. He should endeavor then to have one chosen on whom all can unite, and should try therefore to support and help.

16. What is our creed? Why have we no creed in the sense used by President Joseph Smith?

17. How great should our freedom be in the church? To do as we please? Or to learn all the truth we can?

We need to develop a new conception of the church as such. Instead of allowing it to be considered as an "Ark of Salvation," it needs to become a discipleship, a school in Christian living.—Harry C. Munro, in International Journal of Religious Education.

Freedom in the Church

(By the late President Joseph Smith.)

We have ever held that there was freedom in the church for the expansion of the intellect and the affections, for the increase of that which tends to make men wiser and better, for the attainment unto every higher, holier good to which men may legitimately aspire; that there was a right to think, to speak, to act, subject only to the general rules of ecclesiastical government under which church unity is secured unto us, and the specific commandments of God unto the church.

"Neither be ye called master," is in the same strong spirit as, "But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant"; "for one is your master, even he whom your heavenly Father sent, which is Christ."

We can not rejoice in schism, nor in the arraying of brethren in spiritual controversy, one against another; but having understood that the gospel was for the elevation of man, for the opposing and suppression of evil and falsehood; for the upbuilding of right and true principles, which honorable men, seeking for life eternal, may advocate, sustain, and abide by; and to which the outcast and depraved may seek for deliverance from their depravity and alienation from God, we can but hail with gladness the evidences daily accruing of an early return to right ways of thinking, when men will, in their desires for the advancement of the cause of God, dare to counsel together freely and fairly, without fear of censure or hate, or the exercise upon them of arbitrary power, wielded by their fellow men. NEWS BRIEFS

Cosmopolitan Student Body at Graceland

Twenty-five States and four foreign countries are this year represented on the Graceland Campus, maintaining the college's cosmopolitan standards, according to the Graceland Tower. Iowa leads in the enrollment race with a total of 65; Missouri takes second place with 22, and Illinois third place with 13. The foreign countries represented are the Netherlands by Pete Duyzer, of Rotterdam; Canada by Ross Mortimore and Clifford Wood; Australia by Walter Johnson, and the Society Islands by Pataha Samuella, of Tahiti.

Portland District Young People Organize

Fifty-five young people, four officers, and nine leaders were present at the organization meeting of the young people of Portland District the afternoon of October 9. Their enthusiasm and zeal were contagious, and soon they had elected Perry Hunt to act as their president. The youth of this district are eager to unify themselves and begin working toward the objectives of the church. Their meeting was a part of the district conference held at Portland October 7, 8, and 9.

Definite Results in Australasian Conference

Saints of Southern Queensland District feel that their conference, held early in August at the church in South Brisbane, achieved certain definite results. These can not be gauged by the numbers that attended or by the volume of business transacted, according to the Gospel Standard, but by the abiding assurance that the Spirit of God had been present, bringing consolation and comfort to the aged and afflicted, renewed zeal and encouragement to the strong and the weak, and peace and rejoicing to all.

Things Are Happening

The local Harvest Festival movement, suggested by general church officials, has gained ground this year. Among those that have received wide attention and comment were festivals at Manchester, England; Kirtland, Ohio; Lamoni Stake (Iowa); Traverse City, Michigan, and Webb City, Missouri.

Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith opened a two-week series of missionary meetings at Second Branch, Saint Joseph, Missouri, October 23. He is winning good response in interest and attendance.

Fifteen received certificates of credit from the general church for class work done on "Church Objectives," following the Webb City, Missouri, sacrament service in September.

The helpful sermons and counsel of Apostle D. T.

Williams and Elder R. S. Salyards were gratefully received by Saints of London (Ontario) District at their conference, October 15 and 16.

From Hawaii comes news of the death of Sister Mary Piltz, September 13, who was reared by Queen Liliuokalani. Her maiden name was Mary Pinoham, and she was one of the five girls cared for by the Queen. She has been a member of the church since 1896, when she was baptized by G. J. Waller.

Stone Church Saints were happy to welcome into their midst last Sunday Apostle M. A. McConley, of Los Angeles. He assisted in the Graceland program Sunday evening.

Parkersburg Combines Memorials

October 30, was rally day for Parkersburg Branch, West Virginia, and the occasion for the celebration of its twelfth anniversary. The branch was organized in October of 1920, by Elder Thomas Newton. On this day, too, the Saints commemorated the centennial anniversary of the birth of the late Prophet, Joseph Smith. A. B. Kirkendall, of Southern Ohio District, was the speaker.

Apostle John W. Rushton in Norway

Apostle John W. Rushton spent twenty-eight days in Norway during the latter part of September and early October, laboring with the missionary there, Elder V. D. Ruch. These two ministers are now working in Sweden and Denmark.

Brother Rushton's visit to the Scandinavian countries has been a source of new inspiration and courage to the Saints. He and Brother Ruch have been very busy, two of their chief accomplishments being the organization of a branch at Porsgrunn, Norway, and another at Oslo. A letter from Brother Ruch in another column of this issue, gives a summary of their work.

Independence Women Organize to Boost Church Finances

The women of Independence, twenty-five hundred strong, are organizing their forces to boost church finances, with emphasis on paying long overdue missionary allowances. Their first week's work was checked to their credit on Monday, showing that a sum of three hundred and fifty-seven dollars had been raised through personal sacrifice and special activity of the women.

All the women's clubs and groups have banded themselves together for this effort under the leadership of Sister Lottie Koehler. They hope to make this a demonstration of what the women can do in a material way.

The Biological Menace of Alcohol

By Bishop A. B. Phillips

The people of this nation will vote on a principle of vital importance when they cast their ballots for presidential, senatorial, and representative candidates on November 8. Their vote will either support the return of liquor license, which under state control will mean the return of the saloon in at least some of the states, or it will support such constructive and preventive measures as will guarantee against the saloon in every state and will afford better state cooperation toward the prohibition of liquor and the suppression of its evils. Before casting his vote, every citizen should carefully consider what his course will mean to the future of this nation and the lives of its millions of people.

There is one aspect of this subject about which scarcely anything has recently been said, and yet it is of far greater moment to the welfare of the people today and of the age to come than any other single factor. This momentous factor is the biological aspect of the liquor menace. The material available on this subject is so full of interest, so extensive, and so voluminous, that only an incomplete statement of it can be made here. But that statement will present some astonishing facts supported by the highest authority, and will show that the ablest scientists of the world warn us of the gravest danger that ever confronted this or any other people in any age known to history.

PROHIBITION HAS CHECKED RACE DESTRUCTION

An astounding part of the statement I shall make is, that under liquor license alcohol had begun to destroy the race to an alarming extent in our own nation. For this statement I have both statistical and scientific proof. As a result of prohibition, however, the deadly work of human destruction has been checked to a great extent, and if continued effectively will save our race from the most terrible consequences that ever threatened mankind. This is no imaginary danger invented by false alarmists, but is as real as disease, degeneracy, crime, and poison are real. Alcohol is pronounced by the world's greatest scientists to be a race poison that progressively increases its deadly effects with continued use, until finally a condition of insanity, criminality, epilepsy, functional degeneracy, and physical deterioration result.

First, let us note the actual mortality produced by liquor, proof of which is beyond any dispute, and is shown by statistics of all civilized countries. The increase of drinking always increases the death rate.

Doctor Haven Emerson, Professor of Public Health Administration at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, states:

"We find in American experience within the present generation that the mortality rises above that of abstainers in proportion to the extent of the use of alcohol, to 122 among occasional users of alcohol, to 142 among temperate, and to 212 in so-called moderate steady drinkers, compared with 100 among total abstainers.

"Daily users of alcohol from moderate to excessive according to their own testimony, show excess mortalities of 18 per cent to 86 per cent. If there is excessive use to the point of intoxication not more than three times a year, the excess mortality may be as high as 331 per cent."—The Annals, September, 1932, pages 54, 55.

The statistics of Belgium, Denmark, Switzerland, Germany, and other European countries show that the death rate increases when drinking increases. United States statistics prove this in our own nation also, there being a gradual decline in recent years. The Census Bureau has recently reported figures which were published in the daily press, as follows:

"In 1930 figures reveal the death rate from alcoholism was 3.5 per 100,000, including all states except Texas. In 1929 it was 3.7, and was 4.0 in 1927 and 1928. The rate in 1910 was 5.4."—Kansas City Star, June 22, 1932.

NATIONS WARNED AGAINST ALCOHOL

These statistics support those of other sources, and show that since prohibition the death rate from liquor has declined more than 35 per cent. The deterioration of a people who drink is so great and so dangerous that leading nations have warned their citizens against this menace. In Canada the government warns its people by stating:

"Alcohol has a powerful and harmful effect upon a man's body and upon his mind. . . . There is no reason to doubt the testimony of scientists and life insurance experiences, that the so-called moderate use of alcohol shortens life."

The government of France attempted to stem the tide of alcohol destruction by the use of posters which stated:

"Alcoholism is chronic poisoning resulting from the habitual use of alcohol even when this is not taken in amounts sufficient to produce drunkenness. . . . The hygienic faults of parents are visited upon their children; if the latter survive the first few months of life, they are threatened with idiocy or epilepsy, or still worse, are a little later on carried off by tuberculosis, meningitis or consumption. . . . Alcoholism is one of the most frightful scourges—whether it be regarded from the point of view of the existence of the family or of the future of the country."—See Alcohol and the Human Body.

The Foundations of Our Faith

VII.—Man's Free Agency

By Elbert A. Smith

"The Lord God gave unto man that he should act for himself."—2 Nephi 1: 99.

"In the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency."—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7.

Back of every missionary endeavor, every pastoral appeal and every experience in social reform there is the belief that man has the power to choose between good and evil. Yet it is surprising how many times this ability to choose has been denied. In many schools of human thought, philosophical, scientific, theological, and political men have reached a negative conclusion on this question. Many systems of philosophy have held that man has no real freedom of choice. It has been argued, for example, that we are moved always by impulses which originate within us without volition on our part, and since we are moved by impulses it follows, according to the argument, that we must always obey the strongest impulse, hence have no real choice.

A wiser conclusion is that we have the intelligence, if we will use it, to judge between impulses and choose the noblest one, which presently will become in our lives the stronger impulse. As one writer has said, "Will is the soul's power to choose between motives."

The science of a generation ago represented man as being a mechanism, all his reactions, emotional and intellectual, the result of mechanical forces. Being a machine and moved by forces which he did not understand, he had no real choice. This thought has failed to hold the conviction and belief of the scientific world.

In theology the Calvinistic schools of belief held to the doctrine of foreordination. This doctrine averred that in the beginning certain men were foreordained to everlasting salvation and others were foreordained to eternal damnation. This division was not based on any good or bad works they had done or would do or could do. It was the arbitrary will of God. They had no choice in the matter and their number was so fixed that it could never be changed. Hundreds of thousands of men and women believed in this doctrine and this creed at the time when the angel told Joseph Smith the creeds of the day were wrong. Since that day this great dogma has been repudiated by practically all sects of the "Christian" world.

Mohammedanism had a similar concept. It was represented that in the beginning Allah took a lump of clay representing the human race which he divided into two parts. One part he threw into Paradise and said, "These go to heaven and I care not"; the other he threw into a place of torment and said, "These go to hell and I care not."

In politics the freedom of choice and the freedom of the will has been repudiated often by despots of various schools, it matters not whether it be the Communism of Russia or the dictatorship of Mussolini. Any political system that suppresses and denies the right of the people to express themselves denies the freedom of the human will.

SUPERFICIAL MODERN CONCLUSIONS

In a great deal of modern thought which does not take the time to be philosophical and is not careful enough to be scientific, we have a denial not thought out but still quite real. Men say, What difference does it make anyway? They do not perceive any distinct line between right and wrong and do not care to differentiate. Or they say, I know that it is wrong but I just can't help it. Jesus said of the apostles, "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." Often in the cases referred to here the flesh is able enough but the spirit is not willing.

We have some, moved by half-digested ideas of psychology, who think they must "let themselves go." They must "express" themselves; must not repress their desires or they will get a "complex" somewhere inside of them; if they repress their desires something terrible will happen. One thing is sure, if they do not repress their desires something terrible will happen; or rather if they do not exercise their choice and will and direct their impulses in right channels. Those who give their lives in constructive endeavor, building homes, rearing families, helping in the community, the nation, and the church, find outlets for their driving forces and impulses in legitimate ways.

THE AFFIRMATION

In spite of this frequent and long-continued denial of free will, it is a singular and outstanding fact that in the common law of all nations in all lands and at all times men have been held responsible for

Short Talks for Home Missionaries

The Invitation

By Leonard Lea

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Revelation 3: 20.

The all-inclusive mercy and kindness of that utterance is only paralleled by one other statement that fell from the Master's lips,

"Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls."—Matthew 11: 28.

To a vexed and troubled world Jesus comes with a message and an invitation of hope. Everywhere else men meet with limitations and obstacles and circumscribed opportunities; in Jesus they find release from bondage and the assurance of everlasting life. Everywhere else men meet with closed doors, with Jesus they find an open door and a warm invitation of hope.

"Come unto me," He says to you, and it is a true and sincere welcome. Though you may be poor He does not exclude you. You are not welcomed for riches or fine clothing, nor for any of the externals that cost so much and mean so little to the inner man. Though you may labor, and be burdened down with care and trouble, Jesus still welcomes you. He welcomes you not like a proud monarch to his court, not as a vassal returning from some errand of service, but as a brother. Though he is great, his heart is not proud; but humble, even more humble than your own. He promises you rest—rest not alone of the body, but that more perfect rest which is peace to the soul.

Many generations of men—"all kinds and conditions of men," as a very old prayer puts it—have accepted this invitation and have found it genuine and sincere. They have tested its promises and found them true. They have taken the Savior at his word, and have found Him all that he claimed to be. There is no fraud nor pretense about Him. You can be sure that His words are not the trickery and deceit of the exploiter. Jesus is true and his promises are true, and those who seek to find Him will encounter testimonies to His goodness wherever they go in the world.

You may hear much said of the failures of individuals who carry the name of Christian. You may hear much criticism of the churches that bear his name. Everywhere that you find the work of man there you will also find the signs of man's imperfections. It takes a long time to reform and redeem an individual; and any society which is constantly losing its old members and gaining great numbers of new ones is bound to need reformation and redemption for those new additions.

The churches receive as many criticisms as other organizations of men do, and it would be a queer thing if they did not. But you will find the character of Jesus beyond criticism. Even those who have most inveighed against the churches have admitted the purity of His purposes, the nobility of his ideals, the inspiring effect of his words, and the unselfish perfection of his example.

Such a Savior invites you to sit at his feet. He will teach you the way of life which you have found it difficult to understand. He will give you hope and faith for times of trial and doubt. Jesus is the great physician of souls. Have you yet heard and accepted his invitation, "Come unto me"? Millions of men of countless generations have heard and accepted that invitation. They have found Jesus real and sincere. They testify that Jesus has brought great good and imperishable happiness into their lives. Have you learned of Jesus?

Jesus invites you to share in the glory of his kingdom. That kingdom, as he once informed a great ruler of his own times, "is not of this world," but it is none the less real. Though it is but a spiritual kingdom, it has outlasted all the other kingdoms that lived in its day, and will outlast all, even that powerful Antichrist which arose in the world, which John the Revelator foresaw. As a spiritual kingdom its first foundation in fact must be in the hearts and minds of men, and it must be raised anew in the hearts and minds of every new generation. He once told his followers, "The kingdom of God is within you." It matters little in ultimate effect whether He meant to say, "The kingdom of God is within you," or, "The kingdom of God is among you." The great fact is that it is ever near us, and that its invitation to every one of us is a perpetually standing one. The door is always open. Jesus and his message are always there. There are no holidays nor vacations in that kingdom, and the pilgrim from life is always welcome, no matter at what hour he may arrive.

People often laugh these days, when they hear talk of this spiritual kingdom. They think that they are related to the animals—a mere higher kind of beast. This thought leads them to the conclusion that they are without spiritual destiny, and they begin to act somewhat like beasts. While they do so believe and act, they forget that their most precious possessions are products of that kingdom of the spirit which they pretend to despise.

I do believe that, in spite of all the skepticism and materialism in the world, love is one of its most precious possessions. But this beautiful thing we call love is not a product of anything that concerns our materialistic world, whose only substitutes for it are lust and passion. There is that sister of love which is friendship; and there are all the cousins of these two—trust, honor, faith, devotion. All of these have no basis for recognition in the mechanistic and materialistic conceptions of life. But no kind of life that we know would be tolerable without them. They grow out of that spiritual kingdom wherein men find their experience with the divine. The kingdom of heaven is real. It is as real as the many forms of hell and punishment that torture both mind and body in our present world. The gods of this world are harder to serve than the true God of heaven, and they pay less in return for service. There is the god of money, for instance. He takes your days in work and your nights in worry. He may demand the sacrifice of both friends and loved ones and it often happens in this life that he gets the price he demands for his favors. He may strip a man even of physical health and take away all his enjoyment of life. And in the end his only reward is the fleeting possession of a little gold which is taken from the victim at death. What then is the value to him of all his life of service to his god?

And then there is the god of pleasure, who often deteriorates both body and mind, and gives in return only a momentary sensuous satisfaction. Let no man or woman who is serving the demands of pleasure be deceived that he is on the road to happiness. "I want to be happy," is the most persistent thought and desire of men and women—but they want happiness that is the product of pleasure. Make no mistake—happiness is not the product of pleasure. It is not to be sought for itself. It is the by-product of other things. A nineteenth century philosopher has said of it:

"By happiness is not meant simply the joy of eating and drinking—the gratification of the appetite—but good, well being, in the highest and noblest forms. The joy that springs from duty done, from generous acts, from being true to the ideal, from a perception of the beautiful in nature, art and conduct. The happiness that is born of and gives birth to poetry and music, that follows the gratification of the highest wants. Happiness is the result of all that is really right and sane."

Jesus calls us to free our bodies and souls of the blighting effects of sin. Sin is a hard word, and a good many of us are so dainty that we balk at it. Yet when we examine many of the things that we do which harm ourselves and harm others we can find no other name for them but that ancient name of sin. Sin harms and poisons and destroys, not only the sinner, but all those who come under his influence. From this destruction Jesus calls us to be free.

Jesus calls us to live up to our best possibilities, to develop and use our greatest capacities, to grow to be the best that we may possibly be. For all of this he teaches us a way of life, a way of thinking, an attitude of mind and heart toward ourselves, the world, and God. We know the way is true and sure, for He followed it first, and many have followed after him.

Jesus calls us to help in the building of that better world and that more perfect society for which men of all times have been looking. He forecasted a kingdom which would be based on the glory of goodness rather than on the glory of wealth and power. He pointed to a kingdom that would be motivated by love rather than greed and desire for gain. That kingdom can be realized in the lives of men. Steadily the world has worked and groped and striven toward a realization of some of the ideals of which he taught. And we believe that it is possible that men will sometime build that better and finer society which will control the vicious and predatory instincts and develop the best that lies in the minds of all men. Jesus calls us to help him in the great task of building this kind of a society and this kind of world.

You need Jesus, and Jesus needs you. You need Him as a friend, a spiritual advisor, and guide. He needs you as a workman in the great tasks that he has set for the human race.

Our world has a great and pressing need of that kindness which was in the heart of Jesus. We need it collectively, and we need it individually. Unless we continually reform ourselves and our desires we will go on making a bad mess of our society, our industries, and our governments. We shall continue to have trouble and we shall never be free of the threats of war and suffering that have faced us in the last few years unless we yield to the leadership of Christ.

It was told certain of those who came to see the early apostles that "There is none other name under heaven whereby men can be saved." And one sort of social and economic magic after another has been tried without effect; and always we are brought back to the teachings of Christ. Some day the world will be forced by its troubles to give a fair and thorough trial to the teachings and philosophy of Jesus.

Jesus calls us. "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." "Behold, I stand at the door and knock."

QUESTION TIME

Does the Bible say that the scattered Jews shall be gathered back to Palestine?

Several prophecies of scripture foretell the gathering of the Jews, though there is some difference of opinion concerning which texts refer to a gathering prior to our time, as there was a gathering prior to the Christian era of a portion of those which had been scattered in the days of the Babylonian captivity and before then. Certain prophecies are quite clear, however, and are generally understood to refer to the period we call "the latter days." Typical of these is the following:

"They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. . . . And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."—Isaiah 11: 9, 12.

Among the prophets who predicted the return of the Jews, or of Israel, a term which has two applications, may be mentioned Jeremiah (23: 7, 8; 31: 7-9; 33: 7), Ezekiel (36: 24-28), Hosea (1: 11), Amos (9: 13-15), and Zechariah (2: 1-5; 8: 7, 8). Originally the name Israel was given to Jacob by the Lord himself, and his posterity were known as Israelites; but with the separation of Judah from the rest of the tribes, the other tribes came to be known as the tribes of Israel, as distinguished from Judah and Levi, the latter holding the rights of Levitical priesthood. This distinction is found in some of the prophecies; for instance, the one which is here quoted. However, in the course of centuries all were more and more often referred to as the Jews.

Were the Nephites Jews, or were they so called in 2 Nephi 12: 81 as a term of convenience?

When the Book of Mormon was translated by Joseph Smith, the term Jew was often applied to all known tribes of Israel, the descendants of Jacob and Abraham. It appears that the book uses the term according to its later application, rather than as originally employed. The Nephites appear to have been descendants of Joseph, one of Jacob's sons. At first the term Jew appears to have been derived from Judah, brother of Joseph. But this application was changed to include other of Jacob's posterity in the course of time. Even today, the tribe of Levi, which associated with Judah, is not generally distinguished by any other term in common usage. History states that during the Captivity all Hebrews were called Jews.

What is the meaning of the term "Israel"?

This term comes from a period when Archaic Hebrew was in use. The changes made in Hebrew since then make it impossible to be certain of exact meanings of some of the more ancient forms, of which this is one. Hebrew scholars suggest the following definitions: "ruling with God," "a prince with God," "soldier of God," and "a contender with God." The name was given to Jacob after he had wrestled with the angel, of which we read:

"Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed."—Genesis 32: 28.

Will man's physical elements be restored to him in the resurrection?

This is a difficult problem to solve so as to become clear in every respect, for views differ as to the meaning of the Scriptures on the subject, and no one knows with certainty all that composes the body in addition to the substances that chemists have found. Life itself is a mysterious something that baffles all analysis, yet is essential to bodily existence of all animal species. Some have held that there is really but one element, of which substances form a part, but this is disputed by others.

The Scriptures teach a resurrection of the body, but to our human reasoning it would seem impossible that this could include all substances that ever formed a part of our bodies, as these substances are constantly changing and becoming parts of other animal and plant species. It would appear therefore that the resurrection must mean something more than a returning to each person all physical substances which have ever been a part of his bodily existence. Some hold that the resurrection brings back that part of man which is not susceptible of such transmutation, but what that part is has been recognized as a mystery.

One difficulty that appears to confront any other theory is this: a human body decays and is taken up by the air and by grasses, plants, and other vegetation, or may even be eaten by animals; and thus it becomes a part of them. This process continues on and on, and we eat of the animals, plants, vegetables, and fruits thus formed, and they become a part of our bodies. Thus what constitutes our bodies now will go into other bodies after we are gone. The resurrection means much more than this.

Some Statements of Joseph Smith III on Priesthood Rights and Duties

Selected by S. A. Burgess, Church Historian

Priesthood

Authority is always essential to the successful carrying out of every scheme devised among men, either for their good or evil, to benefit or to injure.

Priesthood is but another name for authority, and should mean an intervening power. The priesthood rightly considered signifies a body of men rightfully holding power to administer in the name of Jesus Christ for the conferring of spiritual blessings upon men; nor should it ever be conceded to mean a class of men holding power from God to contravene the laws which have been given of him for the government of all, or to that which places in jeopardy or destroys the people and their liberties.

None talk more constantly about the priesthood than Latter Day Saints; none should understand more fully what is meant by, and comprehended in it than they. None should respect the authority of the priesthood more than a people who profess to be governed by laws emanating from God, given to the priesthood, and interpreted by the same.

The day was—we trust it will never be again—when it was thought by many that the priesthood could do no wrong; when the authority with which they were clothed was an unchallenged guarantee that all acts done by them were but the reflected light of wisdom divine.

Whatever other mischief this thought did not work, this much we have grave reasons to believe that it did: it engendered haughtiness and pride in the men who made up some considerable body of the priesthood; and made suspicious and selfish the men who were administered to by them. The loss of confidence followed as a matter of fact.

There is in the principles making the priesthood a necessity to the success of the Church of Christ, nothing that provides for such a result where men called and ordained to the exercise of its duties, and blessed with its prerogatives, conduct themselves in accordance with the design of its inception and object. These require an unselfish devotion to the performance of those duties, that looks only to the end, the good of man; the means, a personal and continued service; an enjoyment and exercise of those prerogatives, not as personal requisites that attach to the individual by reason of some innate and latent worth, but because of the labor performed and the fidelity with which it is done.

If the army of elders composing the priesthood have ever forgotten that they are men chosen for the accomplishment of a specific design had in view by Him who called them, and that this calling gave no authority, and conferred no dignity not found in direct accord with the design, then has that army become deficient in the principal aid to their success; and every portion of it that persists in thus forgetting what they should certainly remember, disgraces this calling, and should be discharged from service.

The powers of the priesthood, of which we have in times past heard so much, are conferred for no other purpose than the salvation of man, and are continued only in the just exercise of them in pursuit of this object; hence any act of any man called unto this calling performed with any other intent, or attended with a different result is not authorized of God, and hence does not bind the powers of heaven.

Balaam's ass spake once by the will of God, but remained ever after an ass still, with no powers of speech more than others of his kind. In him was found no assumption that his natural utterance became the oracles of God, because he did at one time speak by virtue of God's power. We have sometimes thought (we ask pardon therefor) that some men have not been so wise as men, as this ass was as an ass; for they have presumed to act as if having been empowered and directed of God to say and do certain specific things, all that they henceforth did and said must be of God.

We have heard men use the words, "By virtue of the Holy Priesthood vested in us," when we knew that it was not by virtue of that priesthood that they spake, but by reason of a commandment either of the Spirit, or the law.

This arrogating to man that which belongs to God, in such boastful and inconsiderate ways, has been the means of turning some away from the truth, who loved the truth but failed to recognize it in such guise; and some have been so much hurt and disgusted that they have disliked to hear the words "holy priesthood," so conscious have they been that the authority conferred was abused, and a boasting spirit lying beneath the language used. The formula of words suitable to each case is not specifically given; but Christ and Paul in the New Testament, and the former in the Book of Covenants, charge the elders to seek, and do what they do in the prosecution of their ministry and in pursuance of their calling "in the name of Christ," and not in the name, or authority, or by virtue of the priesthood.

Political oppression has been fostered in the name and influence of the divine right of kings to rule; social oppression in the name of fashion, and religious oppression in the name of the priesthood, until men who hate oppression have loathed the name of all three of these tyrants; although God gave men kings; fashion is the reflex of public opinion—vox populi, vox Dei; and priests have been and should be still sent of God.

It was the abuse of the statement made to Peter, "whatsoever ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven," that gave rise to and made possible the inquisition, and caused Luther to protest against iniquities to be found at Rome; it was an absurd assumption upon the part of the then Evangelical churches that all were as but one church in the sight of God, that led Joseph Smith to ask of God, "Which one, O Lord, is acceptable to thee?" And the abuse of the power conferred by which the "first elders" were to "cry repentance" to this generation, that led many into the bondage of men who had vitiated the priesthood and who have made the sacred ordinances a mock to thousands. Let us be warned in time. (Saints' Herald, volume 24, page 168.)

No Creed

The attempt to force the church into the declaration of a formulated creed, failed as heretofore. There was no disposition to build the "iron bedstead" upon which to stretch the devotee. It was equally apparent that the body had little sympathy with any effort to destroy the integrity of the revelations of God to the church. It was considered that to declare upon this point at the demand of one, involved the precedent to declare on another point at the demand of some one else; and if for these, then at the requirement of any who chose to rise up and demand a declaration of dogma, the church would have to yield, the result of which would be to finally eliminate the liberty of individual inquiry, quench the teaching of the word of God, and practically deny the office work of the Spirit in leading into truth. Once involved in the intricacies of such formulated declarations there could be no abiding lines of demarcation drawn where belief might safely rest and dogmatism assume the rule. It was and is far safer to affirm the books of the church, as with one so with the other, than to build a creed. (Saints' Herald, volume 32, pages 285, 286; Church History, volume 4, pages 483, 484.)

Instructions to Local Officers

To the elders chosen to preside in any church among you, give due honor, and let him be assisted in the care of his flock by those called to be priests, teachers, and deacons.

The council of elders should advise with and counsel by wisdom all those having charge of churches; not to the subverting of their order of government, but to the enlightenment and encouragement of both shepherd and flock.

Esteem every man in his own office, according to his diligence, virtue, and faithfulness; observing to love each other with the love which is in Christ.

Leave off contentions about unprofitable points of doctrine and church government, and rather observe to do the things by which you shall be made personally pure, than to contend about the rendition of obscure passages of law and scripture.

Teachers, observe to teach the members to do their duty in the family, in the social circle, and in the assembly of the Saints, and counsel and observe to procure the frequent meeting together of the flock, seeking to the Lord for wisdom, and the elder and the council for advice. Hear no complaints where reconciliation has not first been sought, nor repeat to others what you hear, until required to tell it to the council.

Deacons, be sober and faithful. Take honest charge of those things intrusted to your keeping, being ever ready to render an account to the church of your stewardship. Keep the tabernacles of your spirits clean, and counsel others to do likewise. Be ready to assist the elder of the church to fulfill the counsel of the elders. Keep the tabernacles where the Saints meet to worship clean, and with persevering care attend to all the duties required at your hands. Be not busybodies, nor backbiters, nor fault-finders, not cavilers, nor schismatics, obey the counsel of the Lord, being fervent in the spirit to oppose the wrong, and teaching and exhorting others to come to the light wherein ye walk.

Priests, observe to minister faithfully, lay aside all perversity of spirit; visit the houses of the Saints, exhorting them to be faithful, to attend every duty, to observe the rules of government of the Lord and of the church. Assist the elder in the performance of his duties; attend the sittings of the council of elders, if permitted so to do, and learning by constant attention and care what are the duties whereunto you are called, discharge them in the fear of the Lord, that you may be blessed of all.

Elders, cease charging evil upon each other and contending with each other about prerogative, or right or priority to teach, or preach, or lead the meetings. Lay aside all superfluity of naughtiness, provoke not one another by vain questions nor disputings about preferment. Let your aspirations be for holiness, feeling assured that to be good is to be wise.

Assemble yourselves to counsel together, spreading the truth by precept and example. Let your teaching be in humility and in confidence; be not haughty in mind nor proud in demeanor; clothe yourselves in simplicity and cleanliness; let the mission of Christ be your theme; your constant meditation to do good to man.

Finally brethren, come out of the wickedness of Babylon, take earnest heed to the word of the Lord, study to be approved of God that the fellowship of Christ may be yours.

This I write by permission, in exhortation, that we may be established in faith, in strength, and in hope. (The Restorer, volume 2, pages 180-182.)

Church Trials

One of the most difficult things that general church officers meet with in their ministry, is the attempting to reconcile and set right questions of dispute and quarrel in branches; strifes between brethren. And indeed it is not only most difficult, but it is also one of the most unthankful. . . .

Our opinion is, and on this we think we have a portion of inspiration, that if we were as willing to follow the advice and submit to the finding of the judges to whom we appeal for the settlement of our grievances, as we are anxious, willing and certain that others should be, the settlement of troubles would be made much easier than they now are. . . .

Personally the Editor thinks that continued wrangling on the part of church members in respect to their rights, is unbecoming, and indicates clearly that those who do so are lacking in the charity that "covereth a multitude of sins." While the right of appeal is granted, we think that in six cases out of every ten the better way of procedure, if brethren go to law before the brethren, is for them both to submit to the decision first had if both sides have been fairly heard and there let the matter drop. If a brother should say, "Well, that may be your notion, Mr. Editor; but as for me, I am not made of such soft stuff. The brother wronged me, and if the church can not compel him to make it right, I want nothing more of the church." We answer; the church can not compel either of you to do anything, he to make amends, or you to forgive him. It is a question of Christian qualities, that is all. He who is the better follower of Christ will choose the wiser, and more noble part. (Saints' Herald, volume 33, page 449.)

Rights to Preside

In no place where the principle stated by Jesus Christ in the words, "Let him that would be greatest among you, become servant of all," prevails, will there be any difficulty in regard to who shall take charge of the meetings, or who shall preside in an organized branch. We are getting tired of hearing of this facetious opposition to the order of the church and think it time it should stop. Until such time as the rule is changed it must be observed.

Wisdom and courtesy both indicate that in every case where it is an officer's right to take charge and preside, if there are other officers of the church present, either of the same grade of office as his own, or higher, who may be perchance more able than he is, or whom he may think more able, he should request such a one to take the chair of office, or to lead the meeting, notwithstanding it is his right to do so. Courtesy as well as scriptural teaching require men in the church to honor the injunction "in honor preferring one another." A man loses neither dignity, nor the respect of his fellows and coworkers by being modest and diffident of his own powers. The man who is covetous to rule and tenacious of his priestly authority does not receive the cordial support of his colleagues or his flock, as a rule. (Saints' Herald, volume 40, page 177.)

Presiding Officers

Presidency over an organization carries no authority to make rules for the government of that organization. Where such are or seem to be needed, consultation should be had with those who are to be affected thereby, that they may have voice in deciding as to their character. Otherwise dissatisfaction is almost certain to ensue, resulting in loss of confidence in the wisdom of the president. Should any departure from this order of procedure be indulged it is the privilege and duty of the organization to veto the movement of its president, should the movement be considered ill-advised or improper. And no officer whose love for the cause is greater than for himself would try to find ground for complaint in such action.

Members should always honor the officers of the church, notwithstanding the occupants of those offices fail at times to wisely perform the functions thereof. A refusal to so do is equivalent to withholding due service from God because a fellow-being has taken undue license in office. No government can long be maintained where such support as is properly due is withheld. Within the church we are under obligation to God to uphold his appointments. This does not require, however, that we shall sustain officials in anything but the performance of that which the law enjoins upon them. If the judgment of a lay member is at variance with that of the presiding officer, and the matter involved is serious enough to require a decision in settlement, such decision can be had upon respectful application to the leading quorums of the church. Meantime the ruling of the officer should be respected, at least so far as to abate all disputings.

A presiding officer is the servant of the body over which he presides. His duty is to execute the will of that body and when he is no longer willing to so do, he should resign and thus permit the selection of one who has a better conception of such an official's duty. When once a branch, district, or general assembly has disposed of a matter in settlement, the members should avoid agitation of it again, and should seek to enforce the rule indorsed, thus allowing the virtue of the rule to manifest itself while in operation. . . .

In organizations where the membership is large, varieties of opinion are almost certain to exist, and a presiding officer need not be surprised if he fails to please all. If a goodly majority approves of his course he should be willing to proceed, always however manifesting a spirit of toleration and showing a decent respect for the views of the minority. Arrogance is as unseemly in an officer as is churlishness in a member. The disposition to dominate is entirely out of character with the gospel work. The body owes to every member respectful hearing and a consideration of the views he presents. Every member owes to the body graceful submission should his position be overruled. (Saints' Herald, volume 42, page 179.)

Diversity of Labor

There are many truths which go to make up the unity of the truth; and some of them are very strong, but are not strange truths; the corner stone of a building is neither the threshold, lintel, nor keystone of its arched doorway; nor the pediment, nor capital of its principal pillars; but all may be of one kind of material, hewn from the same quarry. So it is with those who may erect the building. He who quarries the marble slab is not he who carves the elaborate arch; nor is he who lays the stone in its cemented bed the one who paints the exquisite designs on the frescoed walls and ceiling, yet these may all be members of one family, bearing one name, or be those bound together for the accomplishment of one common object.

So in the church there will be diversities of labor, and in that diversity of labor there is now supposed to be an unaccountable and reprehensible inequality, that must be abolished—if needs be—by power. There is no power that will ever do this but the power of truth, the unity of the truth; unless—and the alternative is fearful to contemplate—there be a complete destruction of all and singular the properties of the Saints. But the work which is to be done can not be done if the alternate occurs; hence we must conclude that the lines of inequality must be voluntarily thrown down by those having the privilege abasing themselves, thus assisting others to be elevated.

We shall be glad to take by the hand in fraternal regard the men who will now begin to work practically for Zion's good; helping each other, thus by concentration and unity, forming a bank mighty and strong. So shall we be spiritually one as we are now legally one. (The Saints' Herald, volume 20, pages 144-146; Church History, volume 3, pages 714-718.)

Church Deportment

We have often felt the blush and mortification of spirit caused by the acts of impatient thoughtlessness shown by Saints—elders and lay members—in bustling and getting ready to move out, and even in going out during the closing hymn and before the benediction. Indeed, we have been made greatly ashamed by seeing leading elders guilty of this grave and serious breach of good manners, and disregard of the dignity of the church and the respect due to the Lord during the hour of service and worship. We once exhorted a congregation to be patient and wait for the benediction and chided them for the disrespect shown to the hour and the occasion, when, while yet we were speaking a prominent elder rose, took his hat and overcoat and walked the whole distance from the pulpit to the door before the sound of our exhortation ceased, or the "good word" of dismissal had been heard. We concluded then that either we were out of place in striving to secure a respectful and fitting close to the service, or this man's teaching by example was more powerful than our teaching by precept and example.

The true properties of the house of worship require the best of order and most circumspect deportment. There should be no such thing as flirting, laughing, whispering, writing of notes to and from persons in adjacent seats, (whether the parties be old or young,) no grimaces or contortions of face to cause others to laugh, no shuffling of feet, drumming on the seats or books with the fingers, or on the floor with the feet, and no moving about from seat to seat. There should be absolute quiet on the part of the hearers from the time of their entrance to the house of worship to the closing words of the benediction. No one should go to the meeting room who does not intend to stay until the services close. It is a sad breach of decorum and good behavior for persons to get up and go out during the service, no matter whether those who do it are young, middle-aged, or old; unless there is an absolute necessity for such going out, it is an act of disrespect to both the minister and the people of the congregation, and to the Lord whose love, word, and goodness are represented by the being assembled together.

Common courtesy and decent civility, the respect which men of fair minds and good hearts should feel toward their fellow men, should characterize the conduct of those who attend worship in the house of God. Indeed the rule of right demands that those who enter the house where divine services are being held, should not interfere with the right of others to see, hear, and enjoy all the exercises, including the closing song and the benediction. The preacher, however humble his talent, or far he may be from the remotest seat in the house, may be disturbed by ill or disrespectful conduct; and is entitled to fair and courteous treatment, and has the right to be left free to express his thoughts, and discuss the doctrine he has to present without disturbances by either unmannerly interruption, studied and open disrespect, or thoughtless disregard of the rules of good deportment.

Every member of the congregation, whether rich, opulent, or humble and poor, richly or poorly clad, has the right to see, hear, and enjoy every portion of the service from opening to close, undisturbed by any act of those sitting near by, or remote from where he may be sitting, or standing, by which he may be annoyed, fretted, or in any wise prevented from the fullest enjoyment of song, prayer, sermon, and benediction.

It would seem, sometimes, that the only rights to be exercised and respected in the house of worship are the rights which careless young people claim and use, to go to the place to sit together, whisper, converse, laugh, carry on their flirtations, pay no heed to the people near them, nor to the preacher—but just to have a "good time," and if spoken to, or rebuked, to get offended, become angry, feel insulted, and give the officers of the church and the church discredit for being harsh, unkind, and careless of the feelings and rights of the young. (Saints' Herald, volume 41, pages 693, 694.)

Scattered Saints

There are a good many of the Saints who are scattered, and do not stand connected with any branch, who do not have the privilege of associating with the Saints. They should have our faith and prayers, and in order that they may gain the confidence of those with whom they associate, they should practice what they believe and teach. They must not talk of judgment or boast of mighty faith. There is another thing that they should avoid; that is, mixing in politics to an undue degree, for we are apt to get irritated. This does not preclude us from using our right of elective franchise, but, to the contrary, it is our duty to vote for the best men; and the man that does not vote is just as much to blame for having bad men in office as those who vote for them. We should use all the means we have in our power to inform ourselves so that we can vote understandingly.

Another thing should be avoided by the elders; and that is, preaching so hard against the various denominations, or otherwise pulling down the doctrine of the various sects, instead of building up our own. We should preach the peaceable things of the kingdom. There should be no malice, anger, or hatred; all should be kind and affectionate one to another, exercising love and charity to all. There should be no tale-bearing and if we are injured, say nothing at the time, but think of it and consider whether it is worthy of our notice, and let us try and forgive them; and let us examine ourselves and see if we have done altogether right. Perhaps we also may need forgiveness ourselves, and by doing so we will not be so easily injured, but will be able to go through the world smoothly. (Church History, volume 3, pages 325, 326.)

Gathering

These are grave considerations. We have had far more difficulty in securing the confidence of the Saints than in preaching the word; and, although it may be urged that there ought to be a simultaneous gathering and proselyting, in order to fulfill the rule of law making the observance of certain plans called celestial possible, we can not yet see how, if this were granted, that it can precede in importance, or obviate the necessity of a complete and thorough purifying of the heart. . . .

The man who depends on the continued reiteration of human intentions and evidences, can not be safely grounded upon the testimony which God gives to those who are to be his at the day of gathering. He that has received the truth of God as he gives it to the seeker, is at no loss to bear in his heart the pain of separation from the elect gathered, and still find ample trust in God. Such never fail; but like the generous flower which sheds its perfume when bruised, they will continue to show the love of God which is in them, though trials, persecutions, and the languishing away from Zion may be theirs. They are purifying themselves, and could be trusted with the honor of a community; while the loud aspirant for the honors of the elect would betray the trust of a people, stir up contention, tear down what others would build up, and scatter by their acts what by their precepts they would gather. . . .

For our own part we would by far prefer to be a lonely but faithful sentinel upon the walls, a "vedette" upon a distant outpost of Zion unredeemed, than to be an unredeemed and unregenerate citizen of Zion redeemed; for the one would result in sure and ignominious expulsion, while the other must eventuate in a victorious bidding to come home. (Church History, volume 3, pages 523-526.)

Common Consent

There are those who are of the opinion that our present system of obtaining the common consent is not effectual; and by some it is thought that the absolute decision of the graver matters should rest with the few, and that common consent is a myth and a mistake. We are not of this class, however; for this reason, the intuition of the Spirit is vouchsafed to all, under like conditions; and when acting in an assembly the unity of the spirit should more than compensate for any difference of mere opinion or the influence of self-interest and personal influence exercised upon the part of individuals. It may sometimes be that a wave of erroneous understanding may sweep over an assembly and lead the majority astray; but this will seldom occur; and in a body like the church, acknowledging the supremacy of God and the right of Christ to rule, and the absolute governing of divine intervention, there is an assurance, almost amounting to a guarantee that a mistake made by a majority will not be permitted to fatally injure the work for the intended good of the whole.

When personal influence, ambition, and private interest secure the popular voice and assumes the control the majority may be led astray; but it will be a minority influence that leads. Where such a thing occurs there are safeguards in the law whereby the rights of the minority can be preserved and with them the liberties of all be preserved. Such a case as this has already occurred, and the minority are slowly forging their way to the front against almost overwhelming odds in numbers and power. That the truth, in this case represented by the minority, will prevail, we have not a doubt.

That the "majority principle" may sometimes work an injury to the minority is conceded; but that it is so in reality as a rule can not be held. . . . We answer, then patience must have its perfect work, and the minority abide, if the wrong be bearable, until the wrong is demonstrated, when there will be an opportunity to correct; and the majority should and would be pleased to retrace its steps. (Saints' Herald, volume 42, pages 821, 822.)

Good Will and Minorities

Question: Is it in keeping with the spirit of the gospel where a presiding elder has been elected to preside over a branch by a majority of nearly two to one, for the minority to absent themselves from the church, or to say they will never step inside of the church while that elder presides?

Answer: No; it is not in keeping with the idea that the wish of the majority should prevail; nor with the spirit of real good fellowship. It would seem to be the better policy for those in the minority, whose wish had not obtained in choosing a presiding elder, to submit gracefully to the will of the majority, and live in unity with the whole body, until there was a change in the presidency. But on the other hand, it would be bad policy for the majority to undertake to compel the minority to attend the meetings against their will. It would be much more in keeping with "good will and peace," for a president who found himself in such a position to decline to serve, rather than to attempt to discipline a fairly numerous minority, no matter how ill-judged the hostility of that minority might be. (Saints' Herald, volume 40, page 822.)

Salvation of Souls

Plano, Illinois, January 9, 1869.—Let the Saints bear in mind the object for which the gospel is preached—the salvation of souls.

Those only are saved who are freed from sin; therefore let all who desire to be saved free themselves according to the law of Christ.

The law of spiritual unity and strength is for men and women who have wisdom sufficient to yield to that law without contention and strife.

For while we declare that God purposes to force none to accept of his grace, he will give ineffable peace to those who, by reason of wisdom, and a will to do good, accept the offer which he makes, and become heirs with Christ.

The witness of the gospel borne to us becomes a testimony against us, whether for good or for condemnation, as it is written, "it is a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death."

Who then desiring to bear witness of the truth, if willing that the testimony which he bears shall be the one by which he is to receive his honor when the Judge rewards the children of men, after the judgment, must depart from evil, not only in name but in fact.

For us, brethren, let me assure you as an ambassador from a far land, there can be neither rest nor safety till the Master of the field sends out his servant to tell us that the harvest is over.

And if, when these stewards shall find us reaping, they so report, as of those found worthy, their testimony will prevail over the testimony of those who have idly waited the call to cease from labor.

So, then, let the profession of faith be the practice of the gospel teachings. . . .

He then that is wise will seek not to abuse this liberty of the gospel to the perversion of the pure in heart but weak in the faith; nor yet for the purpose of excelling in word. But will, accounting it as the grace of God, be content to do all that lies in his power for the good of man, to the glory of God; leaving the height of his exaltation and the excellency of his honor to the mercy and the justice of God, who doeth all things well. Herein is an exceeding great faith exemplified. . . .

But death must reign until his power is broken by the Lamb who taketh away the sins of the world; and this he will not do until his work upon the earth is perfected.

And a people prepared for his coming, who shall be pure in heart, clean in appearance, robed with the garments of peace, and sanctified by the love which has been shed abroad for all his Saints.

Be watchful, be prayerful, be sober. (The Restorer, volume 3, pages 213, 214. Church History, volume 3, pages 515, 516.)

Prayer and Testimony

God Answers Prayer

By Myrtle Shaw

This summer seems longer than usual to me as I have been employed so far from our Sunday school and place of meeting that I could not attend more than once a month, but the Lord has blessed me in many ways. Especially has he blessed me with health and a chance to earn a livelihood. These are great blessings when so many around me are suffering from physical ills and when others have no work.

Several years ago the officers of Northern Wisconsin District asked each member to make the effort to give to the church five cents a day for the year. I have no income or allowance save as I earn it. I think the call came about the last of September, and I had just one dollar which I had planned to use in helping at home, at least a part of it. I put the dollar in a letter and sent it with a prayer to God to bless it to good use, and asked him to guide me that I might have the means to meet the rest of my obligations. Within a few days I had a good place of employment, and before the year closed I had met and answered the call of five cents a day and had a good balance over my personal needs.

I know that God does answer prayer, else I would not have such wonderful health when all around me are suffering. I asked him to give me good health and employment, promising to give him a tenth of my earnings for his church. And so I give him all the praise and thank him for his many blessings.

Would Be Faithful

By Bertha McGuire

Many blessings have been mine since I joined the church seven years ago. I was baptized by Brother S. T. Pendleton when I was twelve years of age. And now that we have a little church here in Mikado, I am stirred to action by the great task ahead of us as a little group of Saints. For five years we held meetings in the Killmaster Town Hall, but over a year ago we bought our present church home, and there are now about seventy-five members in the branch.

Young people's meetings are held every two weeks, Brother Clayton Harmon, our leader, and we are studying the Young People's Church History. The Spirit has led us in our study, and the older people, too, are interested in and give support to our study.

The blessing of healing has been mine to enjoy. An outstanding experience was given me last winter when I was healed of rheumatism while being administered to at our young people's meeting. This confirms my belief that if we are faithful we shall receive the blessings God has promised. Let us remember, brothers and sisters, to pray for one another that all shall be faithful.

Mother Writes of Power of Example

By Mrs. J. H. Thomas

I appreciate my good fortune in being able to live in Zion. It would seem a calamity to me to be isolated and denied church association. I should like to hear from some of my girlhood friends in Blenheim and Chatham, Ontario. They will remember me as Violet Thorp. I have not heard from them for a number of years.

I attended one week of the Religious Education institute held at the Stone Church for the city of Independence, and wish that I could have been present the other week. I hope that through those classes an army of well-trained teachers will be recruited to work with our young people. We need teachers whose lives are examples for our children to follow. Each child has his ideal, a person whom he thinks is perfect and after whom he tries to model his own life. We older people do not realize how closely the young people are watching our movements—what we do, how we talk, where we go. We should exert ourselves to be the very best examples for them to follow that we can. In this way each Saint has a chance to serve his Master, and living is often far more effective than preaching.

I am thankful for my children and my hope is that I shall be able to bring them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord. I want to instill in their souls a deep love for the church, that they will stand firm in the faith and use their God-given talents for the good of the church. If I can accomplish this, I shall feel that my life has not been in vain.

I love this latter-day work. I want to see Zion redeemed and the gospel preached to the ends of the earth. I wish we could send out hundreds of missionaries, for I know that there is a great work to be done and that the time is short. I can not express the feeling that comes over me at times, a great urge to do something to help bring about Zion. Saints, the time is now. Let us be up and doing the things the Lord wants us to do. Let us cease to do evil and to follow the ways of the world, and we shall be blessed. I always remember you in my prayers, please pray for me and my family.

Power of the Lord in Missionary Meetings

By W. J. Williamson

Once when I was holding a series of meetings west of Castleberry, Alabama, at a place called Jane's Mill, where lived a number of isolated members, I enjoyed a great degree of the Spirit of the Master.

After the service one evening I was asked by a man who was not a member if I would come to his home the next morning to administer to his father and to his baby. I happily promised to do so, and when I reached the home the next morning I found the baby quite ill. That night the father of the child came to me after church and said: "My baby is as well tonight as it ever was. It has been playing since your administration this morning."

The grandmother of the child attended all the services during the week and before the meeting began Saturday evening, she came to me. She informed me that she had been a member of a certain denomination for forty-three years and had thought herself satisfied with her baptism, but that she wanted to be a Latter Day Saint. She asked me to baptize her early the next morning. "I am sure this week that I have heard the true gospel and have felt its wonderful power," she declared.

Arrangements were made and we gathered at the water at ten o'clock Sunday morning. While we were there, another sister gave me her hand and said, "I also am now ready to be baptized." The Spirit of the Lord was present in such power that joyful tears stood in our eyes. The first sister baptized was seventy-three years of age; the second, thirty. The confirmation service occurred at eleven o'clock, and three other sisters were administered to. Everyone was

God Hears and Answers Prayer

By Mrs. Herman Solberg

There are a few isolated Saints living in La Crosse. Last year, November 11, the women gave a luncheon to make money for the Christmas Offering. There were three of us to furnish all the food and do the work. One afternoon we three sisters met to pray, asking our heavenly Father's help. We asked for strength to do the work. He heard our prayer and helped, and as a result we made more than we expected. How happy we were when we sent the money to general headquarters, for we knew that we had indeed been working for the Master.

Often I have prayed that God would help me. I am isolated from the church and my husband has not had steady work and so we have been denied the help of church papers. But Sister Gollnick gets the church papers and loans them to me. I take the Stepping Stones for my children and try to teach them to trust in God at all times. When I grow discouraged I think of the song we sing, the children and I, when I have their Sunday school class, "God Will Take Care of You." The children and my husband do not belong to the church.

The only way I can pay my tithing is to sell cookies, and when I can sell them, I give all I earn from them. I was baptized several years ago by Elder J. O. Dutton, and I want to do what I can for the church.

Learns of the Life More Abundant

By Joseph Pichler

The letters of the Saints inspire my mind and soul with hope and a longing for greater activities in living the "new" commandment, "love ye one another." I, too, can offer a testimony of the goodness of God to me.

I know this is the church Jesus established. In 1923, I offered a fervent prayer to God in behalf of my wife for whom the doctors had given up all hope. In that prayer I made a promise. When the elders administered to my wife, they told her by inspiration of the promise I had made; that if God would restore her to health, I would know this was his church and that I would try to be worthy to enter by baptism. Since that time I have learned to some extent of the "life more abundant" which Jesus came to bring to men. This life is promised to all who are willing to learn of the Savior of men.

Idaho Missionary Baptizes Six

By Edith Prideaux

Elder J. L. Sandidge has just closed a three-week's series of services in our community, dividing time between Council and the Middle Fork Schoolhouse. Six were baptized, and two babies were blessed at Middle Fork.

Our brother was blessed while preaching the Word, and the Saints have been strengthened. Good crowds came out to hear him. But owing to many being very busy in the fruit harvest, attendance at Council was not so large. Nevertheless some few showed great interest by being present every night, and from the remarks made, the Saints look forward to good results.

Brother Sandidge left us the morning of the twelfth to hold services at Cambridge where a man and his wife have given their names for baptism. These people, I believe, have never yet heard the word of God preached, but have convinced themselves of the truthfulness of the gospel through reading the church books and publications presented to them by a sister of the church.

God Grants a Wonderful Blessing

By Mrs. William Maxwell

I want to tell of the glorious blessing I recently received, and hope my testimony may strengthen and help those who read it.

I was in ill health for ten years and the doctors had repeatedly told me that I would have to be operated on before I would be well. Gradually I grew worse. I was administered to time after time, and received strength for short periods, but did not receive complete healing.

Upon hearing that Apostle R. S. Budd would speak to our group Saturday night, June 18, I resolved to fast the week before, and I prayed earnestly that my heavenly Father would hear my feeble petitions and if it were his holy will, that he would heal me and I might not have to undergo an operation. I prayed too that if he did not will to heal me, he would direct me whether to seek healing through an operation or to continue as I was. I asked Brother Budd for administration, and the substance of his prayer was that God would direct me and that he would give me wisdom to care properly for my body.

The following night I dreamed that my mother was unexpectedly with me and some one had called my doctor. Although I seemed to think there was nothing seriously wrong with me, the doctor said to mother, "The poison has gone all through her system; we must get her to the hospital right away."

About three weeks later I had the worst spell I had ever had, and upon learning of my sickness my mother came unexpectedly. The doctor said as in my dream, that I should go to the hospital as quickly as arrangements could be made. So trusting fully in the Lord, I underwent a serious operation July 22. I was praying as I went under the ether and I saw a personage descend into the room (this was Friday morning), and sometime during Saturday night, I saw the personage ascending in like manner. After coming fully out from the influence of the ether and while praying over this, I was given to know that God's Spirit had taken full charge during this time. I receive great blessings following the operation. I was not sick at all from the ether, had no nervousness, could sleep like a baby, and the healing was miraculous. The two doctors who attended me remarked at the progress I made, and the nurses marveled. In ten days the doctor dismissed me, and I continued to improve rapidly.

Through this experience I feel that the greatest blessing I received was to know that God was pleased enough with my weak efforts to grant me such wonderful blessings at this time. Such a blessing is worth living for. I am convinced that this is truly God's work, so let us be faithful. Please remember me in your prayers; I remember all of God's people.

BIOLOGICAL MENACE OF ALCOHOL

Scientific investigation in Germany proved the dangerous effects of liquor so completely that the former Kaiser, William II, urged total abstinence among his subjects, and added the significant statement:

"The next war and the next naval battle will demand of you sound nerves. Nerve power will decide the victory. Victory will lie with the nation that uses the smallest amount of alcohol. That, gentlemen, must be your position, not as individuals, but as patriots."—Alcohol, page 8.

The World War proved the Kaiser's prediction to be true, for victory was with the United States, a nation that adopted prohibition. The menace of alcohol to national existence has come to be so widely recognized that leading nations are seeking to restrict or abolish its use altogether. To retreat from that purpose would be suicidal to the United States as a nation. That society, organization, or party which offers wine, beer, or alcohol in any form as a means of securing votes is not entitled to your support or confidence. He who advocates the licensing of such means of destruction is a traitor to the future of his country, or else he is too reckless to merit respectful consideration.

FOUR DESTRUCTIVE RESULTS OF ALCOHOL

I shall now prove beyond any question that alcoholic liquor causes the disintegration and destruction of the four most vital and essential physical possessions of which human beings can boast. First, it destroys the mind and normal functioning processes of the brain, causing definite changes to take place that weaken the intellect, the reasoning powers, and the will. It perverts the mental forces, slows down their operation, and eventually destroys them to such an extent that the victim is no longer in possession of his proper faculties.

Second, through the paralyzing or numbing of the higher powers, alcohol produces an excitation of the baser emotions and desires until virtue and morals are undermined, perverted, and destroyed. This moral disintegration is generally in proportion to the degree of alcoholic indulgence, and has been scientifically proved in thousands of cases. Third, these ravaging processes attack the functional organs of the body, interfering with their proper action and exposing them to the grasp of various diseases, until the whole body is weakened, becomes helpless in its fight for existence, and at last succumbs to the dread forces of death.

Fourth, the poisonous effects of alcohol are not limited to the destruction of mind, morals, and body of the person who uses it. A much more horrible result takes place, for alcohol attacks the very sources of life by weakening and finally destroying or paralyzing the cells or germ plasma by which life is rebuilt and by which the human species is perpetuated. Every one of these dreadful effects has been proved by careful, scientific research to attend the use of liquor, and these effects are so certain and destructive that every state but one in the United States has enacted laws requiring instruction on this subject in all public schools, and some States provide that teachers neglecting this law shall be dismissed. The Missouri law, which is similar in some respects to various other state laws, says in part:

"Physiology and hygiene, including their several branches, with special instruction as to tuberculosis, its nature, causes and prevention, and the effect of alcoholic drinks, narcotics, and stimulants on the human system, shall constitute a part of the course of instruction, and be taught in all schools supported wholly or in part by public money, or under State control."—Revised Statutes of 1919, section 11162.

HOW ALCOHOL INJURES THE BRAIN

The dangerous nature of the effects of alcohol upon the brain may more easily be recognized if we remember that the brain is composed of millions of little cells connected with nerves through which the muscles of the body are enabled to function. Alcohol not only attacks these cells but destroys many of them. As these cells are necessary to health, the result is often fatal when much alcohol is taken into the system. A well known instructor, Mary Waddell, says:

"When a person takes a drink of any liquid with alcohol in it, whether it be whiskey, wine, beer, hard cider, or patent medicine, there is not enough alcohol in one drink to destroy all of the cells of protoplasm; but it will first attack the most sensitive cells like those of the brain and nerves, destroying them in proportion to the amount used. One glass of pure alcohol taken at one time would destroy enough cells to cause death within ten hours."—Scientific Temperance Simplified, page 5.

This destruction is due to the fact that alcohol is a potent poison, and in killing the cells of the brain and affecting functional processes it often produces a variety of mental diseases usually termed alcoholic psychoses. Doctor Emerson has shown that such diseases have decreased more than 50 per cent since prohibition. He says:

"The percentage of all admissions to our civil state hospitals for mental disease which were classed as alcoholic psychoses has fallen materially in the past twenty years—from 10.1 in 1919, to 3.7 in 1922, rising but only to 4.7 by 1928."—The Annals, page 60.

One of the fateful results of drinking is insanity, 25 per cent of which is traced to that cause in one form or another. All authorities agree that it injures the brain and those mental faculties which make for high and dependable character. Doctor Mayo said to a convention:

"You can get along with a wooden leg, but you can't get along with a wooden head. It is the brain that counts. But in order that your brain may be kept clear you must keep your body fit and well. That can not be done if one drinks liquor."—Pamphlet of New Jersey Temperance Society.

ALCOHOL DESTROYS BODILY FUNCTIONS

But alcohol does not stop with the ravaging of the brain and the moral nature. Its terrible work of destruction is by no means completed when that has been accomplished, for it also attacks other functional organs of the body, such as the heart, the liver, the kidneys, and the lungs. It paralyzes the nerves that control the blood vessels, increases the beating of the heart, though permitting less blood to flow through that organ, and leads to dilation of the heart. Doctor Frederick Brown, director of the Department of Information and Statistics of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, New York, presents a table of deaths by alcoholism and cirrhosis of the liver, which is largely an alcoholic disease. During the nine year period of prohibition, 1920-1928, these alcoholic diseases averaged more than 40 per cent less than in the nine year period before prohibition, 1910-1918.

Doctor Emerson sums up the effects of liquor with a formidable array of facts, in which it is shown that:

"Alcohol is a depressant habit forming narcotic drug. Alcohol is a protoplasmic poison. . . . Alcohol causes disease: psychoses, multiple neuritis, gastritis, cirrhosis of the liver. Alcohol causes deaths: from acute and chronic poisoning. Alcohol reduces resistance to infection. . . . Alcohol decreases expectation of life. Alcohol reduces chance and survival of offspring."—Prohibition Facts, page 30.

ALCOHOL MENACES SURVIVAL OF RACE

More than all these evils, because more sinister in its effects on race survival, is the destructive nature of alcohol on the sources from which the human race is perpetuated. It is an enemy that not only attacks the brain, the cells of the body, and other organs, but it causes diseases that tend to wipe out the human race, unless strongly restrained. Doctor Wiglesworth states:

"If the alcoholic poisoning of the germ cell and ovum have reached a certain degree of intensity, imbecility and even profound idiocy may be expected to result; while of a less degree the injury may manifest itself, when adult life is developing, in different forms of insanity."—Alcohol, page 10.

Doctor Partlow, Superintendent of Alabama Insane Hospitals, declared:

"In my opinion excessive use of alcohol or other toxic drugs disqualifies entirely for parenthood. Children of habitual drunkards may be epileptic or mentally deficient or both."—The Annals, page 62.

Sterility and mental deficiency, however, are not the only evils that result from the action of alcohol on the germ cells, but Doctor Doll, of the Vineland Training School, states that it leads to "abortion and still-birth." The trend of insanity, idiocy, and mental defective cases, has been one of the greatest dangers to our nation since its beginning. Doctor Alexander Bryce states:

"The result of medical inspection in the schools of New York has revealed the fact that 53 per cent of the children of alcoholic parents are "dullards" as compared with 10 per cent of the children of abstainers."—Prohibition Facts, page 32.

Let us not weakly surrender to the poisonous and criminal enemy that has once been banished from our nation. But rather may our sense of virtue and the love we bear toward our posterity, our nation, and our God cause us to firmly support and defend our morals and our future.

their actions, and that could only follow if it were presumed everywhere that they had the ability to choose. Only immature children and those mentally incompetent are excused from this responsibility.

In the Scriptures, particularly in the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants, man's free agency is clearly set forth. It is interesting to compare the Devil's attitude with the attitude of God upon this question. Satan seeks first to deceive and confuse the mind, and next to enfeeble and enslave the will. We are told in Genesis 3:1 to 5, Inspired Version, that in the beginning Satan volunteered to come and save humanity. He said he would save all, not one would be lost; they would be saved whether they wished to be saved or not. The offer was rejected because, this version of the Bible says, he had in mind to take away man's agency. Christ came instead with an entirely different program.

THE FLAXEN CORD AROUND THE NECK

It is stated in 2 Nephi 11:94 that Satan leads men with a flaxen cord about their necks until he binds them with his strong cords for ever. Is that not typical of all the forces of evil at work in the world? Take, for example, the tobacco habit. Millions of dollars have been spent and are spent annually to induce our boys and girls to become users of cigarettes. How insidiously the propaganda has grown, particularly in regard to our girls. First on huge bill boards and in magazine advertisements, the young man was seen smoking some favorite kind of cigarette. A bit later the girl appeared on the scene lighting his cigarette for him, presently taking a whiff of the smoke. Now she has crowded him clear off the board and smokes her cigarette like any hard-boiled cowboy. It seems an innocent habit in the start, easy to break. It is like the flaxen cord, scarcely noticeable, easily broken, nothing to be afraid of.

I have spent some time in and about the great Battle Creek Sanitarium and talked with nurses and doctors, and have seen hundreds of patients come, and man after man was told by the doctors, "You must quit the use of tobacco and quit right now or your heart will quit you." Then what a terrible struggle they have! I have seen them sneak away behind the shubbery out of sight of doctors and nurses to light up their cigars and cigarettes. They were paying good money, and plenty of it, for professional advice that was sound, but they could not take it even when their lives were at stake because of the power of the habit that had fastened upon them. There was a time years ago when it was only a flaxen cord, as thin as a whiff of cigarette smoke. Now they are bound with strong cords.

The habit of gambling, indulgence in immorality—all these are evil practices and tendencies illustrating the statement made in the Book of Mormon.

THE "MORE EXCELLENT WAY"

By comparison the Lord's way appeals to all that is good in us. He seeks first to enlighten the mind and then to strengthen and discipline the will. "You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Christ respects the human will. There is no finer statement than that which he made to John upon Patmos, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man will hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." (Revelations 3:20.) He does not force his way in. He waits at the door until the man voluntarily opens and invites him in. He comes to the door of every human heart. He comes to the door of every family. But the most he proposes to do is to be a guide. "I will guide you into all truth." He enjoins spiritual discipline and it is his program to develop men and women of character.

The old stock question, Why does not God destroy the Devil? presumes that the Lord would like to have men without sin simply because they did not have the opportunity or inducement to sin. To the contrary he wants those who do not sin because they will not. Man's agency and the Lord's respect for it accounts for the persistency of some forms of evil in the world. The Lord himself, to be consistent with himself, could not make an uphill road for man to climb that will not be a downhill road when men choose to go the other way.

A TIME TO CHOOSE

It is a time for the church with no uncertain voice to sound to the world the message that Joshua gave to the children of Israel, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." Perhaps it is a time to sound that challenge to the church itself. At a time in ancient Israel when many were running after false gods of the world, Joshua called them all together, all the tribes, the elders, and leaders, and said to them, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve. . . . As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Elijah put to them a similar challenge, "How long halt ye between two opinions? if the Lord be God, follow him." (1 Kings 18:21.)

The Lord tells us in Doctrine and Covenants 36:12 that he will cause righteousness and truth to sweep the earth to gather the elect to a place called Zion. This is the power that brings them together and separates the elect from the nonelect. Those who respond to the appeal of righteousness and make it their choice shall be gathered.

It is our belief that all men sometime, somewhere, will have an opportunity to make their choice with a degree of understanding of the principles involved. We believe that the gospel will be preached "in all the world to every creature" and so clearly that it will be understood. Sometimes in the past we have preached half a dozen sermons in some little village and then the elders have gone away and shaken off the dust from their feet in condemnation of the village on the ground that the gospel had been rejected, when, as a matter of fact, probably more than half of the people neither heard nor understood it. But finally there will come a time when all will have made their definite and final choice.

The Bible opens with the picture of man in the Garden of Eden given their agency. It closes with the vision of John on Patmos who heard the voice of God finally say, "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still." He has made his own final choice. "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still. He that is righteous, let him be righteous still."

Apostle John W. Rushton Visits Norway

Ministers in Scandinavia

It was the happy privilege of the Norwegian mission recently, to enjoy the association and ministry of Apostle John W. Rushton. He arrived at Oslo, the capital city of Norway, on the steamer, Blenheim, from New Castle, England, about noon, September 8, and was met at the pier by the writer. The sight of this dear brother from America standing on the deck of the ship, filled our hearts with joy and we looked forward to weeks of pleasant association and work together. In this I was not at all disappointed, but rather the weeks of experience and company with our brother have been a blessing and great encouragement.

Two Branches Organized

During the four weeks which Brother Rushton spent in Norway much constructive work was accomplished. Perhaps the two outstanding events were the organization of two branches, one at Porsgrunn and the other at Oslo.

Porsgrunn has been a mission for thirty years or more, and was one of the first places where our work was started in Norway, Brother Muceus being the pioneer missionary in this his hometown in 1901. Soon after our arrival at Porsgrunn, Brother Rushton felt definitely impressed that the time had come for an organization of a branch here. Arrangements were made to that end and on September 18, this was done.

Brother Carl Carlsen, who has held the office of priest for several years, was called and ordained to the office of elder, and was chosen as the pastor of the new branch. Godtfred Olson, another young brother, was ordained a priest and was chosen assistant pastor. There are twenty-eight charter members of the branch which includes several members living at nearby places. If the spirituality and enthusiasm of the Saints can be used as a barometer, this branch has a bright future.

In the nearly nine years that I have worked in this mission I have never seen such harmony, spirituality and enthusiasm manifested in Porsgrunn. The Saints had prepared themselves spiritually through much prayer and otherwise for Brother Rushton's visit, and their efforts did not go unrewarded. God met with us and the Saints were greatly blessed and encouraged, which is another testimony to us that if the Saints in any part of the world will do their part, God will do his. We often stand in our own light and prevent the blessings of God from coming to us. At Oslo the organization of the branch took place September 22. There has been some work done in this city several years ago, but nothing definite resulted from it. About two years ago the writer started the work here again, and has given much time and attention to it. The efforts put forth have been rewarded with a few honest souls. We had eighteen charter members for this branch, including the missionary family, five of whom hold the priesthood. I was recommended by Brother Rushton to be the pastor with Brother Blom, another elder, as my assistant who will take charge of the branch in my absence. Oslo is quite a large city, and we hope to see this branch grow.

Good Response at Bøn

We also spent five days at Bøn, where there is also a branch located. The Saints appreciated our visit, and we left them revived and encouraged. We had larger attendance at Bøn than at the other two points, our little church being filled the five evenings we were there. However, we had good attendance at all the places. Brother Rushton spent some time at each branch explaining and emphasizing the "church objectives" adopted by the last General Conference. This proved to be educational, and was appreciated by the Saints.

At Porsgrunn we got some very favorable newspaper publicity through the kindness of a young Methodist pastor. He attended our first meeting there and was so impressed by the sermon that he asked permission to have a synopsis printed in the paper. Brother Rushton granted this request and wrote the synopsis the next day for him. The pastor himself wrote a long introduction to the article in which he spoke very highly of Brother Rushton's work and sermon and urged the people to take advantage of the opportunity of hearing him. Never before in the history of this mission have we received such favorable comment in the newspaper from anyone.

Upon hearing that we as a church have not yet been successful in obtaining recognition from the government as being a Christian church, Brother Rushton suggested that we try again. The law of Norway requires all churches who differ in belief from the State Church (Lutheran) to apply for recognition as Christian dissenters and obtain that recognition before they may have all rights and privileges as a church. Our church, through its representatives, has applied time and time again, but no decision has ever been made in our case. Brother Rushton and I were given courteous consideration and treatment by the officer to whom we applied and he encouraged us to make written application to the Department of Justice, emphasizing certain points in our doctrine. He could see no reason why recognition should not be given us. We are preparing this application which I will present upon my return to Oslo.

Summary of Ministerial Activities

To give you some idea of how we spent the twenty-eight days that Brother Rushton was in Norway I will present the following statistics: 20 preaching services; 3 sacrament services; 3 meetings of the women's department; 2 priesthood meetings; 1 children's meeting; organized 2 branches, making a total of thirty-one meetings in all. Brother Rushton spoke at all of these meetings, the writer acting as his interpreter. Besides that we ordained two brothers; administered to the sick ten times; applied for church recognition; attended a silver wedding; visited two factories and a museum; and visited at the home of one or more families almost every day. This with the considerable amount of correspondence which each of us had to attend to, kept us busy.

I might mention incidentally that we had the privilege one Sunday morning of worshiping with the Queen of Norway at an English State Church service held in Oslo. The Queen of Norway is from England, and is a sister of the present King of England. She often worships at the English church in Oslo. We happened to attend a service at which she was present.

It is needless for me to say that Apostle Rushton's visit has been a great blessing to the Norwegian mission. Not only were the Saints revived, but also Sister Ruch and I feel very much encouraged and have a greater determination to go on in the strength of God, fighting against the many handicaps and obstacles that we find on our pathway. It was a pleasure to us to have this servant of God as our guest in our humble home for about sixteen days of his stay in Norway.

Brother Rushton and I are now at Stockholm visiting and making a survey of this part of the Swedish mission. We leave here tomorrow morning for Denmark for a short visit in that mission. Of our visits in these two countries I will write later. May the blessings of God attend his church in all the world is my prayer.

V. D. RUCH.

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN, October 13.

Webb City, Missouri

Meetings Conducted by Apostle Gleazer and Edwards

A two weeks' series of meetings opened here September 14, Apostle E. J. Gleazer occupying the first week. When it became necessary for him to return home, Apostle F. Henry Edwards took his place the second week. "Religion and the Present Crisis," was the theme of these services, and fairly large crowds attended. The Saints were strengthened, and consider the meetings most helpful.

Following the sacrament service September 2, fifteen members received certificates of credit from the general church for class work done in "Church Objectives." Four of this number were members of the priesthood, the others, church school workers.

Sunday, October 23, the theme of the day's services was in keeping with College Day. Special music was arranged by the chorister and her helpers. At 10.45 in the morning, there were three short talks. Albert A. Cobb and Mrs. James M. Jones, former students of Graceland, spoke, and were followed by Pastor Ira O. Waldron.

Hold Harvest Festival

September 25, the local harvest festival was held at the church in charge of Mrs. Frank Stokes. More than a hundreds quarts of canned fruit, vegetables, and jelly were on display; also fresh vegetables and other products. Judges were appointed, and the choice exhibits were sent to the annual Harvest Home Festival at Independence.

September 6, there occurred the regular branch business meeting. Pastor Ira O. Waldron was chosen to preside over the branch during the new year, and has to help him: Assistant pastor, church school division, James M. Jones; assistant pastor, home visiting division, C. H. Hobart; financial clerk, Frank Stokes; branch secretary, Mildred E. Fletcher; chorister, Mrs. A. N. Deaver; pianist, Mrs. Neva Trimble; librarian, Frank Brooks. Church school supervisors are as follows: Adults, Mrs. Clara Stokes; young people, Mrs. Hettie Horton, and children, Mrs. Neva Trimble.

Other church school officers have also been chosen.

A farewell party, which was a surprise, was given at the church in honor of F. L. Freeman and family who are moving to Independence, Missouri. The event was sponsored by the adult division, Mrs. Frank Stokes in charge. A program included hymn singing, prayer, a solo by C. H. Hobart, and presentation of farewell gifts. The women gave Brother and Sister Freeman a beautiful quilt. The women of the Faithful Few Class of which Brother Freeman has been teacher for the past two years, presented him a gift as a token of appreciation. Pastor Ira O. Waldron also presented a gift to Brother Freeman, making a touching talk on their serving together. Other musical numbers, an original comic song by Mrs. W. R. Virgin and Mrs. Felix Bouse, and a solo, "The End of a Perfect Day," by Mrs. A. N. Deaver, were followed by the benediction. Then refreshments were served and a social time was enjoyed.

Webb City's Junior Choir

It is the aim of the Webb City Junior Choir, directed by Sister Mary Hobart, to study and work in order that its members may become more efficient workers in the service of the church and the heavenly Father.

A brief sketch of the choir's history will show Herald readers what a group of very young Saints are thinking and doing. The choir was organized with thirteen members in May, 1930, by the church school chorister, Mary Hobart, and after five weeks of intensive practice made its first appearance (in new robes) on Children's Day. In November of that year the choir sang at the district conference at Joplin, Missouri, using an anthem, "But the Lord Is Mindful of His Own," by Mendelssohn, and "At Eventide," an arrangement of "Abide With Me," by Lincoln Hall.

On Children's Day, 1931, the choir again gave a program. And at Christmas presented a well-appointed vesper service. Mrs. C. H. Hobart assisted with a story, "The Gift," which was well rendered. Also the choir was assisted by Darwood Hobart as soloist and Aletha Fry, La Verne Beautte, Darwood Hobart, and Paul Deaver sang "Silent Night."

On last Children's Day the choir made another outstanding appearance, and also had charge of music at the afternoon baptismal service. Rehearsals during the summer months were discontinued. In August four of the older girls (who had reached the upper age limit) gave their places to four smaller girls just coming into choir age.

The first fall appearance of the group was October 2 at the church school hour when they sang, "God Is Love," an arrangement from L. Van Beethoven as their selection.

In September the choir launched an attendance and on-time contest to continue for three months. Every time one is present at rehearsal or when the choir is scheduled to sing, he receives one point, and every time he is absent or tardy one half a point is deducted from his total score. The choir appears every Sunday morning possible at church school. The little singers are valiant workers, know how to cooperate, and have shown much improvement since the group's organization. Neva Hobart Trimble is an able pianist for the choir.

Fanning, Kansas

In this little Wolf River Valley autumn is a beautiful season. The hills are masses of glowing colors, the warm red of the sumac and buckbrush mixed with the red, yellow, and brown leaves of the trees, present a beautiful picture. In the morning a purple haze often hangs low over the hills, while at mid-day the coloring of the leaves is enhanced by the velvet green of the grassy slopes. Sunday afternoons find many people from the surrounding cities and country going into the woods and hills along the river to enjoy the beauty of nature.

However, Indian summer has not detracted from church attendance for about one hundred were present at the morning service on Sunday morning, October 16. Elder James A. Thomas was the speaker at the church hour. Although this was the regular monthly church service for the juniors, the older people enjoyed the services also. A special part of the service was a song by the junior choir, under the direction of Sister Mabel Mortimore. Brother Thomas, the speaker of the evening, talked of the financial needs of the church.

The women's department has been active during the past few weeks. In addition to the regular meetings on Thursday, at which time they have been quilting, they held a food sale at Troy on Saturday afternoon, October 15. Plans have been made for a chicken dinner in the near future. On Thursday afternoon, October 27, the women plan to meet to make a comfort for Sister Maggie Whetstone, whose home was recently destroyed by fire.

Despite the fact that Saturday night, October 22, was very rainy, a large number of branch young people met at the L. Jeschke home, in Troy, where a china and aluminum shower was given Cordie Wiley, whose marriage to Marvin Jeschke is announced to take place in the near future.

A large and appreciative audience listened to Brother Roy Tilden's sermon on "Stewardship," October 23. The sermon by James A. Thomas in the evening was also enjoyed.

Elder Virgil Sheppard and family, Patriarch Samuel Twombly, Sister

Twombly, and Sister Inez Pilcher motored to Saint Joseph, Missouri; Sunday night, October 23, to attend services at Second Branch. Patriarch Frederick A. Smith was the speaker and gave an inspirational sermon an "Faith." Others of Fanning Branch will probably attend these services which are to last for two weeks.

Patriarch Samuel Twombly was called to Blue Rapids, Kansas, to preach the funeral sermon of Brother Thomas Irvin, October 27. Brother Irvin was one of the charter members of Blue Rapids Branch and as a young man was the acting deacon in Blue Rapids at the time when Elders I. N. Roberts and George Shupe, pioneer missionaries, had their headquarters there.

Parkersburg, West Virginia

To Observe Joseph Smith Centennial and Branch Anniversary

The following officers have been elected for the year starting October first:

Harry B. Smith, branch president; James Withee, church school superintendent; Martha Smith, women's department superintendent; May Griffin, secretary and treasurer, and Lois Rogers, chorister.

Harry B. Smith and family were privileged to attend most of the Kirtland Reunion. Several from this branch attended the district conference at Indian Creek, August 6 and 7. The district was well represented, and this was one of the best conferences of recent years. Brother J. W. Winters, of Fayette City, Pennsylvania, visited this branch September 11, and was the speaker at the morning hour. His family was with him. Brother George Criswell and family, of Wheeling, were also present the same day for the morning preaching service.

An all-day meeting was held with Goosecreek Saints and friends of the church at that place, October 9, to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of West Virginia District, organized there in December, 1892. Harry Smith, Martha Smith, Burns Wilson, James Withee, Golda Calhoun, and Elsie Bumgardner attended from here.

Sister Bumgardner is working at the silk mill here and is a welcomed addition to our church workers.

Brother Gray of Southern Ohio District, was here for the prayer hour Sunday morning, October 16, and assisted in the service.

Parkersburg Branch will observe the anniversary of Brother Joseph's birth, October 30, in order to have A. B. Kirkendall, of Southern Ohio District, as the speaker at morning and afternoon services. This will also be a rally day to observe the twelfth anniversary of this branch, which was organized in October, 1920, by Brother Thomas Newton.

Interest and attendance have been poor in this branch for some time. They have only a small number of capable and willing workers, and also of priesthood. They would be glad to have other good workers added to the branch, especially a good speaker to build up the preaching services.

Plymouth, Massachusetts

Small Branch Has Unique Recreational Program Idea

Sister Doris Giovanetti has made the church school very interesting, using the programs printed in Vision as a nucleus, varying them to suit local needs. She is using all who will work in this department and has made the service outstanding and of high spiritual order. Her ability as a reader and her pleasing personality are appreciated.

The church school order of services is comparatively new in Plymouth, and due to the very small number of Saints, attendance averaging about thirteen and the range in age from four to seventy-three years, it was difficult to provide programs or classes to include activities of interest to all.

The work done and results obtained in years past by Pastor Benjamin W. Leland have been very helpful. He has served faithfully, teaching two or more classes on Sunday besides preaching and otherwise ministering to his flock. Plymouth Saints hope that his work will long continue.

Sister Florence Gorden is superintendent of the recreation and expression department which meets on Sunday evening. This service each week gives two members opportunity to be especially helpful. One takes charge of the meeting, using the form he desires, and the other occupies a period of from five to fifteen minutes, reading or talking on any subject he chooses. After this the audience hands in written, unsigned, constructive criticisms based on the speaker's posture, clearness, language, sequence, adherence to subject, etc. The remainder of the time is spent reading and discussing articles from the Reader's Digest or other periodicals the one in charge thinks appropriate. The one in charge one week, at the end of the class, chooses one to take charge the next week.

The first speaker, Arthur Gordon, used as his subject, "The Branch Program," and the discussion and criticism it provoked, it is hoped, will be the forerunner of a workable branch program.

The following week Donald LeLund, ex-Graceland and graduate of the University of Michigan, did credit to those institutions on his discourse on "The Great Game of Politics" and "The Tariff."

Sister Elva Buttner has persevered in the department of women until the reading of the four volumes of Church History has been completed. The study class will continue through the winter, it is thought, with What Is Man? by J. R. Lambert. Under Sister Buttner's direction, toy animals have been cut out, made and stuffed. These will be given to the poor at Christmas.

The Herald does not often hear from these "Pilgrims," but they are looking Zionward. Plymouth Rock is in a cage under a canopy, and many visit the place to see and get a picture of it. The Saints of Plymouth Branch have found the rock of salvation in the Latter-day church, and are striving not to keep the knowledge of their find in a cage or under a bushel. They desire to hold it up in such a manner that others will see and take home a living memory of it.

Cogitations at a Funeral

By E. S.

The spirit of worship came as one entered the high arched church building. The flowers in their abundance furnished a perfect setting to the soft gray casket which stood as a symbol of life eternal.

People sat quietly, thinking deep thoughts—thoughts of life and of death and its mystery. Then the tones of the organ drifted in making the very air pregnant with meaning. "One sweetly solemn thought." Men and women sobbed aloud who had not cried for years.

What a moment in which to teach the goodness of God—of his rich promises to us, ours for the choosing, just a few short years of probation and then all eternity lying beyond. The music ceased. All was silent—in waiting for that message which should challenge one to serve.

The preacher spoke ably of the sister who was gone. He had been as a son to her—well he knew that she would soon come forth in the resurrection of the just. In 1857 she was born, in France. She was married in Denver in 1880. She had lived a good life—her reward was sure. "And I saw the dead small and great stand before God," (Revelations 20:12.) "And the spirits of those who are righteous are received into a state of happiness," (Alma 19:43). "These are they who shall come forward in the resurrection of the just," (Doctrine and Covenants 75:5). And he concluded, "Now imagine her standing before God in the resurrection of the just."

Only that! Why imagine her? She is gone. She lived just a common life and her reward is sure. What of me? I am struggling. My life is not uneventful and commonplace as was hers. I want the thing that apparently she has attained with no great effort. Oh well! Life and death—after all, what are they? The first is wished on you, the second you avoid as long as possible. Let us forget it all and get back to living.

But the sister had not lived a commonplace life at all. She had come to this country because of a vision that was granted her, she had found the gospel and could testify to a sure knowledge of the truth of the Book of Mormon, she had been granted an extension of life that she might see certain things take place in the church, for long years a student of medicine, she had brought healing to many, her death had been sweet to her as God had promised. And this is only a suggestion as to the events that had marked her life. The man who spoke must have known, for he was very dear to her. It was a good sermon, but the wonder of it all was not there.

Denver, Colorado

Missionary Meetings Arouse Interest

Elder J. W. A. Bailey held a two-weeks' series of meetings in Denver the early part of September. A large crowd was in attendance every evening and the interest shown was very encouraging. The first sermons were on the subject of Zion, then for a few evenings on biblical and archæological evidence pertaining to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. One sermon was devoted to Bible symbols and the principles of the gospel, one to Solomon's temple and the organization of the church. On the last evening he spoke on "The American Government as Foretold by the Prophets and Its Relation to the Church of Christ in Latter Days." Brother Bailey revealed a remarkable store of knowledge upon these subjects, which he gave in his own inimitable style, and held the attention of his audiences throughout the whole series. Mrs. Audrey Whipple, wife of Brother Roy Whipple, was baptized by him the last day of his stay. From here he went over to the Mesa Verde in Southwestern Colorado, to continue his research work in the ruins of the cliff dwellings.

Sunday, September 11, Elder Glaude Smith and Apostle Roy S. Budd left Denver with the intention of visiting each branch in the district and holding a special meeting in each place. Brother Smith returned to Denver early in October. He reported good interest and attendance at all services, and said that in almost every place they found the Saints strong in the faith and deeply interested in the welfare of the church. He believes much good was done by these visits. During the pastor's absence the resident members of the priesthood faithfully performed their part in caring for the needs of the branch.

Brother Alva Christensen and his family have recently come to Denver to make their home. Saints are glad to welcome them to their midst. Brother Christensen spent several years in Denver before taking up his ministry for the church. Denver members are also glad to have with them Brother and Sister Roy Whipple, formerly of Iowa and Kansas.

The women's department has been busy making plans for the winter's program. The group led by Mrs. Ethel Fishburn met at her home Thursday, October 6, and effected an organization, with Mrs. Fishburn as leader and Mrs. Elizabeth Newlands as secretary-treasurer. A Doctrine and Covenants class will meet the third Thursday of each month and will be conducted by Mrs. Laura Kohankie. A social meeting will be held the first Thursday of the month. Sister Myrtie Fenn will have charge of another group, who will spend much of their time in making quilts and doing relief work.

Lois Wildermuth and Charlotte Darnell are attending Graceland College this year. Alfred Vosmer is at the University of Colorado and Mary Williams is at the University of Denver.

The choir, under the direction of Sister Alice Milligan, has begun work on the cantata to be given during the Christmas season. Sister Inez Schrunk is the faithful organist, assisted by Mrs. Ethel Fishburn and Mrs. Ethel Kemp.

Cadillac, Michigan

Cadillac Branch held its annual business meeting October 3. Officers were chosen as follows: Branch president, Joseph Scott; church school director, David Oligney; chorister, Clyde Price; pianist, Mrs. Harry Briggs; branch secretary, Clyde Price; church school secretary, Margaret Peterson; librarian, Wesley Cook; publicity agent, Mrs. Harry Briggs; superintendent of adult division, Harry Briggs; young people's superintendent, Margaret Peterson; junior, Violet Oligney. Sister Joseph Scott has been chosen activity leader, and under her supervision the members hope to accomplish much during the coming year.

Missionary C. E. Harpe has returned to this district and the Saints are looking forward to some interesting meetings such as were enjoyed before he was called home by the serious illness of his mother.

Cadillac Branch was much encouraged by another visit from Apostle D. T. Williams.

Two pretty weddings were solemnized in September. Miss Eunice Slusser became the bride of Wesley Cook, and Miss Margaret Slusser was married to Ray Peterson. The ceremonies were read by the brides' father, Elder Joseph Scott. Sister Eunice has been pianist for a number of years and Sister Margaret, chorister. Their musical talent has been very helpful, and the branch wishes them joy in their new homes.

We must not put our faith in man or any set of men, but in God and his gospel. It is plain to see that we have served the world too long. Let us be faithful to our covenant with God, and we shall be blessed. The priesthood of the church have been blessed in their work when they were faithful, and the whole church will be if they sustain their ministry according to the law of God.—W. W. Reeder, Cherokee, Iowa.

Portland, Oregon

Keep Faces Zionward

The necessity of keeping our faces Zionward was urged by President J. L. Verhei in his report to the business meeting of the Portland district conference, held October 7, 8, and 9. A motion to adopt Elder Verhei's recommendation carried unanimously, and the district presidency was empowered to appoint a committee to help the Saints centralize themselves with the ultimate aim of moving to Zion in a body. Apostle J. A. Gillen who assisted in conducting the meeting expressed his approval of the action and pointed out that the Saints were complying with church objectives.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: District president, Elder Verhei; associates, Elders Mark Yeoman and Albert Nelson; secretary, Floyd Soneson; treasurer, Mark Yeoman; director of Religious Education, A. Livingston; musical director, Fay Buchanan; auditor, Fred Hawes, and librarian and publicity agent, Leslie Hunt.

On Sunday there were one baptism and five ordinations: Mark Yeoman, elder; Floyd Soneson, deacon; Carl Bryson, deacon; Fred Hawes, teacher, and Perry Hunt, priest.

Organization of the district young people Sunday afternoon resulted in the election of the following officers: President, Perry Hunt; vice president, Gladys Tooze; secretary-treasurer, Leslie Hunt. Fifty-five young people, four officers, and nine leaders were present. The enthusiasm displayed in the meeting was proof that the youth of the church are anxious to unify themselves and begin working together toward the objectives of the church.

A series of lectures on the archæology of South America, conducted by Elder Harold I. Velt, has been very well attended. Elder Velt presented a great amount of evidence to church members and their nonmember friends to prove that the ancient peoples of South America were of Hebrew origin; that the Book of Mormon is their true record, and that our church is the true church of Christ. Much interest was aroused and it is hoped that those who listened to the lectures will unite with the church. Elder Velt is now engaged in visiting these people and presenting the gospel to them.

Friday, October 14, Portland young people had a dinner in the basement of the church, Apostle Gillen being the guest of honor. The Halloween motif was carried out in the decorations and much credit for the success of the evening goes to Day Clement who did the decorating.

An energetic group of young people has been organized at Sherwood Mission near Portland with Gladys Tooze as president. The two groups expect to have a great deal of fun working and playing together this winter.

West Virginia District Observes Fortieth Anniversary

Approximately two hundred Saints from Clarksburg, Parkersburg, Indian Creek, and isolated members met at the old log church at Goosecreek, West Virginia, October 9, to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the West Virginia District, which was organized there December 10, 1892, by W. H. Kelley, assisted by T. W. Williams. Brother D. L. Shinn was elected district president. On Sunday the log church was dedicated. It had been built that spring or summer. Goosecreek Branch had been organized February 28, 1888, by L. R. Devore and T. J. Beatty, following an opening made there in the fall of 1887, by Brother Devore. The branch was disorganized in July, 1925.

West Virginia was a part of the Southern Ohio District before the West Virginia District was organized. There were seven branches at the time of its organization, viz.: Clarksburg, organized October 18, 1880; Union Grove, January 6, 1882; Wayne, April 16, 1882; Cabin Run, February 5, 1885; New Hope, December 12, 1886; Fairview, January 30, 1888, and Goosecreek, February 28, 1888.

There have been seventeen branches in the district, but only five remain: Clarksburg, Indian Creek, Morgantown, Parkersburg, and Fairmont, which was the last one organized, September 28, 1924, by Brother Thomas Newton.

Many of the missionaries and other church men have visited or labored in this district. Brother F. M. Smith attended a conference in 1904, and Bishop B. R. McGuire the one of 1918.

Services this day opened at nine-forty-five with a preaching hour. H. G. Johnson, of Clarksburg, preached and then without dismissing the congregation, Brother G. W. Lawson, one of the district presidency, spoke. A basket dinner was enjoyed by all at noon. Then the time till 2 p. m. was used in visiting. Many people of the community were out. Brother A. C. Silvers, district president and missionary, had been there the week before and preached to a full house each night.

Historical Program Sunday Afternoon

At 2 p. m., the historical program was given with Harry Smith, of Parkersburg, in charge. First a brief sketch of Clarksburg Branch, prepared by Mildred Griffith, was read by C. M. Shinn, son of the first president of the district, D. L. Shinn. Another son, Frank L. Shinn, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, was unable to attend. The story of the Indian Creek Branch was read by Haydee Bumgardner. Brother L. L. Thomas, of Morgantown, sent a sketch of that branch which was read. Harry Smith read a paper on the history of the Parkersburg Branch. The Fairmont Branch failed to have their historical sketch. Next a brief history of two of the disorganized branches, Goosecreek and Cabin Run, was given by Harry Smith. No information was had on the other ten disorganized branches of the district. The story of the West Virginia District was then given by Harry Smith. Most of the data was taken from the district minutes. Many interesting facts were brought out.

Sister Jane Ross, formerly a member of the Goosecreek Branch, was present. She was present at the first conference forty years ago when the district was organized. Two others present said they also attended that conference of 1892.

Holdenville, Oklahoma

116 North Burgess Street

September 21, this branch held its annual business meeting for the election of officers. The following were chosen to preside over branch affairs: President, Elder C. E. Goss; presiding teacher, B. R. Hixson; deacon, William F. Page; secretary, Sister Viola Hixson, and chorister, J. S. Meyer. Brother William F. Page was selected as superintendent of the Sunday school.

All officers have pledged their support to the church program and are eager to do their part in the upbuilding of the church. In fact there appears to be a marked improvement in the general feeling among the Saints. Attendance at both Sunday school and church has perceptibly increased.

A wonderful spirit was felt by the Saints at the sacrament October 2.

Addison, Maine

Rally Day Adds Color to Activities

Sunday, October 9, opened with blue skies and sunshine. The Saints were happy and expectant for it was rally day for this branch.

Elder Newman Wilson and family with a loyal band of Saints, young and old, were on time, and the first service of the day was a prayer and testimony meeting. The group was wonderfully blessed, the Holy Spirit resting upon all.

At ten thirty the church school was in session, about thirty-five taking part, and the lessons from Doctrine and Covenants were ably taught by Brothers Wilson, Rogers, and Smith and by Sister Vesta Ackerman who has a class of young girls.

The next service consisted of short talks of experiences by members of the priesthood. It was a splendid sight to see seated on the platform, ten men, ambassadors for Christ. They ranged in age from three young brothers, recently ordained, to Brother W. E. Rogers, of Jonesport, the eldest of the group. Their testimonies to the truth of the gospel were inspiring.

The speaker for the evening was Elder Newman Wilson, faithful and loyal helper. His discourse was enjoyed by a large group of people for this small place. The Grange Hall, where the meeting was held, was full to capacity, which testifies to the high esteem people have for Brother Wilson and his message.

Addison Branch, though small in number, is carrying on under the leadership of its worthy president, Herbert Ingersoll. The Saints are striving to do their bit to help the church.

Missionary A. M. Baker Debates at Tigris

Near Ava, Missouri

The outstanding feature of October for this branch was a debate which began September 28, and ended Monday evening, October 3, not including October 2. There were ten sessions, two each day of two hours' duration, each debater giving alternate thirty-minute talks. Missionary A. M. Baker, of Thayer, represented the Saints' church with Elder W. W. Chrestensen as moderator, and the Reverend Elmer Butler of the Church of Christ (nonprogressive) was his opponent with J. Warlick of the same faith as moderator.

"Resolved That the Church of Which I, A. M. Baker, Am a Member, Is the Church of Christ in Fact and in Harmony With the New Testament Scriptures in Origin, Faith, Doctrine, and Practice," was the question of debate. Brother Baker affirmed for five sessions, Reverend Butler doing likewise. The district tent was used to house the crowd and it was well filled on all occasions. Some drove fifty miles to be present.

The Reverend Butler contended that his church organization was in heaven with the original twelve apostles Christ chose, the Apostle Paul being a special apostle. He ridiculed any divine inspiration, being satisfied with the Word only. He declared that where the Bible spoke his church spoke, and where the Bible was silent his church was silent.

Brother Baker built his church plainly and had the best of attention while speaking.

Effort was made by Brother Baker to have the debate start September 27, in order that there would be no break, but he was unsuccessful. A few gathered at the tent and Elder W. E. Haden spoke morning and evening.

An enjoyable time was had Sunday, October 2. Eleven of the priesthood were actively engaged in the sacrament service ably presided over by the district president and missionary, W. E. Haden. The baby daughter of Brother and Sister David Main was blessed at this service and given the name, Mildred Arline, by Elders W. W. Chrestensen and W. E. Haden.

Elder O. E. Ensley held services for two weeks at the Pleasant Green Schoolhouse following the debate. Then he preached one week at Tigris Church. Also occupied the pulpit at the church October 9, 16, and 23.

October 10, about fifty Saints and friends gathered at the home of Elder J. C. Chrestensen surprising him on his eighty-second birthday. His son, W. W., was present and his birthday occurred a week earlier. A fine supper and happy evening were enjoyed.

Independence

Real sacrifice and consecration, devotion to the church, deep interest in its welfare, and a wish to help were reflected in the stories of the women at their meeting in the Stone Church lower auditorium Monday afternoon. This hour brought to an end the first week of the women's effort in the center place to tap sources of sacrifice and consecration which had not yet been reached by any organization of the church. In charge of their leader, Sister Lottie Koehler, the women of Independence hope to demonstrate what they can do to help the church financially. Their first week's offering amounting to three hundred and fifty-seven dollars, was turned over to Bishop J. S. Kelley. Next week the workers of the groups and districts hope to have a larger offering.

The women were stirred by each other's stories of contacts made in the last seven days and also by short talks from church officials present, Pastor J. F. Sheehy, Bishops G. L. DeLapp and J. S. Kelley, and President F. M. Smith, and from their own leaders and officers. Many expressed confidence in their efforts to raise funds to assist the general church, with emphasis on paying overdue missionary allowances.

The women are organized to collect an offering from each woman in the group, visiting her in her home and at the same time leaving a new envelope for the next week's offering. It is thought that these weekly contacts will prove helpful not only in a financial sense, but in a social and spiritual sense as well. The groups also are busy with activities calculated to swell this weekly offering, and hundreds of women are now earnestly at work. They will meet every Monday afternoon to check results.

Secretary of War Patrick J. Hurley was speaker at a great political rally at the Auditorium last Saturday night, the biggest event of the local Republican campaign. E. H. Winter, Republican candidate for governor of Missouri, also spoke and with him there came to the rally other State candidates. Seats were placed in the main auditorium for six thousand people, and President Frederick M. Smith presided over the meeting. Secretary Hurley's speech was broadcast by the National Broadcasting Company network. Preceding the meeting upstairs, the Laurel Club served dinner to a large crowd in the lower auditorium.

Four Sunday evening Religious Education credit courses opened last Sunday evening at six o'clock; a story telling class at Liberty Street Church taught by Mrs. John Lentell; and three classes at the Stone Church—"Message of the Book of Mormon," by C. I. Carpenter; "A Study of the Doctrine and Covenants," by John F. Sheehy, and "Young People's Leadership," by D. S. McNamara and C. B. Woodstock. Workers and leaders desiring further credit on their certificates are invited and urged to enroll in these classes which are planned primarily for the training of those who are willing to prepare for the highest efficiency in the active teaching and leadership of the church. Present teachers and leaders in the above fields in all the branches of Independence are expected to participate if possible in these special classes, and young people wishing to qualify for service will be welcome.

Stone Church

Sunday was an outstanding College Day in the experience of Stone Church Saints. To begin the day more than one thousand children, young people, and men and women attended the church school classes.

Both the eleven o'clock and the evening services were designed by one who is a staunch Graceland to present the church college in her most attractive educational, spiritual, and social aspects. The church's attitude toward education, the college's place in the church program, her place as a spiritual and intellectual savior and a builder of good character among our young people, and her spirit of service were given expression in the day's program. Paul N. Craig, a former teacher at Graceland, was in charge of the music.

All day the need of forty-eight young people now attending Graceland who look to the Graceland Scholarship Loan Fund to augment their own efforts in carrying them through the school year, was kept before the people. Each year on College Day this fund is called to the attention of the church, and through the generosity of friends of Graceland, is increased, thereby offering other young students the opportunity to attend the church college. To the need of these forty-eight, Stone Church people responded with an offering of ninety-three dollars in cash, and more than fifty dollars pledged.

The morning speaker was Elder Leonard Lea who, on October 23, was the Home-coming speaker at Graceland. For his Scripture lesson Brother Lea chose John 6. Music was by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul Craig, Mrs. Alice May Burgess and Miss Lilly Belle Allen, soloists. Pastor J. F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder C. B. Woodstock.

"The College on the Hill" was the theme of the evening service which was planned to give to the congregation something of the feeling of a Graceland Home-coming. A group of Independence former Graceland students occupied the choir loft, and, led by Paul N. Craig, sang "Alma Mater Hymn" and "Graceland Forever." Then Brother W. Earl Page, who had charge of the Stone Church's College Day, introduced James Moses who spoke briefly on "The Old West Door" and Miss Olive Curtis whose theme was "Graceland's Big Family." Last year both of these young people attended Graceland, and their contributions appealed to the congregation. Brother Albert McCullough who also went to Graceland several years ago, sang his own composition, "Consecration," a hymn well known to the church.

President Floyd M. McDowell, the principal speaker of the evening, talked on the program's theme. Apostle M. A. McConley offered the invocation and benediction. Mrs. Dorothy Waters was organist, and Mrs. Daniel Lewis, pianist.

Sister Sarah Elizabeth Stonger, seventy-nine years of age, and wife of Phillip Stonger, died at her home in Independence Sunday night, October 30. She belonged to the church for thirty-one years. Surviving are her husband, three sons, five daughters, twenty-one grandchildren, sixteen great-grandchildren, two half-brothers, and a wide circle of friends. Her funeral will occur this afternoon at the Carson Funeral Chapel, and interment will be in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Second Church

According to the secretary's report the attendance of the church school, Sunday, October 30, was somewhat less than the week before.

Calvin Rimmer took charge of the eleven o'clock junior service. Bethel Davis led the singing and Helen Willoughby played the piano. Brother Conyers gave the Scripture reading and Mrs. Jenny Davis was the story-teller. The talk by Brother Arthur Whiting on "The Kingdom of God on Earth" was good.

An organ prelude was played by Mrs. Gladys Inman before the the morning preaching service. A duet, "The Bird With the Broken Pinion," was sung by Mrs. Grace Nave and Mrs. Vinnie Hatch. Mrs. Kathern Inman sang, "Oh, for a Thousand Tongues," accompanied by the humming of the choir and Miss Lena Mortimer at the organ. The invocation was by Elder Ben Sarratt. Elder William Inman, speaker of the hour, chose as his text Jeremiah 21: 8. He concluded his sermon, which was very good, by reading Psalm 1.

A five-minute organ prelude at the seven thirty service was played by Mrs. Gladys Inman and followed by a short song service. The opening prayer was by Elder Freeman. A trio, composed of Mrs. Wilna Settles, Mrs. Grace Nave, and Mrs. Vinnie Hatch, sang "God Is Love," accompanied by Mrs. Sunshine Beck. Elder H. G. Barto chose as the theme of his sermon, "Beautiful Zion."

There will be a meeting at the church this Wednesday evening for election of branch officers and for ordinations.

Elder Milton F. Gowell, missionary for forty years, passed away at the Independence Sanitarium Sunday afternoon, following a two months' illness. He was taken to the Sanitarium several days ago suffering from paralysis. He was born October 31, 1858, at Portland, Maine, and had been a member of the church since 1889. Surviving are his wife, Bessie Pearl Gowell, and a sister, of Kansas City. The funeral was conducted yesterday afternoon, Tuesday, from the Latta Funeral Home, Elder U. W. Greene preached the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove.

Walnut Park Church

All day Sunday, October 30, the Saints were richly blessed in their services. The church school was in charge of Brother Albert Chapman, and the orchestra and congregation were led by Sanford Downs whose leadership is commendable. Ruth Evangeline, little daughter of Brother and Sister P. McLaughlin, was blessed at the close of the classwork.

Elder T. C. Kelley delivered a fine sermon at eleven o'clock on "Sewing and Reaping." Brother Erwin Moorman with his cornet and Brother Fred Mollison with his trombone, contributed a splendid duet number, "Shepherd, Guide Me." Sister Delta Nace was in charge of the song service.

In the evening Elder Amos Berve continued the sermon of the morning, and the Saints were happy to have him as the speaker. The choir sang, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," directed by Minnie Scott Dobson.

The six o'clock class study is being successfully carried on by its young leaders. Each evening attendance increases. Last Sunday at the close of class work a program was presented: two readings by Lois Jean Williams; a vocal solo, "My Task," by Miss Dorothy Peak, assisted by Drexel Mollison at the piano, and a reading by Sister Carrie Holmes. Elder Welton Wood spoke on "What the Religion Means to Me."

Friday night, October 28, the Swastika Class, Kenneth Morford, teacher, enjoyed a Halloween party at the Institute Building on the Campus. About thirty-five attended.

The women workers of Walnut Park have had hearty response to their presentation of the plan for the women through special sacrifice, to help the church financially, with special emphasis to paying back missionary allowances. All are eager to help if only in a small way.

Spring Branch Church

Many who formerly did not attend prayer meetings, are now coming out to the Wednesday night and Sunday morning services. Their interest and attendance encourage all.

Last Friday night the young people sponsored a Halloween party at the church. They planned the entertainment and served the refreshments, and everyone had a fine time.

Brother Charles Pooler was the morning speaker at Spring Branch, and his subject was "Building the Kingdom of God." For a text he chose Matthew 6:33. The pastor was in charge of the service, assisted by Morris Jacobson, and Sister Winogene Boyce sang "My Task."

An encouraging number attended the evening church school. The program consisted of solos by Fern Belk, Francis Tankard, and Beulah Donkawich, and a talk by R. J. Lambert.

Brother Lambert was also the evening speaker, and he read from the Doctrine and Covenants concerning the laws of Zion, stressing the admonition to "search these commandments."

Far West Stake

Far West Stake Saints have been very happy to have Elder C. J. Hunt laboring among them the past couple weeks. Brother Hunt started his work in Guilford October 16, and has visited all of the northern branches, holding services and visiting the Saints. He is now working among the Stewartville and Maple Grove Saints. Within the near future he plans to visit most of the branches throughout the stake. His labors are highly appreciated in every place he has visited.

The Saints are looking forward with much anticipation to the appearance of Bishops L. F. P. Curry and G. L. DeLapp in the stake soon. Bishop Curry will make one appearance at Saint Joseph November 27, at which time Saints from the entire stake will gather together to hear him. On December 4, Bishop DeLapp will be the speaker forenoon and afternoon at Guilford and at First and Second Churches in Saint Joseph in the evening. He will be at Cameron December 18.

An event of great importance to the young people is the young people's rally to be held at Stewartville, November 12 and 13. An interesting program has been worked out with Elders Roy Chevillie, Leonard Lea, and Ward A. Hougas as speakers during the rally.

Guilford Home-coming

One of the big events of the year at Guilford is the annual home-coming. This was observed October 16, with an all-day meeting. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the speaker. An ideal autumn day helped to make the occasion a success. A good attendance was had. Basket dinner was served at noon. Several of the near-by branches closed their services and helped Guilford observe the anniversary of the dedication of their church building. Stake President Ward A. Hougas attended the afternoon service, but returned to Saint Joseph for evening.

C. J. Hunt preached to a good-sized crowd in the evening. He also preached Monday and Tuesday of the following week.

Saint Joseph Branch

First Church

A decided increase in the interest has been shown in the activities of First Church. Attendance has steadily increased at the Wednesday evening prayer services and some good meetings have been experienced. The third Wednesday evening of each month has been set aside as young people's night at which time both young and old attend and take part in the service. Besides this joint prayer service, the O. T. Z.'s have a Sunday morning service once a month. A devoted group of young people met October 9, and experienced a splendid service.

An interesting family worship service was conducted October 16. The children's division gave a short worship period and Elder Ward A. Hougas gave a fitting object lesson.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the speaker at the vesper service on the 16th and delivered a timely message. On the 23d Patriarch F. A. Smith preached a fine sermon at the vesper hour.

A class on church doctrine is being held at five o'clock each Sunday evening. Sister A. N. Brown has been the instructor but, due to an accident which will keep her away a few weeks, Brother O. Salisbury is substituting for her now.

Another class which recently started is the Priesthood Class. This meets every Monday evening. The members of the priesthood are studying Brother Elbert A. Smith's new pamphlet, What Latter Day Saints Believe About God, under the direction of Elder H. C. Timm, associate pastor.

The O. T. Z. treasure hunt October 11, proved to be very popular, drawing the largest crowd of the season. A jolly time was enjoyed finding the messages and eventually arriving at the scene of the treasure. All returned to the church where popcorn and apples were served and a successful evening was ended.

The Ul-Lik-Us Players held their regular monthly meeting October 18. Lesson study and short skits made up the program. The Players are now rehearsing for their annual fall play at the Y. W. C. A. which will be given the latter part of November.

Halloween was the occasion of a joint party of adults and young people. The basement of the church was decorated in the conventional colors and emblems of Halloween by the O. T. Z.'s. A program of songs, stunts, and games was carried out after which the ladies distributed cider and doughnuts.

The children were entertained at the same time by the teachers at the home of Sister Emma Beadnall, supervisor of the children's division. All of the gayety and fun of Halloween was put into the games and stunts for the children.

On October 30, Elder Ward A. Hougas spent the day in Saint Joseph. He continued his series of sermons on "Nest Building" at the morning and evening services.

Second Church

On October 16, Second Church was privileged to hear Apostle F. Henry Edwards again. Apostle Edwards preached at the evening service at seven-thirty. On October 23, Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith commenced a series of services to continue over November 6, on which day the Joseph Smith Centennial will be observed with an all-day meeting.

Fourth Church

One of the most beautiful ceremonies in the church was performed in the font at First Church Sunday October 16, when two young men from Fourth Church were baptized by Elder J. L. Bear. The candidates were brothers, and have been actively engaged in the work for some time. They were confirmed Sunday evening at the regular evening service by Elders T. E. Hale and J. L. Bear.

The young people at Fourth are taking considerable interest in the church activities. They have organized a dramatic club under the direction of Sister J. L. Bear. About two months ago they gave a play entitled "Faith," published in the June Vision. By request of the young people of Second Church the play was repeated there on Thursday, October 20.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The stake classes in leadership were finished Friday night, October 28. Those who took the course, "Ourselves and Health," found in Doctor Charles Grab-ske an able instructor. President F. M. McDowell's young people's class, "Open Avenues in Christ's Service," received many helpful ideas and suggestions, and gave splendid attendance and attention. "Our Leadership of Church Service" class taught by Stake President Cyril E. Wight, gave excellent attention during its five sessions as Brother Wight handled his subject under several sub-topics: "Every Boy and Girl an Individual Case Problem"; "Definite Goals"; "The Human Spiritual Instrument"; "Relation of Revelation to the Problem of Christian Education," and others.

There was an enrollment in these three classes of one hundred and sixty, and the expenses were met by collections. Splendid order, punctuality, and spirituality characterized the two-week endeavor.

Grandview Church

Sunday was the annual home-coming for this congregation. Stake President C. E. Wight was the morning speaker, and in the evening Bishop J. A. Koehler finished a series of Sunday night sermons. Dinner was served by the women at one o'clock, and at two-thirty a prayer meeting was held. At this hour reminiscences of experiences and prayers and testimonies were heard and enjoyed. Grandview is the continuation of the Armstrong Church organized in the 70's.

Argentine Church

Argentine congregation was favored with a splendid sermon by Stake President C. E. Wight Sunday night.

Mount Washington Church

The Stake Leadership School at Central Church, October 17 to 23, found five members from this group enrolled in the various classes.

During the month the following speakers have occupied this pulpit, Elders John Blackmore and T. A. Beck, of Independence, and Elders H. A. Gould, R. L. Bishop, and W. F. Bolinger, of the local group.

Brother Blackmore, speaker on College Day, talked of the need of education in the church today. His appeal was to old and young. "The Place of College in Christianity Today," was his theme.

"A Purpose True," was the topic of Brother Beck, and he stressed the "power of a purpose." He took his text from Doctrine and Covenants 22.

October 9 Ellora Siler, a primary student, was baptized by the pastor. In the following service Brother Gould spoke to the children of their covenant made with God when they were baptized, and stressed how they can help God's work, their parents, and each other by being faithful to that covenant. The pastor spoke briefly to the parents on their duty to their children and to the entire church family.

Elders Bishop and Bolinger spoke alternately on the theme of the month, "Thy Kingdom Come."

Sister Dobson, a devoted member, passed away October 13, and was laid to rest in Mound Grove Cemetery October 15. The funeral service was in charge of the pastor. She is survived by her husband and seven children. The sympathy of the Saints is extended to the bereaved family.

The O. B. K.'s sponsored the program the evening of October 30, presenting a variety of pleasing numbers. Elder R. L. Bishop, the speaker, talked hopefully and encouragingly to the young people. Leonard Dunlap was in charge, and Frank Hunter directed the music, assisted by Lois Gibson at the piano. There were two splendid vocal solos by Raymond Bleil.

A group of young people from Englewood attended this service, accompanied by Sister Florence Moore. Their acceptance of the invitation extended them made Mount Washington young people very happy.

God's people are a "peculiar" people when they keep all His commandments.—Frank McDonald, in a sermon at Walnut Park Church, Independence.

The Christian church is built upon the fact that Jesus rose from the grave.—Charles Edward, Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

Minneapolis, Minnesota

Visited by President F. M. McDowell

A number of Saints from Minneapolis attended Northern Minnesota district conference held at Duluth, September 23 to 25. President F. M. McDowell and the Minneapolis pastor, Brother Charles Johnson, and wife, were among the number present.

Apostle J. F. Curtis had been holding a series of meetings at Duluth, and through his happy and instructive sermons the Saints of that city gained much in spiritual strength.

There was good attendance at the conference and the different sections were well represented. Brother McDowell's sermons were inspiring to young and old.

On Sunday morning there was a fine sacrament service, and a great degree of the Spirit was present. The testimonies indicated humility and a true desire on the part of the Saints to carry on God's work.

Duluth members may well be congratulated for their competent and energetic management. Their church is nearly free of debt. The women of the branch served splendid meals, and all received the visitors most cordially.

President McDowell returned with Minneapolis Saints and was present at the business meeting held September 26. This service was quiet and orderly, and in every instance the votes were unanimous for each officer chosen.

On Tuesday evening the women's department served dinner for the priesthood and other officers and their wives and husbands. Following the dinner Brother McDowell talked to the workers. His instruction inspired each officer and member of the branch to make local services really successful for the coming year.

Frankfort Branch

Northern Wisconsin

Visiting speakers have contributed to the enjoyment of local Saints and have helped to build up the work.

Brother and Sister M. R. Shedd, of Post Oak, Missouri, were visiting here, and he occupied the pulpit twice, assisted in sacrament and prayer services, and as a result of the visit of Brother A. Whitehead, of Muskegon, Michigan, he baptized eight, completing four family circles. Others are near the kingdom.

The minister visited in the homes of Saints and many nonmembers, administered to the sick, took the sacrament to isolated members, conducted two funeral services, and performed one marriage ceremony. His time was fully occupied, doing good and laboring for the cause of Christ. Before he returned home a farewell party was given him and a good number spent a pleasant evening.

Plays for Amateur Dramatic Groups

The following List of Plays is furnished by the kindness of George Mesley, of Kansas City Stake, who prepared it with the assistance of various church workers.

(Amateur dramatic groups are cautioned to observe all rights on royalty plays, and to communicate with the publishers before using them.)

- (1) AND THE DEVIL LAUGHS, by Althea Thurston. Four men, two women, exterior, thirty minutes. The play with a moral, but which does not moralize. Buoyant youth flouts the older orthodoxy and it challengingly insists that it shall and will experience the forbidden things of life. The older orthodoxy and conservative folk also will taste of the forbidden fruit when they are certain they are not being observed. In University of Utah Plays. Royalty $10. Price 75 cents.
- (2) AND THERE WAS LIGHT. Play in one act. By Charles O'Brien Kennedy, based on a story by Irvin S. Cobb. One man, three women. Interior scene. Modern costumes. Plays thirty minutes. A beautiful incident, showing how a doctor and his fiancée taught a wealthy spoiled woman a little lesson in life. In "One-Act Plays for Stage and Study," second series. Price $3.15, postpaid, also separately, price 30 cents. Royalty $10.
- (3) BACK HOME. A ghost play in one act by William M. Sloane III. The cast is two men and a woman, the setting a deserted room. Steve and Jimmy have robbed a bank and are on their way to safety. At dusk a thunderstorm forces them to take shelter in an abandoned farmhouse. Something about the old room troubles Jimmy; finally he realizes it is the house from which, as a boy, he ran away. And then, in a doorway, he sees the quiet ghost of his mother. When the rain is over, Steve goes away alone. The atmosphere of this play is unique and effective. Books are 50 cents each; royalty $10 with admission, $5 without.
- (4) BISHOP'S CANDLESTICKS, by McKinnel; (French). Price 30 cents. One act. Setting simple. Twenty-five minutes. Eight persons, five speaking parts. This is a dramatic version of the scene from Les Misérables. The convict breaks into the bishop's house and is clothed and warmed. The benevolence of the Bishop somewhat softens the convict, but when he sees the silver candlesticks that would provide him with means of escape, he steals them—is captured in flight, and is brought back. He expects to go back to jail, but the Bishop informs the police that they are a gift. He then departs, to start life over again, with the Bishop's blessing. Royalty $5.
- (5) CLOD, THE, by Lewis Beach. Four men, one woman, interior. Civil War costumes. Forty minutes. One of the most effective one-act plays ever written. The Clod has been, ever since its production, a little theater classic. Excellent drama. A wounded northern soldier takes refuge in the home of an old lady who hates soldiers of both north and south. Because they abuse her she shoots the guard who pursue the refugee. Royalty $10. Price 75 cents.
- (6) CONFESSIONAL, by Percival Wilde. One act, two women, three men, interior scene. Modern costumes. Thirty-five minutes. Robert Baldwin of unblemished integrity, his wife and their two children are put to the test. What it reveals to them is the subject of the play. Price 35 cents. Royalty $10.
- (7) CHINA PIG, THE, Three women. By Evelyn Emig Mellon (Baker). A story of a mother's sacrifice for her daughters. Price 75 cents.
- (8) EMBERS, by George Middleton. One act, two men, two women. One interior. Forty-five minutes. Modern costumes. A drama full of sentiment, dealing with the influence of a woman upon the life of a famous man, who in turn is able to save her only son from destruction. Price 35 cents. Royalty $5. (French.)
- (9) EMBRYO, by Percival Wilde. One act. Three men, two women. Thirty minutes. The author commences to write the play. He falls asleep. His characters, in a play within a play, discuss themselves and him, and work out their imaginary problems only to find that they are far, far different. Price 35 cents. Royalty $10. (French.)
- (10) FOURSQUARE, by Leo B. Pride. Five males, interior, modern costumes. Twenty-five minutes. A prize winning play. It has to do with an old carpenter who without knowing it preaches a great sermon about a friend who has just died. A most appealing and human little play. Published only in volume. "The Shadow of the Mine." Price $1.50. Royalty $5.
- (11) HIGHNESS, by Ruth Giorloff. One act. Two men, two women. Easy interior. Twenty-five minutes. Time, the present. A Soviet soldier enjoys his privileges in new Russia, but a scrubwoman recalls some of the glory of the old regime. A young secretary, serving an official of the Soviet, has to judge a girl, a former aristocrat, for concealing jewels. He recognizes her as a childhood sweetheart and they plan to elope. They are assisted in escaping by the scrubwoman. Price 50 cents. Royalty $10 if admission is charged; $5 if no admission. Longman's Plays.
- (12) HOOR GLASS, by Yeats (in Plays in Prose and Verse), (French.) Price $2.50. The triumph of faith. Two men, two women, two children, and three extras. Simple costumes and scenery. One scene, forty minutes. Semi-skilled leadership. Symbolical play telling the tale of a wise man and a fool—the wise man has only an hour to live.
- (13) IMMERSION, by Maude Humphrey. Two men, two women. Interior. Modern costumes. Plays thirty minutes. Here is a genuine folk-play written round the figure of an itinerant preacher. It was first produced by the Department of Drama, Yale University. Published only in Yale One-act Plays. Price $2. Royalty $10 with admission, $5 without.
- (14) IN HONOR BOUND, by Sidney Grundy. (French.) Modern costumes. Time forty minutes. Interior scene. Two men, two women. Strong English play which tells the story of a woman's honor redeemed by her husband. No royalty; 25 cents.

- (15) JON, by Dorothy O. Savage. Three men, three women. Forty minutes. A strong, touching short play. Laid in a fisherman's cottage on Scottish coast. The types are fisher folk, primitive and vivid. (Baker's); 75 cents.
- (16) JUDGE LYNCH, by John Williams Rogers, jr. One act; two men, two women. Exterior. Modern costumes. Thirty minutes. A tensely dramatic play with a lynching as background, in which we sense the tragedy of terror and horror that lies at the bottom of the souls of so-called civilized men. The story of a Negro who was not guilty, but who paid the penalty as if he were. Price 50 cents. Royalty $10. (French.)
- (17) LEGEND, by Constance Powell Anderson. Tragedy. One act. One man, three women. Interior; modern costumes; thirty minutes. In a lonely cottage Bridget Dolan urges her mother to let her go for a short holiday. Her cousin, Kitty, will look after Mrs. Dolan. A letter for Bridget brings money for their passage to America. The old woman will not be persuaded to leave. Bridget is forced to choose between duty and a desire to get away from the barren life she has led. Price 30 cents. Royalty $5. (Samuel French.)
- (18) MAKER OF DREAMS, THE. One act. Two males, one female. Pierrot costume and one modern for a man. Forty-five minutes. One interior. Pierrette lavishes on Pierrot her love and care but his fancy is for ladies who flatter his vanity by praising his songs. Cupid, the maker of dreams, enters disguised and very cleverly leaves the two to the realization that happiness has all the time been waiting for them. Royalty $8; 50 cents. (French.)
- (19) MARCH WIND, by Alice Brown. Two men, one woman, and one little girl. An ill wind on a March day brings an interfering old man to a peaceful and happy household, bringing distrust and doubt. The scene is tense and as the wind dies down so does the play end in peace and quiet. Royalty $10. (Baker's.)
- (20) MISS CIVILIZATION. Comedy in one act. Richard Harding Davis. Four men, one woman. One interior. Thirty minutes. Modern costumes. Two burglars break into the house of a millionaire. They are amused by the girl until the police come and capture them. Thirty-five cents. No royalty. (French.)
- (21) MEMORY ROSE. One act, by C. F. Bantin. Two men, three women. (Two female parts played by same person.) One interior. Modern costumes. Thirty minutes. This is a very dramatic and sentimental story about a judge who nearly passes sentence on the young man who is engaged to marry the daughter of the woman who had deserted him (the judge) years before. Price 30 cents. Royalty $5. (French.)
- (22) MAN IN THE STREET, THE, by Louis N. Parker. One act. Two males, one female. Modern costumes. Thirty minutes. One interior. An artist marries a destitute girl whose parents have driven her into the streets. One of the models happens to be the girl's father, who wants to trade on her improved position, but his better self prevails and he takes his departure. Thirty cents. Royalty $5. (French.)
- (23) MARTHA'S MOURNING, by Phoebe Hoffman. Three women. One interior. Thirty minutes. The story deals with the deathbed repentance of a miserly old woman. Martha, her niece, endeavors to bring about a change of heart and peace of mind, all to no avail, until feigning sleep when an inquisitive neighbor calls, Aunty is surprised at the spunk Martha exhibits in her defense. The minute the door is closed on the neighbor by the indignant Martha, Aunty proceeds to make the most of her limited time and Martha's mourning is planned and her future is assured. Royalty $5. Price 35 cents. (Baker.)
- (24) MANSIONS. One man, two women. Tells of the struggles of a boy and a girl against the narrow ancestor worship of an old family. The boy wins in death. Good drama. Simple setting.
- (25) MEN FOLK—in a book of one-act plays entitled, "All on a Summer's Day," by Ryerson and Clements, published by D. Appleton & Company. A short story of the seashore where women wait in vain for the men to return. In the same book is a strong play entitled "Storm."
- (26) OTHER SIDE, THE, by Jack Stuart Knapp, is a drama for four men. No formal stage is required. Portrays the tragedy of the executioner in a state's prison. He, cold, calm, and collected, "pushes a switch for three hundred dollars." One time his nerve cracks and the real meaning of his job comes home to him. (Longman's Plays), 50 cents. Royalty if admission is charged, otherwise $5.
- (27) OLD WALNUT, by Allena Harris. Two men, two women. An attic setting. Grandpa and grandma don't care much for modern things and slip up to the attic to enjoy the discarded walnut furniture of their youth. Fifty cents. Royalty is $5. (Longman's plays.)

Sermons and Allegiance Meeting Sunday morning. Basket dinner. Class work in afternoon. Program in evening including the pageant, "The Call to Youth." Among the speakers will be Elders Roy Cheville, Leonard Lea, and Ward A. Hougas. A full program, a cordial welcome, and a good time for everyone.—Helen R. Beadnall, young people's secretary.

Joseph Smith Centennial Convention and Institute

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 5 to 13. We are happy to be able to announce to Saints of New York and Philadelphia District that President F. M. McDowell and Apostle Paul M. Hanson will be with us for our convention, November 5 and 6, and Institute, November 7 to 13. Meetings have been tentatively arranged as follows: Saturday at 3 p. m., Apostle Hanson will speak. At 5 p. m. supper will be served for the visitors arriving. In the evening at seven thirty o'clock, President McDowell will speak, and afterwards there will be a reception in the lower auditorium of the church, at which time Brooklyn Saints will give the entertainment, and the K. U. Club will serve refreshments. Sunday will be commenced with a young people's prayer service at 8 a. m. in charge of President McDowell, and at the same time Apostle Hanson will lecture to the priesthood. The church school will be held at 9.30 a. m., and the sacrament service will be at 11 a. m., in charge of Brother McDowell and Brother Hanson. In the afternoon there will be, perhaps, a roundtable discussion, and in the evening a sermon by Apostle Hanson. Every night the following week, Saturday excepted, there will be two class periods, one taught by President McDowell and the other by Apostle Hanson. It is particularly urged that all take advantage of these classes and arrange to register for credit.

Visitors are requested to notify us in advance, if possible, of their coming, that suitable accommodations can be arranged.—District presidency, by Henry L. Livingston, 112 West Ontario Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Joseph Smith Centennial Celebration

Plano, Illinois, November 6. The centennial celebration of the birth of Joseph Smith, planned for November 6 by District President R. E. Davey and assistants, will be of interest to all members of Northeastern Illinois District. You will miss much if you do not attend. President Frederick M. Smith will be present and will be the speaker at the centennial service in the afternoon. Following is an outline of the day's program: Church school, 10 a. m.; district sacrament service, 11; centennial service, 2.30 p. m.; play presented by Plano Branch, assisted by surrounding branches, 7 p. m. A cordial invitation is extended by Plano Branch to all who can come to enjoy this occasion with them.—Harold T. McCaig, jr., district publicity agent.

FOR THE FIRST TIME!

During the past sixty days scores of loyal Latter Day Saints have enjoyed our commercial printing service for the first time in their experience—and they are enthusiastic about it. They have found the workmanship and materials to be of excellent quality, the price has been right, and our 24-hour printing service has brought the finished job right to their door in extra quick time. But best of all they know that their loyalty is helping the Church when it needs help.

Many of the jobs have been small, but the total is surprisingly large. During the past two months it has been an important factor in our success. It has kept worthy members employed and has assisted the Church in meeting the demands of the day. When you need printing service of any kind be Church Minded and send it to your own institution. We are no farther away than the mail box.

Bread and Milk

"Bread and milk" for most of us brings back happy memories of childhood, when milk had cream on it and the bread was the fine old-fashioned home-made variety. It was a delectable dish for a pause during play on a long summer afternoon. For many it was a standard supper dish.

But how would you like to live on it, exclusively, for a whole year?

You'll never know until you try it. Almost anything will get tiresome if you have nothing else.

At least one family in our community, consisting of the young father and mother, and two children, have lived on bread and milk for a whole year, and they have carried on their work, sent their children to school, and kept brave through it all.

The father of the family is an automobile mechanic who has been without work for more than a year. He has had a few chances to do repair work on cars, but only for neighbors who were without employment like himself, and they could not pay.

In good times he had saved his money and invested it in a little home with a bit of land at the edge of town. This provided a place for the children to play, and pasture for the cow who has helped to save the family.

Not long ago a few hours' work came to the father. He decided to furnish a treat for the family. Cream of wheat! We know the dish is good, but times are hard when a family has to celebrate with it.

They aren't kicking or complaining. A lot of people will never know of their difficulties. You could never tell they are troubled by looking at them. They keep brave all the time.

They continue their church work. And when a little money comes their way they don't forget to give a part of it to the church.

That is a good family.

Politics

As we prepare this material for the press we see the closing of an exciting political campaign. The oratory is over, and the voting has begun. People are offering us a ride to the polls who would never offer us a ride under any other circumstances. People are tipping their hats to us who will totally ignore us the rest of the four years. People are speaking to us today who will not speak to us again until the next election. And some who know how we are going to vote are not speaking to us at all. For the moment we are important; for this one time only we can parade as somebody. But we are not deceived. It is not for us, but for something we have that they want that they are all so concerned about us. And we are already beginning to yawn, and feeling about ready for another four years of neglect and peace, for we are heartily weary of all this hullabaloo. After all, politics is nothing but politics; and politicians are—well, you describe them.

THE PIGEON.

Editorial

What Is Zion?

We call our ideal of society Zion, and a stranger listening to the sermons that are delivered in our pulpits would carry away the impression that we are all talking about the same thing. In its broader significance we are, and as we see it the elements required to build Zion are pretty well agreed on in most minds: a place that will provide a condition of security, a people that provide an example of righteousness, and an organization of social and economic life that will promote their justice, welfare, and happiness. This is a beautiful ideal.

And yet we hear diverse accounts of how the procedure is to be undertaken. Some say that the people must first be thoroughly converted, that "Zion is the pure in heart," and that there can be no Zion until we are pure in purpose and motive. Others at the same time see the necessity of beginning immediately with a new type of social and economic organization, which will develop a better kind of people than we now are. Some think we need only "evangelize the world." Others think we need only organize our own people on a stewardship basis. Both are right and both are wrong.

There we are: Man is a product of his environment; the environment is the product of men associating. In other words, the egg was laid by a chicken, and the chicken was hatched from an egg. Where do you start to make the ideal cycle of egg and chicken? Where do you start to make the ideal combination of perfect man and perfect society? And it is as easy to tell how to build Zion as it is to answer that question.

Ours is not the only religious organization facing the question. In other terms, it is true, but with practically the same type of factors in the situation, the rest of the Christian world is confronted with the problem. Is man to be redeemed from his present ills with a religious revival directed at the cleansing of his soul, or is he to be redeemed by new organization, new political and economic structure and new activities?

An editorial in the Federal Council Bulletin for October, 1932, handles the question with a great deal of ability and judgment. By applying the statements to our own situation, we can learn much from it.

Never was there a time when the world more needed the Christian witness, whole and complete, than today. Nothing less will suffice for a society that is confused, but not knowing what direction to turn; sick, but uncertain how to find healing. Yet the Christian Church, to which the world has a right to look, is itself speaking in a badly divided voice. One group demands "individual redemption"; another, "social redemption." Each insists that it must be "either-or."

The attitude of both groups is understandable, and except for its exclusiveness is right. When a man in his own soul finds God through Christ, he experiences a joy and a peace never known before, a joy and peace so glorious that like the disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration he is tempted to tarry there instead of descending with the Master to the plain of the daily social relationships of the world. If it were not so, how could we find so many Christians who rest satisfied with their own private experience and are complacently unconcerned with the bitter wrong and suffering and injustice in the world around them? How could we find them inactive and indifferent in the face of the prospect of war or the reality of millions doomed to unemployment and hunger?

And the unconcern of one-sided Christians with terrible evils tempts the other group to go to the opposite extreme and to proclaim Christianity only in social terms. With some, one fears, this social emphasis may even become a substitute for personal salvation. They fall into the perilous error of assuming that there can be social righteousness without personal righteousness. They direct attention to the sins of society and forget their own sins and their own need for purified hearts. They forget that we can never have a better world without better men to compose it, that we can never build a cooperative and unselfish social order on the basis of mean and selfish individuals.

Let both groups get back to the "fullness of Christ." His gospel is not an "either-or" extreme but a "both-and" unity. If anything is clear in His teaching, it is that the kingdom of God can be built only by those who in their own individual lives have found inner redemption from sin and self and fear. But it is no less clear that He thought of the entire range of men's social life as standing in need of redemption. When we learn not to put asunder what He has joined together we shall proclaim His gospel to the world in its full power.

We need both. We need the redeemed and cleansed individual to build the right kind of society. We need a better type of society to promote the development of improved character. Neither can be had without the other. We can not build the Zion that is the "pure in heart" if people continue to live in a competitive and commercialized world. We can not build a perfect organization of imperfect people. We must carry on our work of evangelizing the world. But that is not all. It is not enough to bring people in through the doors of the Kingdom. There is no magic that will lead them "on to perfection." With those same aspiring and imperfect people we must proceed to the difficult work of building Zion, the community of our dreams.

Loyal Members Grant Interest Reductions

The Appeal of Church Officers to Bondholders Brings Some Generous Responses

Letters from members who hold bonds, and who are willing to put the welfare of the church and the payment of allowances to missionary families before their own desires have been coming to the office of the Presiding Bishopric in the last few weeks.

Readers will recall that in the Herald for September 28, there was printed an appeal to the holders of the Debenture Bonds (Ten Year Five Per Cent Gold Bonds) to accept an annual rate of interest of three per cent instead of five per cent for the period from July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1934. This call was signed by the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric.

Realizing the serious conditions of the times and the problems confronting the church, many holders of the Debenture Bonds are responding and agreeing to the proposed reduction. It is hoped that all will so respond.

Some of the letters follow:

"I was surely glad to get your check. When it did not come on the fifteenth or twenty-first of October, I thought it was impossible for you to pay me. I had only $29.00 and a ton of coal bought for the winter, so I commenced to live on $1.00 a week. I was doing very well so far, but I pay $2.00 per month for my room rent. I knew I could get along until the first of the year when I thought you would be able to pay me by that time. I lost my place where I had worked and saved for over twenty years. Now I am earning only a few cents once in awhile, and on account of a nervous breakdown I am not able to go out and work hard at anything. I am sending you tithing on the money you sent me, and on money I had earned before, and an offering. I will try to get along on the reduction of 2 per cent interest from now on if I can. I am anxious to see the church prosper, and I hope all the Saints who possibly can will pay their tithes. And I hope Zion will be redeemed." (From an elderly sister who is one of our creditors.)

Merely a postscript (but full of meaning) from a sister who is a creditor of the church.

"Certainly I am willing to make the desired reduction of interest."

"I realize that the financial condition of the country is in bad shape and that many of our members are out of employment and that many like myself have had to take reductions in wages and lost time, but I feel sure that many like myself have not had to do without anything and it is to them that I wish to make this appeal.

"I am enclosing herein five dollars, one dollar for each member of my family, two dollars for two others who are not able to contribute anything, and I appeal to all members who are able to send a dollar for themselves and whatever they can so that one dollar for each member will be received by you." (From a brother in the gospel.)

OFFICIAL

Our Program and Its Aim

During the last twenty months three distinct calls have been made by the general church officials to the membership of the church for periods of sacrifice to provide financial means to carry on the work of the church. The response given to these calls has brought temporary relief and has enabled the church to meet many of its pressing obligations. It is quite obvious, however, that permanent relief can be obtained only through a continuous program of economy and personal sacrifice on the part of all the members of the church.

It has been our aim during the same period to effect such economies in the administration of the finances of the general church as would justify our coming to the Saints asking for the whole-hearted support of every man, woman, and child. While there are some minor savings yet to be effected it is our opinion that we have now reached the point where our operating budget is practically at a minimum.

Because of this we trust that all may feel free to extend their loyal support to the program we are now undertaking which ultimately will relieve the burdens now resting upon us as a church. It is fitting that a continuous program such as we are now launching should begin with a period of sacrifice and prayer, for it will bring to us spiritual strength and assurance for the longer task ahead of us, as well as bring monetary returns necessary for temporary relief.

We recognize the ravages of the depression throughout the world resultant in declining incomes, unemployment, low prices of farm products, shrinkage of capital assets, depreciated land and real estate values, all of which has brought misery and suffering among our people as well as others of the world.

To come now in the face of all of these sufferings and privations asking our people that even further sacrifice be made would seem like hollow mockery were it not for the great outstanding truth in which we believe, that This is the Church of God, and being the church of God there is no other thing that we can do but submit to those who profess to and do believe that it is His church the great need now confronting it.

We do not ask for the impossible, we but ask for the sincere effort and consecrated contribution of each and all according to ability and desire. We ask it, however, not only for and during the immediate sacrifice period but for and through the years 1933, '34 and on, until the debt is paid.

Our immediate needs for three months are in round numbers as follows:

Family allowances and
Elders' Expenses	$34,000.00
Saints' Homes	2,300.00
Aid	3,750.00
Consecration Contracts	3,000.00
Graceland College	7,300.00
Principal Payments	27,000.00
Interest Payments	32,000.00
Real Estate Taxes	5,800.00
Other Budget Items	4,850.00
	$120,000.00

Our aim then is twofold—the raising of this amount for present needs and the perfecting of our program looking toward the payment of our debt in full. Material is being sent to district and branch officers giving detailed suggestions for the organization of local forces to assist in this program. Some of the steps were presented in the Herald of September 28.

Many evidences of desire on the part of our membership for such a program come daily to our office, and many encouraging letters have been received. In another column of the Herald will be found copies of a few of these letters which are indicative of the desire of many to be helpful.

Because it is also your church as well as theirs and ours we now come asking that each and all seize the opportunity of service.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

By G. L. DELAPP.

Today there are more than a hundred heirs apparent in the various German States. All they do is complain of their fate instead of becoming eminent in some profession and showing their mettle. That is why this monarchy business is steadily losing customers; that is why all over Germany there are empty thrones, gathering dust like empty boxes in a theater.—Emil Ludwig, in his first American lecture.

Report of Income for Month of September

We have just received the last of the Bishops' and Agents' Reports for the month of September and are herewith submitting a comparative statement by districts. It is to be noted that the receipts are approximately $3,100.00 under those of September a year ago.

The total receipts for the first nine months of this year amount to $200,201.66 as compared to $277,351.46 for the same nine months in 1931. While this is a substantial reduction (approximately $77,000.00) we feel that the Saints should not be discouraged.

Our operating budget for the first nine months of this year amounts to $216,000.00, making a shortage of about $16,000.00. We are hopeful that this shortage will be overcome during the next two months. Other figures relative to our needs for the coming months are submitted in another article in this issue.

THE FOUNDATIONS OF OUR FAITH

By Elbert A. Smith

1. What was the statement of the late President Joseph Smith concerning the three books?
2. What did he say about the "policy" of the church?
3. Why are the three books necessary? What separate function does each perform?
4. What course of thinking does the author recommend to those who have questions in their minds about the books?
5. Ask the class members how long it was after they were baptized before they received the testimony of the truth of the three books.

WHAT PRICE PRAYER?

By E. J. Hayden

1. What kind of prayers cost nothing?
2. What value have these costless prayers?
3. What are your conclusions about prayer after reading the story?

Thanksgiving Service

(This order of service has been prepared for the use of pastors throughout the church. It may be used in its entirety or with any changes thought necessary, or some other form of service may be substituted for it.)

Prelude:

"Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," new Saints' Hymnal, 428.

Call to Worship:

Psalm 100.

Responsive Hymn:

"Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," new Saints' Hymnal, 14.

Prayer:

The minister will find inspiration in this prayer in reading Mosiah 1: 52, 53.

Congregational Hymn:

"Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," new Saints' Hymnal, 428.

Scripture Readings:

Mosiah 11: 62-70 and Malachi 3: 10-12.

Short Sermon:

Causes for Thanksgiving. Note the suggestions in the following poem:

"The roar of the world is in my ears,
Thank God for the roar of the world.
Thank God for the mighty tide of fears
Against me always hurled.

"Thank God for the bitter and ceaseless strife,
And the sting of his chastening rod,
Thank God for the stress and pain of life,
And oh, thank God for God."

—Joyce Kilmer, in "Thanksgiving."

Congregational Hymn:

"Now Thank We All Our God," new Saints' Hymnal, 427.

In 1636 there was a war progressing between France and Germany. For nearly a year one of the German cities had been besieged. Sometimes between thirty and forty people died there in a day. There was but one minister, Martin Rinkart, and it was under these conditions that he wrote this hymn. Again the Word of the Lord:

Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7; 12: 3.

The Thank Offering:

Play number 121 in new Saints' Hymnal.

This offering may be made in the sacrifice envelope. If the duplex envelope system is not used, any other method of receiving the offering may be used.

Congregational Hymn:

"God of Our Fathers," new Saints' Hymnal, 426.

Benediction:

Quietly play "Consecration" after the benediction.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle J. F. Curtis Baptizes Twelve

Saints in Minnesota and the Dakotas have been enjoying the services of Apostle J. F. Curtis who has charge of the North Central States Mission. On October 30, he baptized twelve persons in Clitherall Lake, Minnesota.

Leichhardt Young People Have Special Study Course

The Dorian Literary Society which functions under the Leichhardt Church School, Australia, is composed of a group of young people who wish to follow the injunction given by the Lord to his church in such commands as "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom." Organized on carefully thought out lines, with a program involving the utmost of personal expression in worth-while activities, the Dorian Society is growing. It hopes to do a vast amount of good in the branch. The aims and ideals of its members are expressed in the motto the society has adopted, "Altiora peto!" which is "Higher things my goal."

Sister Viola V. Short Is Dead

Sister Viola V. Short, seventy-eight years old, passed away at her home in Independence, Missouri, November 1, as the result of a broken hip which she suffered on September 13. With her husband, Morris T. Short, she came to Independence many years ago, and here she was known as a loyal church member, a friend and a worker. She was an author in her own right, having written The Fourth Relaford; local librarian for some time; one of the organizers of the Laurel Club and the Pen and Ink Club. Her good gift of service, which was her life, has been gratefully accepted by the church. The funeral was held from the Stone Church, November 3, President F. M. Smith preaching the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove.

Eightieth Birthday for Doctor Joseph Luff

Friends and relatives in Independence helped Doctor Joseph Luff celebrate his eightieth birthday October 31. Brother Luff was born at Toronto, Ontario, in 1852, and joined the church in May of 1876. For many years he served the church as a missionary, and for twenty-one years he was a member of the Quorum of Twelve. He came to Independence in 1879. Brother Luff's health is excellent, and he goes actively about his work.

Apostle D. T. Williams Takes Up Winter Circuit

Reports from several Michigan branches indicate that Apostle D. T. Williams already has taken up his winter's circuit in the Great Lakes Mission (Michigan and Ontario). He is presenting another series of sermons, and visits the numerous branches as frequently as possible, each time delivering a new sermon of the series. This plan of work he found very successful last year.

Brother Williams is a welcome helper in his mission, and is the only missionary to work in many of the local groups. Among the places he has recently visited are Muskegon, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, and November 11, he is scheduled as speaker in an all-day meeting at Tawas City, Michigan.

President F. M. Smith Visits Birthplace

It was fitting that President Frederick M. Smith should celebrate the centennial anniversary of the birth of his father, Joseph Smith III, November 6, with the old home branch at Plano, Illinois. President Smith was born at Plano in 1874.

Baptisms Reported in News This Week

The church rejoices that no "depression" has been experienced in the zeal with which general and local missionaries are telling the gospel story. As a result of their faithful labors many are joining the church. Here are listed baptisms reported in the News this week, the fruits of many days of missionary work:

Cherryvale, Kansas, 7; Grand Island, Nebraska, 8; De Soto, Kansas, 5; Clitherall, Minnesota, 12; Hastings, Nebraska, 1; Drumright, Oklahoma, 7; Battle Creek, Michigan, 7; Independence, Kansas, 2; Oshoto, Wyoming, 1; Palisade, Minnesota, 2; Muskegon, Michigan, 11; Esther, Missouri, 9; Skiatook, Oklahoma, 4; Kalamazoo, Michigan, 4, and Holden Stake, 49 (record for the past year reported to recent district conference).

C. J. Hunt in Far West Stake

Brother C. J. Hunt, though superannuated by the last General Conference, continues his mission of good cheer and loyalty. Since the middle of October he has been hard at work in Far West Stake (Missouri), where he has visited eight branches and left the Saints much encouraged. He plans to visit all of the eighteen churches in the stake before Christmas.

The Foundations of Our Faith

VIII.—The Three Books of the Church

By Elbert A. Smith

In his old age, at a time when his eyes were blind but his spiritual vision unclouded, President Joseph Smith entered the pulpit of the old Brick Church in Lamoni, at the opening of a General Conference session, and groped about until he had found the three books. His hands upon them, he remarked, "Seeing is believing, but feeling is the naked truth." He felt deeply what he was about to say. Putting the books in order under his hands, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the book of Doctrine and Covenants, he continued, "Brethren, a threefold cord is not easily broken." He then exhorted the church to cherish the three books and believe and heed their teachings. Strangely enough, some who have praised him highly as the best and most inspired leader the church has ever known later utterly disregarded his injunction concerning the three books.

THE "POLICY" OF THE REORGANIZATION

Over a very long life and during a public ministry of half a century President Joseph Smith had tested the books in relation to the personal problems of life and the larger problems of the church as a whole. His earlier faith had been confirmed. The act recorded was but the crowning seal and confirmation of long years of teaching. Many years earlier at a time when he had been in the Presidency about eleven years and was in his very prime physically and spiritually he wrote a series of editorials for the Herald which are found in the third volume of Church History. At the close of the series he discussed the question, "What is the policy of the Reorganization?" (They were discussing "policies" even then.) Under this caption he said of the three books, that it was the policy of the church:

"To insist that the laws to govern the church are found in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the book of Doctrine and Covenants; that whatever is contained in those books as doctrine for the salvation of man, is the doctrine of the church; that whatever is taught to the church as doctrine, not in accordance with, or denies, contradicts, is in opposition to or contravenes the teaching found in those books is not the doctrine of the church; that all men, Latter Day Saints included, are amenable to God for their acts here, and always; that the scriptures are to all men for guidance, and that Latter Day Saints are not privileged to disregard that guidance, and that the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are scripture to Latter Day Saints.—Church History, volume 3, page 684.

John Fiske argued that if Nature reveals a God (as it does) Nature can not possibly be God's "ultimate word to man." Nor is it. A fuller revelation of his will has been made down the ages from time to time to the prophets: inspired men, some with a message of major importance and others (by comparison) having one of minor importance. These revelations of his will concerning individuals and the church are gathered up in the three books. President Smith's indorsement of the three books but voiced the will of the church. All of them have been indorsed repeatedly by the voice of the church in General Conference and by the consistent attitude of the church. So far as any people can make law binding upon themselves by their own voice the three books are made binding upon this church. They are our constitutional law; and more authoritative than the voice of the people is the word of the Lord which they contain.

THE THREE STAND TOGETHER

All three of the books have been made the object of frequent if not constant attack. The grounds in each case are much the same. Probably no argument has been urged against one that has not been employed against one or both of the others. (Ingersoll was more brilliant and able in attacking the Bible than any man has yet been in attacking the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants.) For example, it is urged by some that changes have been made in the revelations appearing in the book of Doctrine and Covenants. Some of those making this charge find no difficulty at all in supporting the Bible, though one critic has alleged fifty thousand changes in the text of the New Testament alone as compared with the earlier manuscripts; while the Old Testament, going back much farther to its sources, has no doubt suffered even more variations. This is but an illustration. That spirit of atheism which upon one pretext or another would reject one book, if consistent with its own arguments, must reject the other two. The three books have the same elements of weakness, which are human; and the same elements of strength, which are divine. The three stand on the same foundation—and it is a secure and defensible foundation.

"On the Wing"

By John W. Rushton

This last summer Apostle John W. Rushton went to the European Mission in which his General Conference appointment directed him to labor. We are pleased to present this very interesting account of the first stage of his itinerary, and of his arrival in his native England. The good wishes of our readers go with him in his journey.

To cross the ocean is no longer a novelty. Opportunity for travel is of easy access to all. The element of surprise is taken out of the travelogues and adventure is largely a matter of artificial creation and commercialization. The magic of Hollywood can now take any and all on the carpet of film and transport us to the remotest parts of the earth and cause to pass before our eyes scenes and events which are now commonplace. And all while we sit in comfortable opera seats amid the theatrical surroundings and accessories of the modern moving-picture show, for fifty cents a piece.

Just the same, there is for those who actually "go down to the sea in ships," a lure and fascination all its own.

At 5 p. m., Friday, July 22, this experience was mine again as the vessel which was to be my home for the next ten days backed into the stream, and by the help of fussy little tugs got herself adjusted for the eastern passage. It was raining and soon the little group of friends who came to bid me good-bye lost their identity in the large crowd gathered to witness the departure of the boat carrying away their friends. Tears and laughter, sobs and cheers, noise, fluttering of vari-colored paper ribbons, the waving of handkerchiefs, the raucous bellowing of the ship's siren and the wailing of a bugle somewhere in the bowels of the ship all mingle in a strange confusion. As the steamer rapidly passes the familiar landmarks, and the skyline is lost in the murky horizon there is a gripping at the throat and tears blur the vision. Then the Statue of Liberty comes into view and she lifts her torch as though to show the way across the restless waters either bidding adieu or welcoming the streams of voyageurs passing to and fro ceaselessly.

Then, turning away, the passengers go to their cabins and adjust their baggage and to get acquainted with their roommates. Not a soul we know, and it is a lonely world we are in, but we pick up the bundle of letters which have been placed on our bed by the steward and we begin to read the kindly farewells and good wishes of many friends from all over the country including the cherished ones from home. So as the distant land grows dim, and night is before us, we see the sun in westering has broken through the dark clouds behind and the skies are golden. It is an augury that all is fair in the west!

Soon, the passengers begin to find themselves and being of social instincts, we gradually break through the reserve and cultivate a friendly feeling. The ship becomes a world, a cosmos all to itself, and with the accommodation of human nature adjustments are made. The officers are skillful in their psychological ability and very tactfully smooth things out and get their family into a state of comfort and even hilarity. Indeed it is not infrequent that some of these contacts develop into romances with interesting sequels.

The Minnewaska made a record for herself during the late war. However, while the captain and several of the officers wear the string of silk ribbons indicating war services, they do not tell of these exploits; we read of them in a history of the naval aspects of that dreadful experience. Our ship had been a troop ship and had run the gauntlet in the Gallipoli expedition, so ill-fated and costly to Great Britain, and yet it was within sight of being a great and glorious achievement. We had a very smooth passage; the sea was like oil nearly all the way; not a passenger missed a meal, and they were good and very artistically served. I sat at the purser's table along with seven others; altogether we were a congenial group. My roommate was Doctor Carey of the University of Chicago (Medical Research department), presently attached to the Century of Progress in connection with the coming Chicago Exposition in 1933. He was a genial man and a boon companion.

The ninth day we ran into fog, drizzly rains, and chilly winds. Yes, it was the English coast. Through the dim veil of fog we could discern the outlines of land which proved to be the Scilly Isles. Night came on and there was regret that tomorrow the merry party would break up. At 5.30 next morning we looked through the porthole and saw we were passing the Isle of Wight. Soon, the rattle of windlasses and the noise on deck informed us that we were docking. Then came the ordeal of passing the British officers and the investigation of passports, etc. I found that this time there was a much stricter examination and coming into my native land as an alien was different from the previous times. We got by without any serious difficulty and then got through the customs easily and soon we were on English soil. The last time I had stood on that dock was in 1903 when I looked for the steamer which would bring to Great Britain the late Brethren Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans. Many changes since that bright and glorious summer morning of nearly thirty years ago have transpired!

What a garden spot England is in summer time! It was raining and the skies were leaden gray, but the beauty of the earth had responded and everywhere the greenery, the splashes of delicate colors from the myriads of flowers and the quaint little cottages with the red-tiled roofs all together made an unforgettable picture. After twenty-two years to see this land again brought emotions to the surface, experiences, and faces long since forgotten, and as the Southern Railway train rushed through at a speed of sixty miles an hour we were carried back to many memories until the whistle shrieked and our train passed over the Waterloo Bridge into the station of that same name. This bridge was named in commemoration of the victory of the Duke of Wellington at the battle of Waterloo over Napoleon Bonaparte in 1815. It is now being strengthened and repaired.

There we saw again the Houses of Parliament with the tower carrying Big Ben, the Westminster Abbey, and Saint Margaret's Church the scene of many fashionable weddings and religious events, the Thames Embankment with Thorneycroft's great group; Boadicea, Queen of the Iceni, the Egyptian Obelisk, and other familiar sights. Surely, it must be a dream to see these places again! Then Big Ben boomed out the half hour. It was half past ten Sunday morning, July 31, and here I was again in London. The last time I had heard Big Ben was Christmas Eve last, in our home in California as the chimes announcing the coming of Christmas Day were broadcast over America.

Well, there's no time for sentiment. Here we are and it is necessary to claim the baggage. But who is this coming up the platform? Surely, is it John Judd? By Jove, it is. Twenty-two years, however, have made a difference in the contour and the embonpoint. We recognize each other and give mutual greeting. Truly a fine gesture and a warm welcome to give the wanderer. I was still wearing my Japanese paper imitation Panama hat which was such a boon in America but would soon have been "mush" in the rains of this Sunday morning in London. So, we got my trunk and I found my felt and transferred the Japanese imitation to its nook until next summer. So, already Tosti's lament was in my ears—"Good-bye summer!" Yes, and only the last day of July.

Brother Joseph Holmes, of Mansfield, Nottinghamshire, had brought his family up to spend the Bank holiday in London and to enjoy the Southern District Reunion, so he had his American "Whippet" car waiting and soon we were on our way east to Enfield. By Charing Cross, down the Strand, by the Law Courts, along Fleet Street, up Ludgate Hill and there before us was the facade and dome of Saint Paul's Cathedral. The chimes were still ringing and a few stragglers were going up the steps to the entrances to worship. There came into my mind the memory of a famous painting which had attracted much attention twenty-five years before. The artist had taken this setting as his background, and filled the street with the customary London crowd of business men, tourists, gay women, flower-girls and beggars, all sorts and conditions were passing to and fro. Up and down the steps of the Cathedral also were many passing including a priest in his rich garb and discussing, apparently vehemently, with his companion. In the far corner of the picture was the lonely figure of the Son of God, standing sorrowing, looking at the passing multitudes, not one of whom noticed Him. Stay, there is one who notices this lonely Man. It is a little nurse-girl who has caught sight of him and is half-afraid; she lifts up her hands and with averted face hurries down the steps; running away from him. How tragically true is this artist's conception of the place of the Christ in human affairs! In 1914 there came the war and for four long years the earth was baptized with blood, fire and vapor of smoke. An awful price to pay for neglected and insulted ideals! Today, we are still milling around in the ghastly wreckage of those fearful years. Humanity is bewildered and helpless as without leadership it seeks to find a way out. On every lip trembles the age-long question: "To whom shall we go?"

The neglected Christ of twenty-five years ago is still waiting. Is it possible that we can be saved the inevitable fate which the rejection of Christ and all He means of the Highest and Best? Truly, only in Him is the Leadership which can lead us into the way of peace and contentment.

Great thoughts crowd the mind as we rush through the familiar streets. There is Aldgate, Whitechapel, and Mile End Road. The very spot on

Does history show or state in what year Christ was born?

This is a subject involving many intricate problems, and can not be treated exhaustively here. The chief means of determining exact dates of the Christian era and before are found in various references by writers to events which occurred a specified number of years before or after some other celebrated event. History was not anciently written with exact dates in the manner of today, but by comparing specified periods that elapsed the time has usually been determined more or less exactly. Some of these periods, however, are much more uncertain than others. For instance, from the Flood to Abraham was 292 years, if the Authorized Version is correct. But the LXX gives it as 1,172 years, and the Samaritan Version makes it 942 years.

New Testament and other writers of the early Christian period usually give little or nothing as to dates or the time that elapsed from one event to another. The custom of dating from Christ did not arise until some centuries afterward. Dionysius Exiguus, a Roman abbot who died about 545 A. D., was the historical author who dated the birth of Christ at January 1, year 1 A. D. Irenaeus and other Christians of the 2nd and 3rd centuries, however, place the date two or three years earlier. The historian Eusebius states (Book 1, Chapter V,) that Jesus was born the 28th year from the death of Antony and Cleopatra. This occurred 30 B. C. But other sources make this date subject to some doubt. Kepler identified the star seen by the "wise men" at the time of Christ's birth with the conjunction of Jupiter, Mars, and Saturn, placed in the year 7 B. C.

These and other data appear to show that our Lord was born not earlier than 7 B. C. and not later than 3 B. C. As evidence seems to indicate that he was crucified in the year 29 A. D., though some hold to 30 A. D., and that he was about 33 years of age at that time, the date of 3 B. C. perhaps best harmonizes with the weight of evidence.

When did Christ receive the Melchisedek priesthood? Was it at the Transfiguration?

The record shows that the transfiguration did not take place in the early part of the ministry of Christ. Before this event he had gone forth with his message, performing many miracles and manifesting his power and authority, including the choosing and ordaining of his apostles. He must have held his priesthood before this time, it would appear.

Some have supposed that texts in Hebrews (5: 9, 10; 6: 20; 7: 17; 8: 1) imply that Christ became high priest after his ascension, but this does not give full weight to other texts which indicate otherwise (see Hebrews 2: 17; 9: 11, 12). When we remember that Jesus was God manifest in the flesh (1 Timothy 3: 16; Book of Mormon 251: 28) and preexisted before man (John 8: 58; Colossians 1: 16), it seems clear that he was one of the Godhead and therefore the source of priesthood. Melchisedec himself derived his priesthood from this source, it being "after the order of the Son of God" (Inspired Version, Genesis 14: 28). The Doctrine and Covenants (76: 5; 104: 1) shows that before the time of Melchisedec this priesthood was "after the order of the Son of God."

It might then be asked, Why would the priesthood derived from Christ be afterward placed upon him? As one of the Godhead, Jesus had "more glory than Moses" (Hebrews 3: 3), for "he who hath builded the house hath more honor than the house." This also helps to show why the Melchisedec priesthood "holds the right of presidency" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 3). I do not recall any text which implies an earthly ordination of Jesus to priesthood, but Peter may refer to a preexistent ordination, though not necessarily so, when he declares that Jesus "verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world" (1 Peter 1: 20).

Has the minister the right to give the sacrament to little children too young for baptism?

Such a procedure would disregard the law of the church as enacted in Conference Resolution No. 91, which states:

That unbaptized persons, whether children or adults, are not entitled to partake of the sacrament of bread and wine.

When we consider the instructions given to the church in regard to worthiness and the real significance of the sacred emblems (1 Corinthians 11: 23-29; Book of Mormon 650: 32), and when we remember the distinctive position which this church holds in regard to divine authority and sacred ordinances of the church, the reason for this instruction is not difficult to understand. Church ordinances are subject to Him who gave them, and for the purpose which he has prescribed, and we have no authority to modify them. A. B. PHILLIPS.

Prayer and Testimony

Memories of an Active Life

By C. J. Hunt

This morning finds me in a reminiscent mood, with a desire to write you a letter. Forty years ago last April my name was first read from the list of missionary appointees at a General Conference and has continued on the list of the Lord's ambassadors in special lines of church endeavor until transferred, with others, to the superannuated list last conference—a change that was anticipated.

To the inexperienced or young people of the church, forty years in missionary work may seem a long time, but active service in such a blessed cause so helpful, brightening the lives of those who obey the gospel and conform their lives thereto, make the years seem comparatively short. (The sacrifices were made by my family during those years.)

To recall from memory's record grateful spiritual experiences that were helpful to others continues to enrich my life, brightening my hope in the final triumph of the restored gospel, which truth is a constant delight to preach, teach, and try to demonstrate by living it. A blessed heritage indeed.

It has been my sacred obligation to advocate the angel message, spiritual and temporal, in twelve states and two short missions in Canada. The memory of those years of association with loyal Saints and friends is near and dear to me. My ministerial diary records six thousand sermons preached at the close of last July, and in all those efforts I never invited or entertained doubts, fears, or despondency in preparing or preaching a sermon. The sacred charge of the Lord to this church was and is, "Be of good cheer," and I should heed it.

It has been my privilege to administer the divine rite of water baptism to those ranging in years from eight to ninety. Many of my brethren of the ministry have accomplished a much greater and more extensive work for the church, and I rejoice with them in their beneficent service.

It is true that our church is not large numerically here, but it is very great in numbers where the Savior and his Saints are waiting that glorious time—their return to this earth and the millennium ushered in, an event to be realized when the church militant has more fully fulfilled its divine mission. All members of this "marvelous work and a wonder" should under all conditions and circumstances labor to advance its interests. The blessed cause is divine, its final triumph has been assured by heaven's decree, hence an ultimate defeat or failure is unthinkable. A glorious future awaits this church and "faith, hope, and charity," including good works are engraved on the signboards along the safe way of travel to victory, while danger and irreparable loss await those who detour or turn back. I have, at times, experienced deep sorrow when some fell by the wayside, or were deceived by false teachers, destroying their usefulness and the possibilities for good to the church of their children.

This Latter Day Saint Church was authorized and supervised by God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, and their angels, and its continuation and final triumph will always be under the same heavenly direction.

By close observation I am confident that this church has made good advancement in many ways during this year, and the prospects and possibilities for a more rapid progress for good will be realized in the future months and years. Pray, live, and work for this church. In it is your salvation. To leave this church is to forsake God and his eternal plan of salvation.

At this writing I am, by request of officers of Far West Stake (Missouri) holding meetings in several of their branches, and the loyal support given me is truly appreciated. We sincerely trust that good will result from our association and services held.

Has Baptized a Thousand People Into the Church

By W. A. Smith

We began meetings at Hastings, Nebraska, October 3, in the home of Brother and Sister G. V. Davis, and then on Sundays we had all-day meetings at Grand Island, Nebraska, with fine attendance and good interest. There is a splendid little band of Saints at Grand Island, and about half a dozen Saints live in or near Hastings.

October 8, I led a noble woman into the waters of baptism. This makes eight I have baptized at Grand Island.

Our meetings at Hastings closed October 20, and we left some well interested. A sister there was baptized out of the Utah Church. We heard of her and that she was not satisfied and one afternoon talked for some time with her and her family. She had accepted the Utah faith but was dissatisfied. When I was holding meetings at Kearney, she came over with Brother and Sister Davis. She wanted to be baptized but I had closed my meetings and gone. Brother Hartman, a priest, baptized her, and when I returned to Hastings, we confirmed her. She is now rejoicing in the beautiful gospel.

I closed meetings at Hastings and arrived home late on Friday night. Here I found a letter requesting me to come to De Soto, Kansas, to baptize some candidates. I had held a series of meetings there before the April conference, and some believed but were not then baptized. Brother F. C. Smith had been going there every two weeks during the summer and others had grown interested. Answering the call, I went to De Soto late in October with Brother F. C. Smith. We held meetings and I was privileged to baptize five more precious souls. Everyone felt blessed in the services at that time. The five I baptized in De Soto made an even thousand candidates I have baptized into the church. I rejoice to see the good work move on.

Daughter Is Healed

By Mrs. Zolena Franklin

I, too, can tell of the goodness of God to me and mine. But here I shall take space to relate only one instance. My daughter was very sick. The doctors had given her up to die, and I was overwhelmed with grief at the thought of her husband and her three little children.

They took her to the hospital and I remained at home to care for the children and her husband. I can not describe the sorrow I experienced, and I prayed almost constantly, that she might be spared. I fasted, and I promised to give myself to God to do his will for the rest of my life if he would spare my daughter. Then each time when I visited her at the hospital, she seemed very low. I prayed all the way to and from her bedside, but she seemed to get no better.

Then one day I went down upon my knees and poured out my whole heart to God. He heard my prayer and I was told that if I would do his will always, he would restore my daughter's health. How happy I was! I wept for joy and when I went to see her my heart was light. She was sitting up in a chair eating her lunch. I will never forget the joy of that day. I returned home rejoicing and praising God.

She came home on Christmas day and was able to walk. She looked very well, and I told her what God had done for her and for me. She is now well and cares for her family and does her own work. My prayers are always for the Saints.

The Assurance of Faith

By George S. Lincoln

I have just passed through an experience which has been very valuable to me from a spiritual point of view. I spent five weeks in a hospital and underwent two operations for a serious internal trouble. I suffered a great deal, but was always helped when the elders administered to me though I was not healed.

Even though there were doctors and nurses around continually, I felt that I was among strangers and alone, and was only relieved when a Saint or one of my family came to see me. I made a remark to that effect to one of the elders who replied, "You are never alone."

Then I began to realize more fully the benefit of being a member of the church and having a claim on the blessings promised those who obey the gospel, and again I was made to know that I was a child of God, that his Spirit was with me, and his angels were near me. I knew all the members of the branch were praying for me, and how thankful I was for faithful brothers and sisters.

I prayer earnestly and fervently for protection and the aid of the Spirit to see me safely through the operation as I was not healed by faith and prayer. Soon all fear left me, and after another administration, my mind was at perfect peace. Such sweet composure I had never before known. I left myself entirely in my heavenly Father's care. The dread and fear of sleepless nights left me, and I seemed to be continually in the Spirit. How thankful I was that I was a Latter Day Saint; that I had a right to call for the elders; and that I felt when they came, that they were men of God with authority from him to act in his name. I was thankful for feeling the presence of his Spirit when they laid their hands upon my head, and I praised his name for the peaceful sleep which always followed, and that the pain was much reduced. Many times it ceased entirely.

When the doctor said, "We will operate tomorrow at ten o'clock," I received the news without fear. I had the assurance that I would pass successfully through it and without severe pain. And so under skillful treatment, I passed safely through, but how I did pray! All the time I was in the spirit of prayer. The Spirit was with me in power, deadening the pain and taking care of me.

I have now been out of the hospital over a month and am getting along fine. The doctor, a specialist, says I am his star patient and that I stood the operation better than younger men and that now my physical condition is perfect. All I need is to recover strength and put on flesh.

When I consider that I am now over eighty years of age, I have need to be thankful. I never felt so grateful in my life, and never realized so fully how near God comes to us at times. I have now spent weeks in the spirit of prayer, meditating on the things of the kingdom, and I know that it is possible for man to live above impure and unholy thoughts. I know that the power of God will keep all evil from us if we are anxious to cultivate only the good and pure.

I have been a member of the church over sixty years. I have served in the different offices until now I have the honor of being a high priest. I have officiated in many ways. Have enjoyed the gift of tongues and prophecy on a number of occasions; have seen the sick miraculously healed under the hands of the elders; have many times enjoyed the power of God. My faith was never so strong as it is now, and I never had the assurance that I am a member of God's church and kingdom as I now have.

I rejoice that all the branches enjoy more of the Spirit than ever before and that God is with the ministry in greater power. According to reports the whole church is advancing in Godliness, and his Spirit is being poured out in power upon the members. May we all strive to be more faithful and have more of this Spirit.

All are not healed by faith and prayer alone, nor by the laying on of hands. Why? Sometime we shall know.

This Is the True Church

By Mrs. W. N. Bledsoe

When I read the good testimonies of my brothers and sisters, my soul is fed. We are isolated from church privileges but are very thankful that God has showed us the true path of life. Our only regret is that we did not hear the gospel sooner so that all our children could have accepted it before they grew to manhood and womanhood. The truth came to us through one of the Lord's faithful servants after part of the family was grown and gone out from home.

Thoughtful study of the Bible and earnest prayer on the part of my husband and myself convinced us that the latter-day gospel is indeed the way and the truth. After a period of study, we prayed the Lord if there was anything to that which we had recently found, that he would send one of his elders to preach to us and to administer to our sick baby.

Shortly thereafter our prayer was answered. Brother B. M. Maloney came from Oklahoma City. He administered to the child, but the Lord saw fit to take the little suffering one home. After the administration he grew weaker until he passed away.

It was twenty years ago last June when we accepted the gospel and since then we have been exceedingly blessed in health and many other ways. I have been healed several times.

Today I am convinced that God does hear and answer our prayers. If anyone is in doubt as to what church is God's church, let him sincerely ask the Lord, and he will be shown the way just as we were directed. Of late my health has been poor. Will the Saints pray for me?

Request Prayers

Sister E. E. Gilbert, and Sister Weaver, both of Pittsburg, Kansas, request the prayers of the church members.

J. W. Vail, pastor in Vancouver, Washington, writes as follows:

"I wish to make a request for prayers for my wife, Martha E. Vail, who is afflicted with cancer. The doctor has hope only through two very serious operations.

"She desires to place herself in the hands of the Great Physician, and wishes through the Herald to ask the prayers of the Saints in her behalf, that if it is God's will that she may be spared to her family and friends and be allowed to continue her services in the branch."

We feel that every heart will be moved by this appeal, and that many will answer it with their prayers.

The Story-Teller Presents

What Price Prayer?

By E. J. Hayden

"I know it's tough, but I don't see as there is anything we can do about it." John Bennet was standing just outside of the church, with two of his friends, after hearing a stirring appeal for the Saints to come to the aid of the church in its present need.

"It certainly is a pity that work is so scarce," said Ralph Cargo, "otherwise we might go out and earn something for a sacrifice offering."

"Well, we can pray," put in Ernest Smith. "Aunt Grace said just this morning, that it don't cost anything to pray."

"No. Well, you'd be surprised." This from Frank Black, who had just joined the group.

"What do you mean, you'd be surprised?" asked Ernest.

Frank looked a trifle embarrassed, and hesitated a little, before he answered. "Well," he said at last, "maybe I spoke out of turn. At any rate I don't want to discourage any of you fellows in the matter of prayer. But I do think that people sometimes get the notion that if they pray, why, that's all that there is to it. The Lord is bound to fix things up okey, if we just ask him to, and it just don't work out that way."

"Now look here," said John, "doesn't it say, somewhere, that if two or three are agreed concerning anything that is right, that it shall be done for them? So if that is the case, why shouldn't we just agree on what we want: so long as it is right, of course, and then ask the Lord for it? For my part, I believe Ernest is right. The thing for us to do is to pray over this matter. And surely he is right in saying that it don't cost any money to pray."

"Yes," replied Frank, "you are right; the thing to do is to pray, and to pray very earnestly. And I will tell you something else. I thought just the same way about the cost of prayer, as you fellows do now, last year, about this time. And I had good authority for my stand, too: for I heard one of the missionaries say just what you have just been saying: that it don't cost any money to pray, and therefore we should all pray, and if we would pray in faith, we would get the thing for which we asked, that is, of course, if it was right."

"Well," put in John, "it is surely right for the church to be gotten out of debt, and for enough money to be raised to put the missionaries back into the field."

"Yes," said Frank, rather thoughtfully, "that is what I thought. And I went and asked Grandfather about it. Well, you know Grandfather. I don't believe that he ever answered a question straight in his life: that is, he never says yes, or no. But when he gets around to the point, it sticks. Well, I asked him if it cost any money to pray, and he just chuckled, and said: 'When I was about your age, I think I was about eighteen, I knew a family who were quite well to do, and about the most devout people that I have even known. The father was a deacon in one of the larger churches of the community, and he always got his family around him every night, and read the Bible, and then he would offer a very earnest prayer for almost everybody who lives, or who ever has lived, and would not forget those who will live, on down to the end of time. I know how it went, for he had a boy about my own age, and we used to be pretty good friends. In fact I stayed with him one winter, while he and I were clearing some land for the deacon. One night the deacon was asking the Lord to provide for a very needy widow, who lived a short distance away. She had five small children, was in rather poor health, and had no means of obtaining the necessities of life. And the deacon was becoming quite eloquent in his plea for her welfare, when Jim jumped to his feet, and almost shouted: 'Stop Dad!' The old man was shocked almost beyond words, but he ordered Jim back to his knees. But Jim just stood there, and said: 'No Dad, I'll not get down on my knees, and it is time for you to get up from yours. You go down and sack up some potatoes, while Bill and I hitch up the team, and get some flour and beans from the granary, and a ham and slab of bacon from the smokehouse; and tomorrow Bill and I will take over a load of wood; and we will answer that prayer.' No, I reckon it did not cost the deacon any money to pray. But it did cost him a good two cords of wood, and a half a sleigh load of provisions.

"Then," he continued, "there was another man who was very earnest; and who prayed a great deal. He lived quite a bit before my time. So I'll not even tell his name: But I reckon you'll be able to guess who he was. He had been praying that the Lord would put an end to some awful conditions, and stop the mouths of some who were teaching some terrible doctrines. And he was not one who just asked, and then expected the Lord to do the work, either. He just went right ahead with the job of answering his own prayers. But one day he was out on one of his hunts for those who were transgressing the law, and the Lord stopped him, right in the middle of the road, and told him that he was on the wrong track. Then he said: "What wilt Thou have me to do, Lord?" And the Lord told him to go into the city, where he had planned to go, and it should be told him what he must do. No, I reckon it didn't cost him any money to pray. But he didn't find prayer to be any cheap thing. And remember this, Frank, he said: Prayer that leaves out the 'What wilt thou have me to do, can hardly be classed as true prayer.' And the way Grandfather stepped on that me, didn't leave any chance to mistake who he meant.

"Yes, fellows, I believe in prayer. But it cost me a new rifle, about a year ago, a pair of skis last winter, and a rod and reel, already this summer. See you next Sunday, and let's know what prayer can do." And with this Frank turned and left his friends with some strangely new thoughts in their minds, with regard to prayer.

Church was scarcely dismissed the next Sunday, till John tapped Ernest on the shoulder, and said: "I thought that we were going to try to raise some money for the church, and here you come out with a brand new suit."

"It does look a good deal like one, doesn't it?" replied Ernest, with a nervous little laugh. "But just take a good look at that sleeve, and I guess that you would hardly be willing to trade with me." So saying he displayed what had been a frayed sleeve, but which was now neatly buttonhole stitched with soft darning cotton which matched the cloth. "Mother fixed it, and then I had it cleaned, and now I have something for the bishop."

"Listen to this!" demanded Ralph, as he rushed up. "You know that field that Widow Martin owns, just next to our place? Well, she had gone to live with her son, and there is no one working her land this year; with the result that it is producing a fine crop of weeds. (Good land that.) And she just wrote to me, and told me to mow the weeds, or do anything necessary, to prevent them from going to seed; and she will pay me for my time and trouble. So I guess that I will be able to earn a little for the offering, after all."

"Oh, hello Frank!" said John, "I was thinking that you were not going to arrive in time to hear your reports."

"Oh, I've been listening. And it sounds mighty good to me. But I want to get in on this, too. Ralph, if I understood what you said, that field is yours for the year. Is that the case?"

"Well, I suppose you might look at it that way. Why?"

"Just this: We've got quite a lot of potatoes that are not worth anything much. Stock don't seem to like old potatoes any better than I do, at this time of year. But it is not too late to plant, for a late crop; that is, if we hustle the job. And I thought that perhaps we might all get together and plant that field to potatoes. They probably won't be worth so very much, but we could send them to the harvest festival, and then they would help to feed the poor next winter. Not a cash offering, of course, but people have to eat. And they must either have what they need, or the money to buy it."

"Aw shucks! Just when I was going to pull down a nice little cash offering out of that job, you stick in a thing like that. Why, it would mean five times the work, and won't produce a single penny in cash. In fact I believe it will be a downright expense. For we will have to sack and ship the spuds, that is, if there are any to ship."

"Don't want to take us in then? Hold on there John; where are you going so fast?"

"I've got an idea," said John, as he hurried away.

"Well be careful, they're dangerous!" laughed Ernest.

"Yes," said Ralph, "I believe I do want to take you fellows in, and plant the potatoes, that is if it is not too late. It will take some time to prepare the ground, and it is late already. How would we work it?"

"It would have to be done in a hurry, for a fact," replied Frank, "but I have heard my father tell about plowing a field, and dropping the potatoes in the furrows. We might do it that way. It would get them into the ground, but they would have to be tended entirely by hand, because the rows would not be right for a cultivator."

"My poor back!" groaned Ernest, with a wry face. "How I do like to hoe! Yes, you are right, Frank, it is not money; but oh, what it is!"

So it was arranged to start planting the potatoes early Monday morning. And the three friends met shortly after seven at the field: Ralph with his father's team and plow; Frank with the potatoes loaded into the little Ford truck, which, while it often complained, still did commendable service as a means of transporting light loads. While Ernest came across lots, with a basket on his arm, and a clownish limp; which proved that he was heart and soul in the work, but intended, as usual to have a lot of fun while at work.

They were just getting ready for the start, when John arrived with: "Hey, you double crossing bunch of pirates! You think you will steal all the treasure, and leave me out in the cold, do you?"

Ernest shaded his eyes, as though looking at some distant object, and then exclaimed: "Well, here comes Old John Silver, parrot-squawk and all!"

"I have just about burned up all the telephones in town, trying to locate you fellows," said John, "and finally Mr. Cargo told me where you were, and of all the wealth which you expect to dig out of this rock-bound waste. So I hurried right over, so as to get my share, and to let you know that, while you may be on a hot trail, you have not located the main deposit; not by a long shot. That's what I was doing last night, after I left you."

"Hurray!" shouted Ernest, "I do hope it is not far from here, and that we don't have to dig too deep for it. When do we start?"

"In that case," said John, "you should be perfectly satisfied. For it is quite near, and is entirely above the surface of the ground. I heard, last week, that Mr. Lockwood wanted to have that piece of timber down between the river and the road cleared up. And as I knew that he was leaving town early this morning, to be gone for some time, I just had to see him yesterday, even if it was Sunday. He won't pay any cash for the work, but we can have all of the wood; providing that we cut off everything, and pile the brush, ready for burning. But he says that we must not remove any of the wood till all of the brush is piled. Rather suspicious, it would seem; but you know he always was a crafty old chap."

"Crafty! Crooked would be more accurate! Why, I wouldn't trust that old skinflint any farther than I could heave a grand piano!" said Ralph. "And with things as they are at present, I would like to know how you come to think that wood chopping in midsummer is anything to run after. We couldn't sell the wood for enough to pay for the clothes we would wear out."

"I will admit," replied John, "that the market for firewood is not very promising. But there are several trees that will make basket bolts, and I understand that the basket factory is paying a pretty good price. And then there must be fuel for the church next winter. And if we can help in that way, it will be just the same as cash. You know it is not much of a timber lot, and I believe that the four of us could clean it up before fall, and take care of this job as well. Maybe it is just as well that times are rather dull; otherwise we would not have time for all of this."

There followed several very busy weeks for the four friends, in which they were encouraged, and sometimes helped, by the older members of the church. For the idea of contributing their time, when cash was not to be had, had taken hold of the entire branch, and many were the little enterprises which seemed to promise returns for the advancement of the cause so dear to the hearts of the Saints.

The timber was nearly all cut, and the potato crop was looking fine, when the young woodcutters, arriving at the timber lot, one morning, found wagon tracks leading in among the piles of wood and brush. A careful investigation convinced them that at least five cords of wood had been removed during the night.

"So that's the game, is it!" said John, as he scratched his head.

"Don't be too hasty about judging," said Frank. "We must try to get to the bottom of this, and do it right, before we lose all that we have done. But I must confess that I do not know just how to go about it."

"I'll tell you," said Ernest, "there was nothing said about burning the brush, only that it must be piled, but it will be cooler at night, and we might make two shifts of this from now on; the night shift working by the light of the burning brush. That will make it rather hard for any one to do any hauling either day or night."

"But how will we get the wood out, after it is all cut?" asked Ralph. "These brush piles won't last more than two or three nights, at the most."

"I'll tell you," said John, "We will go after this today, without stopping to pile either brush or wood, and then tonight, I will come down and pile the wood and brush by moonlight. It will make a rather stiff day for one of us every day till we are through, or until the moon is too old to help us, but it will give us the jump on whoever is trying to profit by our summer's work."

That night there were conferences in the homes of all of the members of the group, and then larger gatherings among the older people, with the result that provision was made for John to remain at home the next day, that he might get a good sleep, and be ready for another night on guard. For all who could possibly spare the time, and who had tools with which to help in the work, decided to make a bee of it, and help to finish the cutting at once.

But while these arrangements were in progress, there was quite another scene being enacted in the wood lot. After John had finished his supper, and his mother had prepared a lunch for him to eat at midnight, he returned to the scene of the day's work, where the brush and wood lay about the ground in a rather disheartening tangle.

He did not at once begin the work of piling the wood and brush, but, having been careful that no one should see him enter the lot, which could be approached only from the road, as it lay in a short bend of the river, which was crossed by the road both above and below; he found a place where he could remain out of sight till it should become quite dark, and lay down for a short nap. But being very tired, and also a healthy youth, he slept soundly for some time, and then came suddenly to a sitting position, scarcely knowing what had disturbed his sleep. He sat quiet for a moment, while he listened, and soon realized that wood was being loaded into a wagon, only a short distance from where he sat. So taking the "Scout rope" which he had brought with him, for no known reason, except that he had been a Scout, and liked the equipment: he slipped around a pile of brush, to a point where he could see what was taking place; and then carefully stalked the thief.

As he approached the wagon, he could see that there was but one man at work, and that he was very busy taking the wood from one of the piles, and loading it into a wagon. And by using just a little caution he was able to reach the side of the wagon away from the thief, without being noticed. Then, making a noose of his rope, he made a cast for the man's head and shoulders, just as he turned to pick up some wood: and as the rope settled to about the level of the elbows, he jerked it tight, and emitted a terrific yell.

Taken completely by surprise, the man was thrown, or rather drawn tight against the wagon, where he found himself unable to move. For John quickly secured the other end of the rope, and then taking his flashlight from his pocket, he walked around the wagon, and sent a ray of light straight into the eyes of his antagonist. For an instant he was almost too surprised to speak, then, knowing that his own face could not be seen, he fought down a desire to thrash the man whom he had taken in so vile a business, and said, in his most polite tone: "Good evening Mr. Lockwood, I see you thought you would help us to remove the wood. But you forgot that none of it was to be removed till all of it was cut, and the last of the brush piled. So I must remind you that it would be a direct violation of my contract for me to permit you to take this load away from here, and I doubt if it would be wise for you to leave either, till it is light enough for you to go without danger of stumbling; for you seem to be in such a hurry that if you were to attempt to leave the lot just now, you would be almost certain to injure yourself. And more than that, I have always wanted to become a public speaker, but could never get an audience. So now I think that I had better make the best of my opportunity, while my audience can not get away."

The older man stormed and threatened, and pleaded. But neither threat nor plea could induce John to loosen the rope, and to struggle against it only made his position the more unbearable. So he finally leaned back against the wagon in the most comfortable position that he could find, and said: "Well, fire away, you dirty little Mormon puppy. Let's hear what it is you have to say. For if you have got to get it off your chest before I get loose, the sooner you do it the better."

"In the first place," began John, "I am neither a Mormon, nor a puppy, of which I propose to convince you, before you leave here."

"Oh, all right!" broke in the unhappy captive, "have it your own way, and call yourself a Christian gentleman, but let me go."

"Not yet," said John, "I have only stated one fact, and that is yet to be proved. But the thing which I want to do more than anything else, is to tell you some of the differences between the church to which I belong, and the one of which you are a member. I shall be obliged to quote the texts to which I wish to refer, as I have no Bible with me, and I do not think that it would be wise to have my eyes diverted for the purpose of reading, even if I had one. So just listen."

During the hours which followed, John learned more fully than he had even known before, what the Master meant when he promised that the Holy Spirit should bring all things to your remembrance. For while his captive was sullen and inattentive at first, he gradually began to listen to that which was being told him, and after a time began to ask questions, and John found that he must go back and repeat that which he had said first. For now he had at last gained an audience indeed. And when the men arrived in the morning, they found John teaching a now earnest listener the truths of the everlasting gospel, as restored by the hand of the angel.

It was perhaps fortunate that the older men were in the group, and prevented any demonstration on the part of the indignant young woodcutters. For when they had come near enough for Mr. Lockwood to speak to them, he turned to them and said: "Gentlemen, if you will induce this young preacher to release me, I will make full restitution for the wood which I have taken, and I will ask you to lend me some of your church books, as I want to prove the things which I have learned here tonight, or rather, since I came into the lot. And moreover, I pledge myself before God, that if I find that he has spoken the truth, I will unite with your church, and will pay my tithing in full on the day that I am baptized."

A few days later four young men, with faces tanned to a nut brown, and muscles like whipcords, stood looking at their finished work, so far as the wood lot was concerned. "Well," said Ralph, "I do believe that we have more than enough, from the basket bolts, to pay for the shipment of the potatoes, and the fuel is provided for the church for more than the coming winter. In fact we will be able to send in more cash than I had expected to get for keeping the weeds out of that patch. So I surely should be more than satisfied."

"Yes, and I believe that we have all learned more about prayer, and about profits, too, (and I don't care which way you spell it either) than we ever knew before," said John.

"What do you think now? Does it cost anything to pray?" asked Frank.

Just at this juncture an elderly lady approached the group. The youths all recognized the owner of the potato field, and there were a number of questions which came into their young minds, as they remembered that they had not taken the trouble to secure her consent to use the field in the manner in which they had done. But she seemed to be in her usual good humor, so while there were some misgivings in their minds, they greeted Mrs. Martin with as much outward grace as they could command.

"Ralph," said Mrs. Martin, when greetings were over, "your mother has just told me about your potato venture, and I must say that I have never had any one work that land, who has kept it so clear of weeds as you have done. And as there is to be no profit in this venture for you, I believe that it is no more than fair that I should pay for the work which has been done; especially as I understand that there will be some little expense connected with shipping the crop to the place where it is to be used for the benefit of the poor." And so saying, she handed him a check which was more than double the amount which he had expected to charge for the work. And then, including all in her glance, she continued: "Boys, I understand that it is your peculiar faith which has prompted you to do this bit of work, with no hope of any return for yourselves. Is that true?"

"Yes Ma'am," said Ernest, "I expect that that just about states the case, though we had not thought of it in just that way, I believe."

"Well, if any church can do that for a healthy bunch of boys, who like to hunt, and fish and swim: it must be worth more than the average. And as there is one of your churches in the town where my son is living, I shall look into your belief. Thank you, all of you. Good-bye." And Mrs. Martin was gone.

"I'll say it costs, but it pays to pray," said Ernest.

The portrait of Jesus is unfinished. The world is yet unredeemed. Men are still hungry. Little children are still starving. Homes are broken. Institutions are destroyed by bombs. War, crime, disease, and ignorance stalk through the land. The world cries out in the words of men of old: "We would see Jesus." It awaits the ministrations of men and women who can reveal Jesus, who can finish the portrait of the ages.—F. M. McDowell, in a sermon, "The Unfinished Portrait," preached at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

Run-Over Department

start have suffered a progressive spirit of denial and rejection. The attitude of the Christian believer toward all the scriptures is to seek a reconciliation of apparently contradictory passages; to work toward unification and not to reject all on the basis of isolated statements. The attitude of the atheist is to seek flaws and contradictions and enlarge upon them. That spirit is just as truly atheistic when applied to the Doctrine and Covenants or Book of Mormon as when applied to the Bible. In his splendid chapter on charity, Paul says: "Charity believeth all things." Now obviously there are many things that even charity can not believe. Shall we reject the matchless thirteenth chapter of the first Corinthian letter? No, better to interpret it in line with Paul's other exhortation, "Prove all things, hold fast to that which is good." Charity, then, believeth all things that are good.

The solution to some apparent conflicts in the other two books may be more difficult to come at, but none the less logical. There are statements in the Book of Covenants that I am frank to say I do not understand. That does not justify me in rejecting them. I hold them in abeyance awaiting understanding, finding in the body of the revelations enough that is vital and illuminating and true to engage my attention. One man is greatly troubled because the revelation releasing R. C. Evans said: "He has been earnest and faithful in service, and his reward is sure." Now that does not trouble me at all. I can explain that to my own satisfaction. But let this man who is troubled suspend judgment, and "lay off" from that passage—he will find enough to keep him busy all his life to study and apply some other texts in the Book of Covenants that he can accept and understand, as the following:

"Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

DO NOT DROWN IN SHALLOW WATER

At a time when Bishop Evans was humble and full of love he greatly assisted in building up this work. Let the man who doubts the sureness of the final reward to Brother Evans forget the passage that troubles him and so apply this other passage that he himself can continuously build up the work. That is a task for a life and it is a man-sized job. A wise old Methodist Bishop advised a doubting disciple: "If you are determined to drown, drown in deep water and not in some shallow mud puddle." Most people drown spiritually in shallow water. If I fail, let it be in a determined and sustained effort to work out the great and clear revelations of God as applied to the problems of life, and not in picayunish quibbling over obscure scriptural passages. And that observation applies to the revelations in all of the three books.

Another rather wise teacher said to a friend who was troubled over some of the Old Testament miracles: "When I have a nice mess of fish to eat I do not spend much time chewing the bones; I eat the good meat and lay the bones aside." Did the whale swallow Jonah? Did Lot's wife turn to grade A salt? If I am troubled about that (which I am not) let me forget it and turn and read the Ten Commandments. A lot of people who have worried about Lot's wife had better have been studying the Ten Commandments. And after I have mastered the prohibitions of that epoch marking law, let me pass on to the affirmative teachings of Christ. There I find a program for a whole life of service. Are there grammatical errors in the Book of Mormon? Fish bones to be laid aside. Turn to Alma 16, or Jacob 2. Spend your time on the good meat, of which there is such an abundance. Are there some little flaws in the Doctrine and Covenants? Yes? Will you shape your course by them? Rather study section 11 or 85, or all of the other splendid and inspired revelations found in that book. The three books are filled with revelations that appeal to the best in us. They are well worthy of our support.

The finally complete apostasy and shipwreck of brilliant and spiritual men in the past began imperceptibly by mental haggling over certain isolated passages that could well enough have been left out of the equation until better understood. Atheism is progressive and grows by cultivation. Faith thrives and grows when it lays hold on strong and outstanding truths and then as the years go by adds to its store through affirmative study and prayer. Let us in that way conserve the foundations of our faith.

THE REORGANIZATION ABIDES BY THE THREE BOOKS

In the past Latter Day Saints have gotten into difficulty when the books have been ignored. Brigham Young zealously taught the supremacy of the "Living Oracles" and relegated the inspired books to the shelves as being of no more value than "the ashes of a rye straw." Only in that way were the people of the west led to accept certain pernicious doctrines clearly condemned in the three books, notably so in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. It was the work of the Reorganization to restore the three books to their proper place and prestige. We have insisted that the "living oracles" must speak in accord with the books.

Our friends of the "Church of Christ" entered into agreement with us in 1918 under articles known as "Agreements of Working Harmony." These we adopted at the conference of 1918, the "Church of Christ" people having previously adopted them. One of the articles of agreement (No. 4) bound both organizations to a recognition of the revelations as contained in the 1835 edition of book of the Doctrine and Covenants. That gave us a vital point of agreement upon the three books; they having previously held to the Book of Commandments. Some very few years later I was present as a member of our committee when it met with their committee and at that meeting we were surprised to be told by one of their apostles that their church had taken action annulling the article in question (Article No. 4). As we saw it this tended to vitiate the entire agreement. Subsequently at the conference of 1930 we took action declaring the agreement void.

The matter is vital with us. The church stands upon the three books. In that the record of the Reorganized Church is unique. So far as we are concerned only on that basis could we ever be a party to a drawing together into one by the various groups of those adhering in profession to the Restoration movement. There must be no pulling asunder of the threefold cord. Or to change the simile, these three witnesses shall continue to stand together, for their testimony is one. Safety is found in adherence to their teachings. We with others have suffered loss when we have been careless in that regard. When we have diligently conformed to the precepts of the three books we have been blessed.

But if for you and for me as individuals risks and burdens are necessary, must we not believe that they are also necessary for others. We who have struggled and suffered would gladly pass on to those we love the wisdom which our own trials and failures have taught us. But it can not be done. God deals with the members of each new generation as if it were the first. Life's inevitable experiences meet them in their youth and vigor with the freshness of a surprise. Through uncertainty, through strain, through suffering they are guided into an assured touch with reality, and win at last, if faith and courage hold firm, to the peace that passeth understanding.—William Adams Brown, in Pathways to Certainty.

What Does It Matter?

By C. W. Butterworth

(From the Gospel Standard.)

There is no time in life for vain reining; no time to waste in aimless pursuits; no time to lament the failure to reach unprofitable goals. The sands of life run silently and unceasingly, measuring both the future and the past, and every moment wasted in futile endeavor curtails the sum of your potential achievements.

The seething masses of humanity struggle callously and selfishly, vainly seeking the elusive pots of gold at the rainbow's feet. In its clamour for the spectacular, the world has gone mad; and, in its inability to discriminate between false and true greatness, a most pitiable lack of judgment is shown.

He who can travel to points remote and stand where man has never stood before; he who can climb in his bellowing steed a little closer to the stars; he who can exceed the previous greatest speed on land, on sea or in the air; he who can swim the furthest or run the fastest or hit the hardest, he it is, who, for a very brief span, wears the victor's laurels, and becomes the envy of that vast throng who vainly cherish the fond hope of attaining like fame—fleeting and hollow though it be.

You may never experience the lime-light's glare, but if the light of your life shines candle-like through the darkness of despondent lives, what does that matter?

You may never stand upon the cold and desolate Poles, the reaching of which, for centuries, has taxed the powers of man's physical endurance; but there are countless other places where you may stand—at the gates of the poor and needy, at the bedside of the sick, in the forefront of the battle for right, in the house of prayer, by the side of the wayward. You will get no earthly glory for all this, but what does that matter?

Perhaps you may not get the credit for all the things you do. Remember, then, that in the Book of Life the facts are there recorded; and when from the housetops the secret things are made known, ample compensation will be yours. So what does it really matter now?

Are your abilities ignored? Is your worth unrecognized? What does it matter? True worth will always get its desserts. Take heart. Moses was well past the allotted span before his real work of leadership began.

You despair of ever reaching Heaven. It sometimes seems so far away. What does it matter? It is there, and there is room for you. You may not reach it for ten or fifty years, but you may be there today. Who can say? It is better then to be prepared, for this vitally matters.

What if the darkness of night descends upon you? What if shadows and disappointments come? What if winter with its chilling blasts embraces you, and its encircling snows block up every avenue from your doors? The morning sun in all his splendour will rise again. The shadows will surely pass; and when springtime awakens all nature and removes every cold obstruction from your pathway, then will be revealed the splendid truth that "they also serve who only stand and wait."

Life is short. Opportunities for profitable service are swiftly passing. Rewards for seizing them are great. Your health, your peace of mind, your present, and your future welfare demand that you do not let the petty, vexatious, unavoidable things of life matter.

Cheer up. Be brave. Hope on. Live your own life, and you will reap your own reward. In the final adjustment nothing will be overlooked, nothing undervalued; so if now we are misunderstood, neglected and unappreciated by that large body of our fellowmen, who are unable to wisely weigh the worthy things of life, what does it matter?

Yes, what does it matter?

- (42) THREE PILLS IN A BOTTLE. Fantasy in one act. By Rachel Lyman Field. Four men, three women. One child. One simple interior. Time, thirty minutes. Costumes fantastic. A little sick boy from his window makes friends with passers-by. Each allows his soul to visit the boy. The audience is shown how strangely souls may differ from the human beings to whom they belong. Published in "Six Plays." Price $1.35. Royalty $10 if admission is charged; $5 otherwise. (French.)
- (43) TRADITION, by George Middleton. One man, two women. Interior. Time, thirty minutes. Modern costumes. Deals with the attempt of a dominant though kindly man to crush the artistic ambitions of his wife and daughter through their economic dependence. Thirty-five cents. Royalty $5. (French.)
- (44) TRIFLES, by Susan Glaspell. Three men, two women. Interior, forty minutes. A tragedy. A man appears to have been murdered in a lonely farmhouse and his wife is under arrest on suspicion. A county attorney, the sheriff and a farmer are fussing about in search of evidence against her, while two women friends find a slain canary and broken cage, divine the whole story of a woman driven to desperation by cruelty and neglect. Price 50 cents. Royalty $10. (Baker.)
- (45) VALIANT, THE, by Hall and Middlemass (Longman's), price 50 cents. Five characters. Strong drama. Action takes place one hour before the death sentence is passed on a man who refuses to speak to or recognize his sister. By doing this the family is saved from disgrace. Excellent.
- (46) WHEN A CLOWN LAUGHS. A tragedy of the circus, by Geneva Harrison. Three men, one woman, extras. Available only in manuscript form, lent free to interested producers. Royalty $10. (Longman's.)
- (47) YOU, fantasy in one act. By Colin Campbell Clements. Two men, one woman. One exterior. Modern costumes. Thirty minutes. A story of an adventurous youth who went forth to seek his fortune. Price 30 cents. Royalty $5. (French.)

which the late General William Booth and his wife, Catherine, began the movement which has developed into the Salvation Army of universal renown. What a museum of historic events London is! Every street is rodolent with great events and if one listens carefully he can hear the footsteps of the panoramic processions belonging to centuries.

But, here we are in Enfield, and at the Brick church in which our own congregation worships. A testimony to the fidelity and loyalty of the little group (some now in heaven), under the wise direction of John Judd and his companions. It was a warm welcome the visitor received, and the tidal wave of congregational singing filled one's soul with worship, and prepared one for the cultivation of God's presence. The two services and the priesthood meeting made a happy day. And so began my renewed ministry in Europe. More anon!

The Work of the Church

The Children's Division

Worship Programs for December

(Prepared by Richard and Alice Baldwin.)

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS."

FIRST SUNDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1932

This is Sacrament Sunday, and the juniors should meet with the adults.

SECOND SUNDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1932

Note: If you are intending to use the "Hymn Worship Service" as contained in the December 25 program, you should begin to rehearse and plan for it now. The songs should be taught to the children, and they should be memorized perfectly, in order that the service may be beautiful.

The Sunday before Christmas you should instruct the children to wrap up their offerings in gift boxes, and tie them with Christmas ribbons. The children will love to place their gifts in the manger, and especially will they enjoy the small boxes which they wrap themselves, with the Sacrifice Offerings contained therein.

Theme: "God's Gift to Us."

Quiet Music: "Oh, Little Town of Bethlehem."

Call to Worship: (Read in Unison.)

"Come, let us sing the praise
Of Jesus Christ our King,
Who came to earth; His wondrous birth
Both men and angels sing.
On Galilean shore
In places large and small
He lived a life of matchless worth,
Revealing God to all.

Hymn: "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear," new Saints' Hymnal, 137. Verses 1, 2, and 4.

Prayer.

Carol: (Special number by selected voices.) "The First Noel," new Saints' Hymnal, 146.

Poem: "There's a Song in the Air."

There's a song in the air! There's a star in the sky!
There's a mother's deep prayer; and a baby's low cry!
And the star rains its fire while the beautiful sing,
For the manger of Bethlehem cradles a King!

There's a tumult of joy o'er the wonderful birth,
For the Virgin's sweet boy is the Lord of the earth.
Ay, the star rains its fire while the beautiful sing
For the manger of Bethlehem cradles a King!

In the light of that star lie the ages impearled;
And that song from afar has swept over the world.
Every hearth is aflame, and the beautiful sing
In the homes of the nations that Jesus is King!

We rejoice in the light, and we echo the song
That comes down through the night from the heavenly throng
Ay! we shout to the lovely evangel they bring
And we greet in His cradle our Savior and King!

Scripture Reading: Isaiah 7: 14, and Micah 5: 2. (Before this reading the leader will explain that before the birth of Christ, the prophets plainly foretold of His coming.)

Hymn: "Oh, Little Town of Bethlehem," new Saints' Hymnal, 144.

Sermon: "God's Gift."

Stress the song that has just been sung.
No doubt the Sacrifice period is already well under way in your branch, but it should be particularly stressed between now and Christmas.

We believe the minds and hearts of the children can be led in such a way that they will not only be willing, but glad, to give up many of their Christmas joys in order that the money may be sent to the church. We believe it would actually be a sin to use money for the "treat" (which is so customary in some branches) this year.

If you will start today to talk to the children about God's Gift and what it has meant to the whole world, they will rejoice to do anything they can for the church. Tell the children what the needs of the church are.

At the close of a short sermon a conference should be held with the children, and they should be allowed to suggest ways and means by which they can swell the amount which the general church needs before the new year.

Closing Thought: (Read in Unison.)

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Closing Hymn: "Silent Night," new Saints' Hymnal, 147. Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1932

Theme: "The Joy of Giving."

Prelude.

Call to Worship:

Joyfull all ye nations rise,
Join the triumph of the skies
With the angel host proclaim
"Christ is born in Bethlehem."

Hymn: "Joy to the World," new Saints' Hymnal, 170.

Scripture Reading: Luke 2: 8-20.

Poem: "The Christmas Story."

"When Christmas stars are shining
On snow fields calm and white,
Then burn a tiny candle
And by its friendly light
Ask mother for the story
Of that first Christmas night.

"And as she tells the story
Of shepherds, and the star
That led the wondering wise men
Across the night afar,
Perhaps your little candle,
Just like that star agleam,
Will bring your heart glad tidings,
Until you almost seem
To see that lowly stable,
The mother, sweet and mild;
You, too, will wish for treasures
To give the Holy Child.

"Well you have golden treasures
To give Him every day—
The love you show for others,
Each friendly word you say
Is just the gift of Christmas Shown in a different way."

—Elizabeth Cushing Taylor.

Suggested Prayer: (Suggest the following themes about which the children are to pray silently.)

Let us think of God's gift of his dear Son who came as a baby in a manger, and thank God for him:

(Period of silence.)

We are glad that He came as a little child, for he blessed the home of Joseph and Mary.

(Period of silence.)

We want to be a blessing in our homes.

(Period of silence.)

We want every home in the world to know him.

(Period of silence.)

Our church needs money so that the families of the missionaries may be taken care of while they go to tell the people about Jesus and his gospel. Wilt thou help us to give as much as we can at this Christmas season?

(Period of silence.)

We are glad to give for we love Thee and Thy church. Bless our giving, we pray. In Jesus' name, Amen.

Sermon:

Let us turn to the third verse of the hymn, "O Little Town of Bethlehem," (Hymnal, 144.) We read, "How silently, how silently, the wondrous gift is given." God always gives his gifts silently, even his greatest Gift came quietly in the night, when all the world was sleeping.

Name some of the other gifts that God gives to us silently, health, strength, love, sunshine, food, etc.

People now give gifts to each other, but not always silently, and sometimes they are just a swapping and trading of gifts.

We should "give silently" to those who need, and to our loved ones, but most of all to the church, for this is Christ's birthday that we are to honor, and when it is our birthday people give the gifts to us, and not to each other.

Little children think of Christmas as just a time for them to receive, but juniors know better than this. We give gifts to make people happy.

We will make Christ happy this year by bringing our greatest gift to him.

Closing Hymn: "O Little Town of Bethlehem," new Saints' Hymnal, 144.

Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1932

Theme: "Our Gift to Christ."

Prelude: Medley of Christmas Hymns.

Call to Worship:

Oh, come, all ye faithful,
Joyful and triumphant,
Oh, come ye, oh, come ye to Bethlehem;
Come, and behold Him
Born the king of angels.
Oh, come, let us adore Him,
Oh, come, let us adore Him,
Oh, come, let us adore Him,
Christ, the Lord.

Scripture Reading: Matthew 2: 1-12.

Hymn: "We Would See Jesus," new Saints' Hymnal, 155.
First four verses.

Prayer.

Dramatization of Hymns, and Presentation of Sacrifice Offering:

The stage should be decorated, and a manger placed on some straw. This should be in the center of the stage. A large star may be suspended over the manger.

First Hymn: "Silent Night," new Saints' Hymnal, 147. (A hidden chorus sings this.)

Second Hymn: "Away in a Manger," new Saints' Hymnal, 149. (The youngest children should sing this, with appropriate motions.)

Third Hymn: "We Three Kings of Orient Are," Hymnal for American Youth, 90, or New Hymnal for American Youth, 96. (Three boys sing this hymn. They may be appropriately gowned in rich draping, using colorful window drapes. A turban and belt would complete the costume. The first verse is sung in unison. The second verse is sung by a boy, carrying a small box covered with gold paper. At the conclusion of his verse he lays his gift in the manger. The second boy gives him time to get back in his place, and then he sings the third verse, carrying his box, and placing it in the manger, too. The fourth stanza is then sung by the third boy, and he too, places his gift in the manger. The fifth verse is sung by all of the boys.)

Fourth Hymn: "As With Gladness Men of Old," new Saints' Hymnal, 143, 1, 2, 3 verses. (The whole congregation should sing this hymn, and at its conclusion there should be a processional of the children carrying their gift boxes, and placing them in the manger, then returning to their seats and remaining standing for the

Blessing of the Offering:

Dear Lord, we do not bring gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh, as the wise men did, to lay at Thy feet, but we have given these gifts gladly and willingly to Thee. Wilt Thou accept them, dear Lord. They are Thy birthday gifts, and may they be used in Thy great work. We ask it in Thy dear name, Amen.

Closing Hymn: "As With Gladness Men of Old," new Saints' Hymnal, 143. Last verse.

Benediction.

The Church School

Worship Programs for December

(Prepared by Henry and Eunice Livingston.)

DECEMBER 4, 1932

Theme: "Our Need of the Savior."

Prelude: New Saints' Hymnal, 255, "Jesus and shall it ever be." (This may be repeated if needful.)

Call to Worship: "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with me."

Hymn: New Saints' Hymnal, 272, "Jesus, My Shepherd."

Invocation: It is always important that thoughtful consideration be given to the prayer, in view of the needs of the people. We suggest that the prayer be brief and to the end that a more complete fellowship with Christ might be realized, satisfying the feeling of our deep need for him and giving us the needed spiritual impetus to "carry on" in the great restoration movement.

Response: Quartet should sing one verse of hymn 314 in new Saints' Hymnal. "I need thee every hour." If quartet isn't available this may be just played on the organ or piano softly.

Scripture: Saint John 12: 26-36.

Picture Appreciation: "Light of the World," by William H. Hunt.

Thought of the Morning: The only hope of coming successfully out of the trying dilemma of today is by the help of Jesus our Savior. We need him as never before in our experience, and nothing could be more profitable than for us to center our attention seriously upon him. The greatest tragedy of a man's life is his failure to open up his life to Christ. Thousands are groping miserably in darkness because he stands at the door of their lives knocking for entrance, but they will not open the door or give heed to his voice. We Latter Day Saints particularly should be careful to give him complete admittance into our dwellings for it is possible to admit him only into the vestibule of our lives, the inner room being closed to him. We should realize more than anyone else that the effectiveness of his saviorhood, as far as we are concerned, depends entirely upon our willingness to cooperate completely with him. Sin has always been the root of our troubles. As we come to know him better and comprehend the price he paid for our deliverance by sacrifice and suffering, it will shock us into an understanding of the awfulness of sin. The Spirit of Jesus and sin can not both dwell in our lives together; which of the two shall it be? "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with me."

Hymn: New Saints' Hymnal, 328, "Behold the Savior at your door."

Offertory.

Prayer: In harmony with the foregoing theme, ask God's blessing upon the class study.

Classes:

DECEMBER 11, 1932

Theme: "God in the Flesh."

Prelude: New Saints' Hymnal, 133, "My God, how wonderful Thou Art." (Repeat softly.)

Call to Worship: "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker. For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand."

Hymn: New Saints' Hymnal, 2, "Bow Ye Mortals, Bow Before Him."

Invocation: This prayer should be one of thanksgiving to God for the gift of his Son who demonstrated the will of God in the flesh and who gave us his law that we might become his sons.

Scripture: Saint John 14: 5-14.

Thought of the Morning: Scientists have scanned the heavens with their great telescopes, discovering that there is a great mind and power which holds and directs the destinies of worlds with perfect control. Others through their microscopes have observed the infinitesimal world controlled in the same marvelous but rational manner. Regardless of all their wonderful discoveries they have not been able to reveal the purposes of this great God and our relationship to him.

Jesus came to reveal his Father to us. On one occasion he told his disciples, "If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also." Our whole approach to God then centers in Jesus and his teachings for in them is God revealed in the flesh. He has taught us to appreciate the kind of a God our Father is.

Think of the tremendous advantage science would have and the great advancement it could make in the realms of truth if its task was approached from an understanding of God and his purposes through obedience to Christ and his message. Bringing it closer to ourselves, think of the advantages and wonderful advancement we can make if all our ordinary tasks are approached in the same manner. May it be our happy experience to know God because in all our work we have looked constantly to "Jesus the author and finisher of our faith."

Hymn: New Saints' Hymnal, 20, "Glory be to God on High." Offertory.

Prayer: A short prayer of benediction with the congregation joining with the Lord's prayer.

Classes.

DECEMBER 18, 1932

Theme: "Glory to God in the Highest."

Prelude: New Saints' Hymnal, 136, "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing." (Repeat softly if desired.)

Call to Worship: "O sing unto the Lord a new song; for he hath done marvelous things: his right hand, and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory. The Lord hath made known his salvation: his righteousness hath he openly shewed in the sight of heaven."

Hymn: New Saints' Hymnal, 139, "While the Humble Shepherds Watched Their Flocks."

Invocation: Revently and with sincerity voice thanks to God for Jesus Christ. Prayer for wisdom and strength that we may be able to emulate the character and life of Jesus that our daily lives will reflect to the glory of God in the highest.

Scripture: Saint Luke 2: 1-14.

Picture Appreciation: "Arrival at Bethlehem," by Olivier Merson, or "Holy Night," by Mueller.

Thought of the Morning: For the two events most significant to humanity, we must look to the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem and to his resurrection or birth into immortality. Today we commemorate his birth into this life and as we contemplate its meaning we are made aware that its most significant factor is love. He loved us and gave himself for us that we might enjoy life and enjoy it more abundantly. Little wonder then that the angelic hosts sang praises to God in the highest for his birth meant peace on earth and good will to men. As the purposes of Divinity are more clearly unfolded to us in this event, our admiration for the love of God increases with growing wonder. Full appreciation of God's love can be had only in proportion to our willingness to surrender our lives to him on the altar of consecration and service. The poet has said truly, "If Christ a thousand times in Bethlehem be born, until he's born in me my soul is all forlorn."

Hymn: New Saints' Hymnal, 145, "Oh Come All Ye Faithful."

Offertory.

Prayer: Let the congregation stand in silent meditation for a moment as a token of our love and esteem for his gift.

Classes.

DECEMBER 25, 1932

Theme: "The Prince of Peace."

Prelude: New Saints' Hymnal, 281, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee." This may be repeated softly if desired.

Call to Worship: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings and publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth."

Hymn: New Saints' Hymnal, 134, "Watchman Tell Us of the Night."

Invocation: Thank God for the blessing of inward strength and peace that have been ours in knowing Jesus and having his Spirit to bless us. Pray that these blessings may continue to come to us as his people that we may have courage and power to do our work.

Scripture: Isaiah 9: 6, 7.

Hymn: New Saints' Hymnal, 140, "To Us a Child of Hope Is Born."

Thought of the Morning: We have been warned that the time would come when peace would be taken from the earth and that while men would cry, "peace, peace," yet there would be no peace, and men's hearts would fail them with fear. Today we see indications of the fulfillment of this utterance for there is a deep feeling of suspicion and apprehension causing all humanity to wonder at the unrest that is in the world. The reason for this unrest is because men have rejected the Prince of Peace, Jesus Christ, and his message. They have felt self-sufficient, thinking that their own brain power and ability brought to them prosperity when it was God that bestowed the gift. Latter Day Saints should know that the world can not give peace, but that it comes from obedience to the law of God. Jesus said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." This kind of peace can come to us only when by rigid examination of ourselves we discover that we have done our very best to do God's will and that we are willing to continue to do it. Then comes the wonderful assurance through the Spirit of Christ to Zion, "Thy God reigneth." Jesus is coming to Zion to establish everlasting peace. Are we preparing for his coming? This is our hope, this is our peace.

Hymn: New Saints' Hymnal, 278, "Prince of Peace Control My Will."

Offertory.

Benediction: A short prayer asking God's help that we may have the peace that Christ alone can give, and that we may merit that peace.

Classes.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri. Correspondents are requested to make their letters brief. The Editors reserve the right, on account of space limitations, to shorten all letters as circumstances require.

Brooklyn, New York

Schenectady Avenue and Park Place

Fall activities for Brooklyn Branch began on rally day, October 2, and rally day it was indeed. The building was full to overflowing. The church school hour presented some unusual features and the sacrament service which followed was especially solemn and impressive, being constructed along new lines. An organ prelude prepared an atmosphere of worship for opening prayer and congregational singing, followed by a Scripture reading by Brother Lafayette Roulette and talks on the sacrament by Elders Charles Hield and Paul Belleisle. The serving of the sacrament brought these ceremonies to a climax in a service which has thrown new light on this feature of church work.

At one o'clock dinner was served in the church basement, and the afternoon was occupied with social service followed by the usual evening sermon. An increased attendance and interest have been noted as a result of rally day.

Brother Ephraim Squire, long associated with the work in Brooklyn, is taking active charge as branch president.

President Frederick M. Smith was a recent visitor to New York, but failed to visit this branch. No doubt he would have called on the group had he not been pressed for time.

The Saints extend a special invitation to all church members and officials stopping in this vicinity, to visit them at the old location. Schenectady Avenue and Park Place, Brooklyn.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was here not long ago, and left the congregation richer by his excellent counsel and encouragement. He expects to return early in November to begin missionary services. The Saints look forward to this event.

With preparations for these services and the dramatic club's plans for the coming social season of plays, games, etc., the prospective revival of usual educational and literary work, the general repairing and redecorating of the junior church school auditorium, now speedily nearing completion, Brooklyn Branch presents a scene of beehive activity.

Kirtland, Ohio

Local Harvest Festival Is Season's Event

Kirtland residents brought out their treasurers and antiques, and picked their best fruit and vegetables for the Harvest Festival at the Auditorium, September 22 and 23, under the auspices of the Home Beautiful Circle and its leader, Sister Mabel Thomas, of Kirtland Branch.

Large numbers visited the festival, and considerable press notice was given the event. Among the many special attractions were a checker table, inlaid with twelve thousand pieces, the work of Brother George Morgan; colonial antiques handed down in the Curry family; old country heirlooms owned by Sister Brockway; many Indian relics; articles brought from the South Sea Islands by Brother Joseph Biggs, once a missionary there; lovely quilts; Scout equipment; wall mottoes, small statues and silhouettes made by Howard Moore, Roy Hodges and John Collin; beautiful fancy work, and a rock garden. A friend of the Saints, Mrs. Glenn Booth, attended and spun linen thread from flax on her old spinning wheel. She also displayed a number of home spun pieces.

The festival was most successful. Lunch and supper were served both days, Thursday and Friday, and a sum of more than twenty-five dollars was cleared.

The branch business meeting was held September 15. Elder John L. Cooper was reelected branch president, and Brother Edward Davidson was chosen superintendent of Religious Education. Others chosen to serve are: Superintendent of adult division, Robert Flack; young people's division, Arthur Sheppard; children's division, Sister John L. Cooper. Sister Carrie Lavies was reelected head of the women's department; Sister Beatrice Gale was chosen secretary of the branch. Treasurer, William Davidson; librarian, Sister Alma Curry; solicitor, Thomas Gale; leader of Kirtland Dramatic Club, John Collin, and director of music, Sister Anne Householder.

Sister Rhoda Miller, of Cleveland, who died suddenly at her home September 13, was buried in Kirtland Cemetery September 17. Funeral services were held in the Temple, Elder William Patterson, of Port Huron, Michigan, in charge, assisted by Elder E. Guy Hammond, of Akron, Ohio. Sister Miller was a kind and loving mother, a loyal supporter of the church. She often extended hospitality to God's servants.

One afternoon last summer six hundred and fifty visitors were at the Temple. They were the 4-H Club of Portridge County which works under the Extension Department of the Ohio State University at Columbus.

Local Saints rejoiced in the success of the Kirtland reunion. Professor Poulson, of the Brigham Young University, Salt Lake City, Utah, and his family spent the last three days of the reunion here.

Patriarch and Sister F. G. Pitt have left Kirtland for the season, and are much missed. With them went Sister Frederick, a sister of Mrs. Pitt.

Miss Virginia Webb is again employed as school-teacher in the elementary grades at Leroy, Ohio.

Brother and Sister Clair Richard are the proud parents of a daughter, born September 12. A son came to the home of Brother and Sister Edward Davidson September 25.

Brother William George, a resident of this city, died October 12. He was known for his positive character qualities, kindness for all, love for and keen interest in young people. He was also well known in Columbus, Ohio, where for a period of years he was custodian at the Ohio State University. Besides his wife he leaves six children: Mrs. Edna Marley; Mrs. Alma Curry, Mrs. Marcine Schlink, a son, Richard, by a former marriage, and two children, Mary and Edwin, at home.

Harley Roberts has entered Ohio State University for his junior year. His brother, Howard, is a freshman. Sister Nola Roberts has entered the sophomore class.

Pastor John L. Cooper officiated at the funeral of Sister Sarah Jane Skillicorn, of Cleveland, a short time ago. Sister Skillicorn was the mother of Sister Jack McNeil, now of Cleveland. Interment was in Kirtland Cemetery.

Puyallup, Washington

Place of Western Washington Fair

An impressive service for the installation of officers of the church school was held the last Sunday in September. As a result each officer felt more keenly the duty of his office and a greater desire to make the best of his ability, and the membership sensed the need of their loyal support.

The Western Washington Fair, held at Puyallup in September of each year, is now past. It was noted for being the biggest and best fair in the Northwest. The attendance record was higher this year than ever before. This does not sound so much like "depression" here, does it?

The Fair was honored on two days with two of the candidates for the office of President of the United States. On Thursday Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, and on Sunday "Coin" Harvey. The Liberty Party seems to be very strong in Washington.

The Latter Day Saint young people are active and are now preparing a program for the last Monday of the month. They are also sponsoring a series of meetings to be conducted by Elder A. C. Martin the latter part of the month.

The young people of this district, under the leadership of Brother Dwight Davis, are entering a contest for one hundred per cent attendance at evening services and also one on reading the Herald.

Brother Claude L. Bronson was taken seriously ill a few nights ago. He was taken to the hospital and operated on at once. Now he is improving.

Aurora, Illinois

66 South Elmwood Drive

Despite the fact that Aurora Branch has lost twenty faithful members during the past two years, those who remain are earnestly striving to carry on the Lord's work.

They were much encouraged by a series of lectures on "The Signs of the Times," given there recently by Roy Healy, of Chicago. The cheer of this good brother did much to put his message across.

Elizabeth Malcor and Jean Ford, two young sisters, were recently baptized by Elder R. E. Davey. They were confirmed by Brother Davey and Clement Malcor at the Sunday morning preaching service.

The young people under the leadership of two captains, Elbert Ford and Arnold Settles, chose sides and each gave a whole evening of enjoyable entertainment. The programs were given in the contest spirit, the losing side to treat the winners. Brother Elbert and his team were good losers and gave the winners an outdoor wiener and marsh-mallow roast.

A beautiful musical program was presented a short time ago under the leadership of Fred Settles. Several non-member friends assisted. The small seating space of the church was taxed to the utmost. Brother Settles deserves much credit for his taste in arranging his program. A few members came from Plano, Illinois.

Oshoto, Wyoming

Saints Are Thoughtful of Neighbors' Needs

This branch has passed its third year more or less successfully, and held its annual business meeting September 26. Officers for the new year are: President, Elder Fred Cousins; priest, Horace Hartshorn; teacher, Fayette Cole; branch clerk, Sister Audrey Stubbart; financial clerk, Sister Rose Gray; reporter, Enid Stubbart; chorister, Audrey Stubbart; organist, Sister George Redding; Sunday school superintendent, Raymond Cousins; supervisor of juniors, Sister Rose Gray; Laurel Club president, Sister Ida McKim. The new officers are trying to do even better work than was done last year and the old officers wish to improve on their previous performances.

One has been added by baptism, Arthea, daughter of Fayette Cole. She was baptized in August by Horace Hartshorn. Eight have been transferred to the branch records, making the enrollment sixty-nine.

Elder L. O. Wildermuth was at the Cousins home the first week of September, and officiated at Sister Arthea's confirmation and blessed Lois Mae, infant daughter of Emory and Mae Dillon.

The Spirit was present to a marked degree at the prayer service September 4, Brothers Cousins and Wildermuth in charge. It was at this service that the branch first learned of Brother Wildermuth's loss in the death of his son, Charles. The sympathy of all is extended to the bereaved family.

Services at the branch schoolhouse were dispensed with August 21, this Sunday school meeting with that of Rocky Point and three other schools in rally day services at Rocky Point. There were several more denominations represented than Sunday schools, but all seemed to enjoy the association with people of like mind. Sunday school, preaching services, basket dinner, and a short program by each school composed the order of the day. The hall was filled to capacity, between two hundred and fifty and three hundred being present. Oshoto Sunday school was represented by its young people in Hawaiian music, a baritone solo and chorus, and the entire school sang, "Send Me Forth, O Blessed Master."

Saints of this region are thankful the depression never hits the throne of grace.

God's blessings are poured out on all. Some of the local meetings have been of a high order. The depression has made everyone more considerate of his neighbor's needs. Some of the Saints started bringing things of which they had a surplus to Sunday school and dividing with the crowd. There were quantities of strawberry plants, garden seed, seed potatoes, setting eggs, both turkey and hen, eggs for consumption, tomato and cabbage plants, and later in the season, roasting ears, string beans, tomatoes, etc. The little schoolhouse has been a veritable trading post for the Saints this summer, but they feel the Lord has been pleased with the spirit of brotherly love that has prevailed.

Several young people are away attending and teaching school, and early, unseasonable storms have cut down attendance at services, but officers hope to keep the meeting place open most of the winter. The faces of visitors are missed at services, but local workers feel they have many things for which to be thankful. Brother Tom Gray narrowly escaped death this summer when a fuel oil can exploded, badly burning one hand and singeing his hair. Grace Louise, little daughter of Horace Hartshorn, fell and cut her lip, requiring medical attention and some stitches. And the infant son of John Stubbart was found by his mother, to all appearances dead, drowned in an eight-gallon jar half full of water. After an hour of resuscitation, he was breathing normally, and suffered no lasting ill effects.

To the scattered Saints who might wish to attend services at Oshoto, the Saints of this region extend an invitation and a welcome. Services are Sunday school at ten thirty followed by preaching or prayer service.

Belleville, Illinois

Progress in Church School

An inspired teacher and leader is sure to make a lasting impression on the minds and in the hearts of his audience, and Belleville Branch has been going forward with renewed spirit since the recent evangelistic services conducted by Patriarch and Sister Richard Baldwin.

Particular progress is noticeable in the church school activities. The system of teaching and conducting classes has been improved, and more interest is being shown, not only by those in charge, but by those attending the classes. The supervisor of the children's division has been working to make that division function to the best possible advantage in the work of instructing the children. Junior worship services with a carefully planned program are held every second and fourth Sunday of each month. These services are proving exceptionally helpful to the smaller children.

Another feature recently introduced is the regular use of printed programs. This method of conducting services has not only simplified and speeded up the work for those in charge, but has been complimented by many in the audience.

The new church school officers have just taken up their duties for the year. They have begun their work with a spirit of real sincerity and cooperation, which combination can mean nothing but success. Prospects are bright for Belleville.

And now the young people are compiling material for the first edition of a proposed church paper. This paper is to be published by the church and distributed to the members. In it will be incorporated news of church functions, announcements, advertisements of a church nature, helpful thoughts, short stories, and current national and international news which may have some bearing on church work.

Branch officers are pleased with the attendance at all church services. They are striving to win others to the fold.

Battle Creek, Michigan

Benefit From Visiting Speakers

On the night of October 3, this branch elected officers for the coming year. Elder Philemon Pement, who has been holding meetings here, was elected by a large majority to succeed Brother Young who has faithfully filled the office of branch president for several years.

Elder Pement, a man of many years' experience, possesses a knowledge very helpful in his work. Since his coming to Battle Creek, an increase in attendance is noticeable. On many occasions the building has been filled. His sermons are enjoyed by everyone, and the Saints feel that he is a teacher sent of God. Much interest is being manifested not only by members but also by those of other denominations. There were also some other changes in branch official personnel.

Brother August Wurm, who in September, 1927, united with the church, remained a true and faithful member until September 24, 1932, when he passed through the portals of eternity. The Saints miss his helpful presence. He was ever ready to shake the hand of a brother or sister, and on his face was a smile that memory can not erase.

A few weeks ago Elder Barrs, of Lansing, Michigan, was here for sacrament service at which time a fine spirit was felt. The gift of tongues was given to the congregation, and the interpretation. Several in the branch were given advice and admonition, and among these was Brother White, of Bay City. This experience was most encouraging.

About three weeks ago Brother Harden, of Ray, Indiana, was here and preached. He is a forceful speaker and very well posted, especially along Book of Mormon lines. As a result of these meetings seven were baptized.

Apostle D. T. Williams has again started his circuit, and Battle Creek welcomed him the night of October 7, when his theme was "A God Who Speaks Today."

Bemidji, Minnesota

Helped by Visit From Apostle

J. F. Curtis

Since last communicating with the Herald, Bemidji officers have tried to keep pace with the inward growth of the church. They see the work gaining ground here.

These members welcome the new Saints' Herald. "It is a wonderful paper," they declare.

Two more families of members have moved there from Independence, Missouri, and are a great help to the branch.

Sister Vera Sanderson, of Plano, Illinois, was here for some time, helping in the church work.

Pastor George Day went with Elder Sam Case of Warba, to Palisade the latter part of August, and Brother Day baptized Mrs. Emil Shuman and Mrs. Frank Thurston. Some children were blessed.

September 24 and 25, a number of the Saints attended the district conference, enjoying the trip and the good meetings. President F. M. McDowell was present, and his preaching encouraged the Saints to continue in the great Restoration movement.

From October 4 to 16, Apostle J. F. Curtis held services in Bemidji church, and some nonmembers were present. The Saints benefited greatly from his sermons.

Brother H. L. Bosshardt was ordained an elder during the fall conference held at Duluth. He is doing all he can to build up the work.

Cherryvale, Kansas

Alert to Gospel Opportunities

Two children were baptized by Brother Glenn Bruch, and three by Brother Henry Ford, of Parsons Branch, in the creek north of Cherryvale, Kansas, the afternoon of September 25. Confirmation was by Brother Charles Anderson, of Independence, Kansas, and Brother Henry Ford at the home of O. W. Bruch.

Saints of Cherryvale held an all-day meeting October 2, the attendance of the church school being one hundred and five. Members were present from Parsons, Chanute, Independence, Coffeyville, and Tulsa, Oklahoma. Brothers Lee Quick and Amos T. Higdon had charge of the sacrament service and preaching. Fourteen church officers were seated on the platform. A baptismal service was held at the creek west of Cherryvale.

James Wright, a father from Parsons, and the nine-year-old son of Sister Carson, of Dennis, were inducted into the kingdom.

At noon a basket dinner was served cafeteria style, and everyone enjoyed the afternoon sermon, also one by Brother Higdon in the evening.

On the evenings of October 3 and 4, Brothers Quick and Higdon held services at Hazel Dell Community Church, seven miles north of Cherryvale. A storm on Monday night prevented a large attendance, but on Tuesday evening there was a fair audience of nonmembers as well as Saints from Cherryvale and Pleasant Dale.

October 16, Saints of this region gathered at Independence, Kansas, to hold an all-day meeting. After church school Brother Tom Bath and Brother Smith, a college teacher from Pittsburg, gave interesting talks. Brother Quick delivered a forceful sermon. Two young people were baptized in the river. Dinner at noon was spread at the Shelter House, Riverside Park. Confirmation of those baptized and a priesthood meeting took place in the afternoon. The evening service was held at Independence Saints' meeting place, the Adventist church.

Saints of these neighboring towns enjoy the spiritual and social meetings with the priesthood, missionaries, and each other.

Hammond, Indiana

Special Lectures on "The Signs of the Times"

Since the vacation season Hammond Branch has been the scene of renewed activity, and promises to have a year of prosperity, despite the prevailing depression.

The annual election of officers has been held and some of the officers elected were as follows: Pastor, Elder R. W. Smith, 733 Eaton Street; branch clerk, H. G. Cresse; branch treasurer, C. C. Ellis; in charge of the Sunday school, C. C. Ellis, and in charge of the Thursday evening service, Brother Carl Hedelius.

The Saints enjoyed five lectures by Brother Roy Healey, of Chicago, on "The Signs of the Times." These were effectively presented the week of September 19. A lunch was served in the lower auditorium of the church after the closing lecture of the series, which resulted in both pleasure and profit.

Again on September 28, they were treated to a stereopticon lecture on Jerusalem by Elder Homer Doty, who has spent some time there.

Hammond members enjoyed on October 12 a visit from Elder Charles Harpe, who has been laboring as a missionary in Western Michigan District. He joined in the sacramental service in the morning and preached in the evening. He found a number of his friends here who had had previous contact with him while he was in the missionary field in another district.

Apostle D. T. Williams presented a fitting climax to recent special services in the form of a sermon, the subject being, "A God Who Speaks Today." His sermon was splendid and well received by a large and appreciative audience.

Skiatook, Oklahoma

Hold Impressive Promotion and Installation Services

The church school and branch are growing. During July and August four churches in town, the Saints' church included, conducted union, open-air preaching meetings on Sunday night. This did much to establish friendly relations and destroy prejudice. Each minister took his turn, and the Saints had two services which appealed to the people.

Elder Lee Quick started a revival September 11, and preached two weeks. Brother Quick is an able speaker and many commented on his wonderful sermons. Good response and cooperation were given the Saints by other churches, and Brother Quick now has some not of the faith thinking on the truths he presented. Three souls were inducted into the kingdom.

The September election of officers for the new church school and branch year resulted in the following official staff: Pastor, T. P. Greenwood; church school director, Sister Lula B. Woslum; adult division, Ralph Vickery; young people's division, Fred Woslum; children's division, Sister Pearl Greenwood. Each division has its various officers and functions very well under the new church plan. The school is better organized and expects to do more this year.

Sunday, October 2, was a busy day. At nine o'clock in the morning a baptismal service was conducted by T. P. Greenwood, pastor. Sister Margaret Standridge was the candidate. Sister Woslum was in charge of the church school at the usual hour, ten o'clock. T. P. Greenwood was in charge of the eleven o'clock sacrament service. The funeral of Brother Frank North, who died September 30, from an internal hemorrhage, was held at two o'clock that Sunday afternoon, Brother W. P. Rumsey preaching the sermon. In the evening a promotion and installation service interested the congregation. A processional, Sister Mozell Elliott at the piano, opened the program, and all pupils dressed in graduating gowns and caps took their places on the platform, also those who participated in the program. There was a reading "On Promotion," by Junior Gondles, a hymn by the congregation, prayer by Brother Fred Woslum, and Scripture reading, (John 15: 1-18) by Brother John Cohea. "Working Together With God," was the theme of a talk by Sister Lulu B. Woslum; then Sister Pearl Greenwood read a poem for church school leaders, introduced the classes for promotion and the awarding of the certificates.

While soft music was played, the pupils retired from the platform, and teachers and officers filed into place for the installation service. Sister Lyda Wood read "The Builder," and Sister Johnnie Woslum read, "He Did Not Fit In." Teachers and officers stood while a prayer of thanks for the group of workers was given by Pastor T. P. Greenwood, and the congregation responded by singing "Be With Me Lord." A special number was "Onward to Zion," by Sister Josephine Faulk, and a charge was given the teachers by Brother Greenwood. To this the teachers responded, "A Charge to Keep I Have." Brother Greenwood also delivered a charge to the congregation which sang "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go." Brother Ralph Vickery offered the benediction.

Spring River Young People Meet

About one hundred young people of Spring River District reveled in the joys of a hobo party outing at Pittsburg, Kansas, October 20. There was group singing, a large bonfire, lunch, and a program given by the Pittsburg group.

The next meeting of the district young people will be in honor of Joseph Smith's centennial at Webb City, Missouri, November 22.

Belding, Michigan

All-day Meeting Is Outstanding Experience

The work of the church shall go on! This is the attitude of Belding Saints. Belding has had its share of the "depression," and many of the Saints do not have employment on account of the closing down of the silk mills for which this city has been famous for a number of years.

For the past eight years Belding Branch has been presided over by Elder W. A. Aelick, well known to Canadian Saints, and during this period many pleasant experiences have been enjoyed by the members.

An outstanding experience of this kind occurred September 25, when Saints from Grand Rapids, Ionia, Lansing, and Greenville assembled for an all-day meeting. The heavenly Father spoke words of comfort to the people on that occasion and to the pastor. Many remarked that this was the best meeting ever held in Belding Branch.

Again on October 16, the morning prayer meeting, some thought, surpassed the meeting of September 25.

By such experiences the Saints feel encouraged to press on in the face of the depression.

October 23, a Graceland program was held. This was arranged by Miss Elizabeth Aelick, a former Graceland student, and exhibited much of the talent of the branch.

Halloween festivities are now being planned.

Former Hoquiam Branch Members Are Scattered

Former members of Hoquiam Branch (Washington) are scattered throughout the State and even at more distant points. Mention of the whereabouts of some of these will be of interest to Herald readers.

E. E. Fishel, former pastor, still lives on the old homestead near Quinault and is superintendent of the union Sunday school.

A. L. Ward is still living on a ranch near Aberdeen, Washington. He is superintendent of a union Sunday school held at the Wishkah High School.

F. A. Pierce and wife have been located at Tillamook, Oregon, for the past seven years.

The depression though quite severe in this region, seems to have rested more lightly on the Saints than many others, according to a letter by Sister Elizabeth Fishel, of Hoquiam.

Winnipeg, Manitoba

Local Men Plan Missionary Effort

Church members of this branch are showing splendid interest, and there is a beautiful spirit among the Saints. They look for the branch to move forward, and hope much good can be done.

Each week is well occupied. On Sunday the Saints have Sunday school at ten thirty, a short sermon at eleven thirty, and preaching again at 7 p. m. Wednesday evening there is prayer service; Thursday evening Brother Shields conducts a class in the study of psychology, and on Friday night a round table talk is the attraction. At other times the Saints manage to hold entertainments.

"I have been with Winnipeg Branch about a month, and enjoy working with the Saints," writes Elder V. H. Fisher. "It is my first experience in the missionary field. I was ordained an elder in July. The Saints in Winnipeg are very kind to me and overlook all shortcomings which are the result of inexperience."

Interest in church work was renewed when Apostle J. F. Curtis spent a week with the Saints of Winnipeg. They now are determined to move forward.

A few nonmembers are attending regular services, and the Saints feel that they may be convinced of the truth of the gospel. Sometime in the near future it is the hope of Brother Fisher and local men to hold a series of meetings in a hall in the downtown section of the city.

They think such a series would attract many other nonmembers.

Winnipeg Saints are able to hear the Sunday evening radio broadcast from the Stone Church in Independence. On October 23, they had a clear reception of a lecture on Prohibition and an organ recital.

Muskegon, Michigan

Rally Day Builds Enthusiasm

The committees for Thanksgiving and Christmas programs have been chosen, and Saints are expecting two great days long to be remembered in this locality.

Everyone in the branch is working in the interests of the gospel and enjoying the Spirit of the Master. There have been eleven baptisms, three weddings, and a number of children have been blessed during the year.

Rally day was held here October 2, and, as usual, proved very successful, there being large attendance at all meetings. Orchestra practice was held at nine o'clock; Sunday school at ten; preaching was by Apostle D. T. Williams who is starting another series of sermons for the winter months. His discourse was much appreciated. Sacrament service was held at twelve o'clock, everyone enjoying the Spirit in abundance. A gift of tongues was given through one of God's servants. The women served dinner in the church basement at one-thirty. Preaching by Elder Carlisle Whitehead, of Pontiac, was the attraction at three o'clock; round table talk with Elders Whitehead, of Muskegon, and Blett, of Grand Rapids, in charge, was held at four o'clock, followed by a sermon at five thirty by Elder Blett. The young people presented a play at six forty-five, displaying much talent. The seven thirty preaching service, conducted by Elder Whitehead, brought the day to a close. Several out-of-town Saints attended.

The annual business meeting occurred at the church September 26, with good attendance. Although the church has shared in the depression, Muskegon Saints have been able to make a substantial showing in decreasing the principal of their church debt. Elder Whitehead was chosen as pastor and Sister Whitehead as secretary for the coming year. This will make Brother Whitehead's fourteenth year as presiding elder of the branch. Vern Swager and Robert Roberts were chosen superintendent of Sunday school; Edwin Hittle and Robert Roberts are the new superintendents of the religio. All other officers were re-elected with the exception of Sister Dial who was chosen as assistant chorister.

Brother Douglas Osborne, priest, has accepted a position as cook on a freighter plying between Milwaukee and Muskegon. Douglas is greatly missed by the branch, especially by the young people with whom he has played an active part as their director.

Independence

Saints of Independence commemorated the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the late Joseph Smith, Prophet and President of the church for many years, with a brief memorial service at his grave in Mound Grove Cemetery last Sunday afternoon, November 6. Pastor John F. Sheehy read Brother Joseph's last instructions to the church, his statement given just before his death, and those gathered at the grave sang one verse of "There Is a Land Immortal," a hymn sung at his funeral. Prayer was offered by Evangelist U. W. Greene, and Joseph Smith, grandson of the late Prophet, and son of Brother and Sister Israel A. Smith, placed a wreath on the tomb.

Women workers were happy to present to the church a sacrifice offering from their department for this week amounting to three hundred and sixty dollars. The envelopes were collected and the total amount of the offering was announced at the weekly meeting Monday afternoon. Pastor J. F. Sheehy was in charge of this meeting and talked inspiringly of the sacrifices of our forefathers. Bishop J. S. Kelley also was there.

This sum equals the amount given the first week of the drive for personal sacrifice among the women. The first sum, however, was considerably augmented by the contribution of the Laurel Club which gave the proceeds from a dinner served at the Auditorium. This week's offering gives evidences of greater individual contributions, and more personal sacrifice. Group one added to the sum with proceeds from a play, "The Spinners' Convention," given at the Dining Hall last Friday night.

The women of Independence are enthusiastic over the information gained, the contacts made, and the wholehearted participation of all workers and helpers in this offering campaign.

Stone Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy invoked the spirit and peace of the late President and Prophet Joseph Smith upon the Stone Church congregation in his sacrament talk Sunday morning. Commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of this great man of the church, Brother Sheehy told how he proved himself a Prophet and leader, how he led the church onward and improved Zion, and of the teachings and helps and hymns he gave to the church.

Assisting Pastor Sheehy in the stand were Patriarch Albert Carmichael, Bishops J. S. Kelley and R. T. Cooper, and Elders H. G. Barto, W. Wallace Smith, and C. Ed. Miller.

It was fitting and impressive that the opening song should be "The Old, Old Path." The spirit of worship prevailed at this service, and the crowd of worshippers was large.

Following a period of silent prayer and meditation, Patriarch Albert Carmichael offered a special prayer for the church and its progress.

The afternoon was crowded with activities, priesthood meeting at the church, the memorial service at the grave of Joseph Smith, and class work at six o'clock.

Stone Church Saints in great numbers enjoyed the illustrated lecture of Brother C. Ed. Miller Sunday night, which presented a fine collection of scenes from the life of the late Joseph Smith. Brother Miller has spent many weeks and months getting this collection together, and has been asked to present this lecture at several other places in the near future. His effort Sunday night was to refresh the memories of many who personally knew the late Joseph, and to acquaint those who are younger with the goodness and greatness of the man who took charge of the church at the Amboy conference, and was its President until his death in 1914.

The evening's music was supplied by the Stone Church Choir.

Sister Viola V. Short, seventy-eight years of age, died November 1, at her home, her passing resulting from a broken hip which she suffered on September 13, when she fell while attending a meeting at the Auditorium. She was at the Independence Sanitarium three weeks and for the past four weeks had been at her home. She was born July 23, 1854, at Millersburg, Illinois, and married Morris T. Short in 1880. They came to Independence and built the home in which she lived until her death. Her husband, a missionary in the church for years, died about thirty years ago. Sister Short was the author of a book, "The Fourth Relaford," served for some time as local librarian of the church; was active in the Laurel Club which she helped to organize. The funeral was held from the Stone Church November 3, President F. M. Smith preaching the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Arthur McKim, of Independence, and Mrs. W. E. La Rue, of Washington, and a son, June A. Short, of Independence; eight grandchildren, other relatives, and a wide circle of friends.

Brother J. T. Dimick, eighty years old, died November 2, at his home, having been bedfast for several weeks. He was a member of the church for many years. His wife, Emily, preceded him in death about twenty-five years. Surviving are his daughter, Mrs. Marie Campbell, of the home, and five sons: Charles G., Elmer F., Eugene L., Leroy, and Harry

A., and many friends. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Joseph Luff at the Carson Funeral Home, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Another aged sister and a sufferer of several months, Sister Mary E. James, died at her home November 6. She was eighty-three years of age and had belonged to the church since July 26, 1863. Came with her parents from England to Illinois when she was four years of age, and had lived in Independence continuously for forty-eight years. She was the widow of Thomas James, a Civil War veteran, and a former postmaster of Independence. Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. L. R. Wells and Mrs. Frank Esgar; two brothers, a sister, five grandchildren, one great grandchild, and many friends. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon from Stahl's Funeral Home, and interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Second Church

The former pastor, A. K. Dillie, talked a short time at the church school Sunday, November 6, of "The Late Joseph Smith." Several amusing incidents in the life of Brother Joseph Smith were related to the congregation.

The communion service was opened by an organ prelude played by Mrs. Vinnie Hatch. Following this Brother A. K. Dillie read from Matthew 24. The invocation was given by Brother Ben Sarratt. Mrs. Kathern Inman sang a hymn which was followed by the blessing of Robert Gene Willoughby by Elder William Inman and Brother Sarratt. The talk on the oblation was made by William Inman, the theme being, "Can God Depend On Me?" The passing of the sacrament was preceded by the offering and a short period of meditation.

Elder William Inman was in charge of the seven thirty service assisted by Ivan Dillie. "Unmoved by Fear," was sung by the choir. Elder H. O. Smith, speaker of the evening, used as his subject, "The Young Joseph Smith," and gave an interesting account of his life.

At the business meeting Wednesday, November 2, Elder William Inman was elected pastor, Mrs. Kathern Inman, leader of women and Elder Sam Inman the bishop's agent. During the meeting there were three ordinations. Brother Roy Settles was ordained a teacher, Brother Archie Davis, a deacon, and Sam Inman, an elder.

Walnut Park Church

At the business meeting of Walnut Park congregation Wednesday evening, November 2, the officers elected were Pastor, Elder Frank McDonald; assistant pastor, Elder Mansel Williams; bishop's agent, Fred Horn; custodian, John Reynolds; director of church school, Albert Chapman; director of music, Orlando Nace; director of women, Sister Mansel Williams.

Sacrament service Sunday was in charge of Elders Frank McDonald and Mansel Williams. The church was filled and a splendid meeting was experienced. Goldie Nadine Newell, little daughter of Brother and Sister Hugh E. Newell, was blessed during this service, Elders Frank McDonald and Carroll Olson officiating.

Sunday evening class work is proceeding, with large numbers in attendance. One hundred and sixty were reported present last Sunday. At the assembly period following the classes the following program was presented, in charge of Opal Horn: Vocal solo, Melba Moorman; readings, Jean Cross, and Pauline Burke; vocal duet sung in German, Sister Warnecke and daughter, Elsa Warnecke; talk, Brother Benjamin Bean.

The Galilean Class had a Halloween masquerade party Monday evening, October 31. About forty-five attended.

A daughter was born at the Sanitarium, Monday evening, October 31, to Brother and Sister Sharon Thomas.

Enoch Hill Church

October 23, the pastor in Zion, John F. Sheehy, was the morning speaker, taking as his theme, "What Would Jesus Do?" He brought out many beautiful thoughts that will help the Saints to become more like Jesus.

In the evening the Saints on the hill met with other Independence Saints at the Auditorium to hear President F. M. Smith.

October 30 was College Day. Millard Pace, a former Graceland student, gave a splendid talk on the merits of the church college during the church school hour, and the senior young people's class sang the "Alma Mater Hymn."

Brother R. V. Hopkins occupied the morning hour. Having been both student and faculty member at Graceland he was very capable of discussing the college from several angles. Olive Curtis, a Graceland, played a violin solo; Mrs. Lilla Warren and Mrs. May Jones sang "Remember Thy Creator in the Days of Thy Youth." The choir sang "Win Them One by One," at the opening of the service, and after the sermon "Graceland Forever" was sung.

Pastor H. L. Barto occupied the evening hour, taking for his subject, "When the Wicked Rule the People Mourn." Musical numbers were furnished by Mr. and Mrs. Millard Pace, who sang "In Jesus," and Mr. Pace and W. T. Shakespeare sang "Love's Triumphant Story."

The Centennial of Joseph Smith was celebrated by the singing of the songs of the Prophet. Elder Barto gave many little incidents from the life of Joseph Smith, and a quartet composed of Mrs. Ruth Hayes, Mrs. Rilla Johnson, Mrs. May Worth, and Miss Ruby Johnson, sang "Tenderly, Tenderly Lead Thou Me On."

A large congregation attended the sacrament service, and there was a great degree of God's Spirit present.

In the evening a quartet from Atherton, Donald Bullard, Florence O'Dell, Marjory Snively, and Ted Snively sang "Ivory Palaces," and from Liberty Street Church came Hubert and Stanley Mills, who presented a trombone and cornet duet, and Hubert Mills played a trombone solo.

Further tribute was paid Joseph Smith in the evening sermon by Elder J. E. Vanderwood. Following the sermon the choir sang "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

The annual branch business meeting was held at the church Wednesday evening, November 2. Bishop J. Stanley Kelley was present. All the old officers were reinstated: Pastor, Herbert L. Barto; assistant pastor, Robert Whitsitt; church school director, C. E. Beal; bishop's agent, J. C. Alexander; chorister, Mrs. Henrietta Allen, and women's leader, Mrs. Iva Chrestensen.

Spring Branch Church

The branch business meeting occurred here last Wednesday evening, Elder D. S. McNamara in charge, assisted by Elders Robert Fish and George W. Eastwood. The following officers were elected: Pastor, Elder G. W. Eastwood; associate pastor, Robert Fish; bishop's agent, Morris Jacobson; director of Religious Education, Alma Tankard; assistant, J. S. Andes; women's leader, Sister Robert Fish; young people's leader, Joseph Farrow; chorister, Sister Jalmer Nelson. In the church school organization the secretary is Sister Ada Tankard; primary superintendent, Sister Jessie Smith; children's division leader, Sister Jessie Smith. The spirit of unity prevailed throughout the whole meeting. At eight forty the meeting was turned into a prayer and testimony service.

Sunday services began auspiciously with a fine prayer meeting in charge of Jessie Smith and Alma Tankard. Brother Smith talked briefly on the theme, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

At the Sunday school hour there was a talk on business. Pastor Eastwood had the branch vote on two more officers: Sister Robert Fish as adult superintendent and Sister Ethel Peer, nursery superintendent.

Brother Eastwood presided over the sacrament service at eleven o'clock, and Brother John Bozarth gave the sacrament talk. The spirit of peace and blessing was felt by the worshipers at this hour.

The evening church school program was in charge of Sister Nellie Martin.

The eight o'clock speaker was Brother George F. Weston whose Scripture reading was 1 Corinthians 15: 16-22. A quartet of local singers sang two of Joseph Smith's compositions in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of his birth.

The women's department will meet tomorrow at the home of Sister Arthur Peers, to sew for the church.

Esther, Missouri

Pastor Baptizes Nine

Saints here rejoice over the nine baptisms performed by Pastor Ellis Jarrells since the first of the year. The first to obey was Sister Mandy Manning, of Herculeaneum, a sister of Mrs. Jarrells, of Esther. The next was a young woman of Marquand, Miss Christy Kelley, a daughter of Sister Musgraves. The third to be baptized was Mrs. Bertie Wilson, of Potosi, Missouri, now of Esther, who is afflicted, and needs the prayers of the Saints.

Within the last few weeks a man, Pearl Linn, of Flat River, Missouri, and head of a family, was baptized, and during October five more were inducted into the kingdom: another sister of Mrs. Jarrells and her grown daughter, Sister Alva, and Miss Marie Blanke, of Saint Louis. After the confirmation of these women, a good spiritual prayer meeting was held.

About two weeks later Charles Rigler and wife, Ruby, only daughter of Mrs. Jarrells, and Mrs. Alberta Richardson Jarrells, wife of Glenwood Jarrells, and daughter of Brother George and Sister Dora M. Richardson, were baptized and a lively prayer service followed their confirmation by Elder Jarrells. Also the infant son of Brother and Sister Rigler was blessed. Others are interested in the gospel and near the kingdom.

Kalamazoo, Michigan

Happy to Have Another Priesthood Helper

Gospel work in Kalamazoo goes onward. Things have not always gone as best they could, yet many here have worked tirelessly. The membership has increased by the baptism of four children of the Sunday school not long ago.

The church here has had cause to rejoice in that another has been called into the priesthood. Brother Glenn Myers who came here to attend Teachers College two years ago and who is now teaching in the city public schools, was ordained to the office of priest by Apostle D. T. Williams on one of his recent visits here.

Brother Williams has made two visits to Kalamazoo this fall. His coming is looked forward to for he is the only missionary who passes this way, and much good is derived from his help.

This summer the church school held two picnics.

In the children's division the classes were promoted as units to higher rank. The children are proud of their promotion certificates which have helped greatly to add to the interest in the church school.

Election of officers was held a short time ago so that this branch might be more in line with the general church, having its year begin the first of October. Elder E. J. Goodenough, of Comstock, Michigan, was chosen to preside over the branch, and Glenn Myers was named as his assistant. Harry Whipple was reelected branch clerk; Sister Bertha Priester, chorister. She has since organized a choir, and they are working as an added feature and help in branch activities. Glenn Myers was elected church school director with Muriel Robinson as his assistant. His helpers are: superintendent of adult division, Mrs. Dean West; superintendent of young people, Miss Lucretia McCormick, and superintendent of children, Mrs. Gladys Wilson.

Brother Arthur Smith, a distant relative of the Prophet of the church, is running a newsstand in the Michigan Central Depot, and will be glad to meet any Saints passing through who have a few minutes to rest from their ride.

Kansas City Stake

The evening of November 1, representatives of the various stake churches met at the stake office to devise ways and means to organize a permanent corps of assistants to the bishopric, to canvass the entire membership for money to liquidate the pressing debts of the local and general church, this to be done under the bishopric's direction. Workers expressed themselves as not favoring drives resorted to for that purpose, as they do not effect a continuous flow of means into the treasury, but compose a desultory method which fails in its full purpose. The entire representation was in favor of an equitable arrangement whereby the financial needs of the church can be kept before all the membership all the time. As soon as the details of the plan are worked out more will be said of it.

Heathwood Church

The last few weeks have been busy ones for Heathwood Church. Attendance and devotion have been increasing at nearly all the services and other activities, and the spirit of unity and willingness is prevalent among the Saints.

Every woman has pledged herself to sacrifice for the church, giving a definite amount each week and more when possible, beginning October 23, and continuing as long as the church needs special help.

A play entitled "Faith" was presented by the adult division Sunday evening, October 9, to a full church.

Brother Green gave an interesting illustrated lecture October 2, on "The Early Days of the Church."

"Appreciation" was the theme chosen by James Post at the church school worship service Sunday morning. Brother Post is one of the branch's high school boys, and he presented his talk in a convincing manner.

The O. B. K. chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Sister J. L. Johnson furnish special music every Sunday morning and evening.

The children's division is coming to the front under the supervision of Sister Edna Decker. A Bible story-telling class is held in the basement of the church each Wednesday evening. An average of thirty-five children from the neighborhood attend.

Study classes have been organized to meet at six thirty each Sunday evening. Brother D. E. Hough is teaching the adult class church history. A short program follows the study period.

Recent speakers have been J. O. Worden, D. E. Hough, Bishop C. A. Skinner, and Pastor John Tucker.

Holden Stake

Jefferson City

Saints of this city have been very much aided of late by the untiring work of their pastor, also by the help of Brother Charles Warren. Missionary Smith has labored here for a period of about two weeks. His lectures were ably rendered and illustrated by the use of charts on each subject.

The group of members here felt quite alone on the day the Holden Stake conference was held, the conference having claimed a number from Jefferson City. But on that day, they were pleasantly surprised with a visit from Elder E. A. Curtis, who helped in the Sunday school services, and followed with a talk.

Brother Curtis helped to gather the Saints together when the first meetings were held here. There were three families at that time.

Local Saints would appreciate the help of any elders or priests who happen to be passing through Jefferson City. The group is growing slowly but steadily. Mrs. N. R. Sapp is the adult supervisor.

Twelve Baptized in Minnesota

Two weeks ago I came here and began meetings in the Saints' church. The interest was good and increased. Yesterday (October 30) I had the pleasure of baptizing twelve persons in Clitherall Lake. The ground was covered with snow and the weather was cold. The ages of those baptized ranged from nine to seventy-eight years.

We then went to the church and had a fine confirmation meeting followed by testimonies from Saints old and new.

Elder F. Lester Whiting is branch president and he and his family and other noble Saints have stood by the work here for several years. Yesterday they rejoiced to have twelve more added to their number. Others are favorable, so we are continuing the meetings.

I have baptized thirty persons since June 5, and prospects are good for more.

J. F. CURTIS.

A Devoted and Harmonious Group at Drumright

Musicians Assist in Services

While visiting and preaching in Northern Michigan, we, my wife and I, saw a letter from this place (Drumright, Oklahoma). The writer, Brother B. F. Pollard, asked for help in the musical line.

We came here the first week in September, and are leaving soon for Borger, Texas. Today, October 30, seven were led into the waters of baptism, as a direct result of the prayers and faithful lives of the Saints residing here. Others will no doubt follow soon.

We have found an unusual manifestation of unity and love displayed here in the little church about midway between Drumright and Oilton. If only those who live the artificial city life with its frivolities and follies could realize the joy that comes from sharing with others the simple things, they would have a better conception of Zion. Before we came here, the principles and details which must be observed before Zion can be realized, seemed insurmountable, distant, and even distorted. When one has lived where the magic potion of love has not been procurable and where the life of the community has been dominated by fear and selfishness, the negative feelings of society are easily acquired.

Brother B. F. Pollard, the elder in charge, has devoted himself unstintingly to the work of the church. Priest Noah Wise is stalwart in his integrity and faithfulness. The other member of the priesthood, William Bunch, a young man having the office of teacher, is to be commended for his work among the young who number about thirty.

A group of members such as this, living in their present relationship can be one of the greatest factors in the desired culmination of our latter-day work.

One of those baptized, a man of fifty years, without solicitation, asked for help in filing his inventory blank, vowing that he intended to pay his tithes on the things he possesses.

Another brother who has been retarded in spiritual blessings by the use of tobacco, has given up that habit; while many others, wishing to observe the celestial law in its fullness, have discontinued the use of tea and coffee.

We sent the word "telestial" to the publishers of the Webster's New International Dictionary, after we had corresponded with them and they requested it. It is a new word, one coined through the vocabulary of inspiration, and we felt that these publishers should know that such a word was given through Joseph Smith.

There are only four families of Saints at Borger, so we hear, but we are going there to cheer them up, and if possible, secure preaching appointments.

My wife was formerly a member of the Utah Church. She is an accomplished pianist, and I lead the songs and preach the word. We are praying for the onward progress of earth's greatest institution, the church.

Central Michigan District Goes Forward

Fine Spirit of Harmony and Peace

Meetings of peace, harmony, and deep spirituality made the recent district conference held at Beaverton, Michigan, long to be remembered. There was no jarring, no contention, but agreement prevailed. The prayer meetings were excellent. Saints returned to their home branches determined to make this district a glorious place to live. By unanimous vote they decided to hold reunion next year, serving free meals and inviting Eastern Michigan and Detroit Districts to join them.

The work of Central Michigan District is onward. Many of the branches are working in fine spirit, making the necessary preparations for Zion. There are some careless ones who seem to have no vision of life and its meaning, and these fail to realize that the gospel is the answer to their needs.

We shall be glad to have a visit from President F. M. McDowell and Apostle D. T. Williams in this district in the near future. Brother Williams will be with us for an all-day meeting at Tawas City, November 11, and Brother McDowell at Saginaw, December 8, for an all-day meeting.

A goodly number have been baptized in the last year, and I am asking all of the priesthood to see that candidates are coming in with an understanding heart, sensing what the step means. There is little use to bring people into the church unless they are willing to fit into the activities and needs of the body, unless they come to make a real contribution to the upbuilding of the church, for in so doing they build their own lives for God and his work.

Brother B. H. Doty and family, Brother and Sister DuRose, Brother and Sister Earl Burt, and the White family, from Toronto, were at our excellent conference.

HUBERT CASE.

Jesus did not toss his message of "Be ye perfect" to his eager disciples, and then withdraw to let them struggle unaided towards its attainment. In his own perfect and matchless life he gave a living revelation of how it could be done. I am not prepared as some are to speak of the efficacy of Christ's spilled blood in redeeming man, but I am prepared to say that the man who catches the living revelation of Christ's life and applies that revelation to his own, is already on the road to the realization of Christ's message of "Be ye perfect." He, too, will be a son of God.—Lonzo Jones.

At 2 p. m. business meeting will open. In the evening at 7.30 Springfield Branch is sponsoring a splendid program. Branch secretaries, please see that your statistical reports are in the hands of the district secretary, Mrs. H. E. Waite, of Thayer, Missouri, not later than November 27. All branch presidents' reports should also be in my hands not later than November 27. Please send same to Springfield, Missouri. Apostle J. F. Garver will be present. We are expecting a good attendance.—W. E. Haden, district president.

Conference Minutes

HOLDEN STAKE.—The forty-fourth conference of Holden Stake convened at Atherton, Missouri, October 29, and 30, with W. S. Macrae and F. A. McWethy of the stake presidency in charge. The first session was a prayer meeting at 9 a. m., which by reason of the harmonious spirit that prevailed, seemed to portend good things for the conference. At 10 a. m. a session for business was formally opened with F. A. McWethy in charge. After songs and a violin selection by Roscoe Moorman, of Jefferson City, prayer was offered by A. H. Wintermeyer also of the capital city. It was next moved and ordered that President F. M. McDowell be associated with the stake presidency in presiding over and making provision for the conference. Brother McDowell then came forward and presided, associated with Brothers Macrae and McWethy. Sister Gladys Beebe was appointed secretary, and Brother S. S. Smith, publicity agent of the conference. Stake Bishop J. A. Koehler submitted his report, which was read and commented upon by himself. Amos Allen, also of the stake bishopric made a few observations. Recorder's report by Sister Elmarie McCormick, of the stake, covering a period from November 30, 1931, to September 30, 1932, showed a net gain of 68. November 30, 1931, the membership was 1,977. Gain by baptism, 49; gain by transfer, 142; loss by transfer, 106; loss by death, 17; no expulsions; present membership, 2,045. The quorum of elders of Holden Stake in which fifteen reported, made the following summary: Sermons, 119; times in charge, 200; assisted in presiding, 87; other services attended, 643; baptized, 12; confirmed, 14; assisted to confirm, 9; children blessed, 3; assisted in blessing, 3; administered to sick, 120; assisted in administering, 17; marriages, 5; pastoral visits, 38; priests, 12; administered the sacrament, 19; tracts distributed, 534, and house to house calls, 49. This report was by G. F. Baker. A motion prevailed that we change the time of annual branch business meetings from May to September, and thus make it harmonize with the general church organization. The stake high council recommended the following ordinations through President W. S. Macrae: Brother Ray Eddleman, of Lexington, to the office of priest; Brother Charles Wintermeyer, of Jefferson City, to the office of priest, and Brother Joseph Brown, of Jefferson City, to the office of teacher. These names were acted upon separately by the conference. After favorable comments by several who knew these men and were also acquainted with the circumstances of the call, the conference approved of the recommendation, and made provision for the ordinations. Pursuant to the suggestion of J. A. Koehler of the stake bishopric, it was moved the conference approve the action of the stake officers in discontinuing and disposing of the "Square Deal Dining-Hall" at the State fair grounds at Sedalia, Missouri. This motion prevailed. F. A. McWethy of the stake presidency, and Amos Allen spoke in appreciation of the work of those who have helped in the dining-hall work, and especially of President W. S. Macrae and his untiring efforts to make this work a success. It was also pointed out and stressed, respecting the contribution this dining hall work had made to the stake building fund. Brother W. S. Macrae was given a vote of thanks in appreciation of his labors to establish this work on a paying basis. A motion prevailed that we endorse the action of the stake officials in buying a lot at Blue Springs, which was alluded to in the bishop's report. It was suggested on the conference floor that some provision be made for a Holden Stake booth at the Harvest Home Festival, and it was then moved that the stake presidency be asked to make such provision as is necessary for such a booth. The motion was carried. At this junction Bishop J. A. Koehler made timely suggestions concerning the work of individual stake members in preparation for the Harvest Home Festival. The election of stake officers was next taken up, and the stake presidency, as presently constituted, was sustained. The stake bishopric as now constituted was sustained. The high council of the stake was likewise sustained, as well as the stake quorum of elders. Sister Gladys Beebe was elected stake secretary. The matter of choosing a stake recorder was left to the stake presidency with power to act. The choice of a director of Religious Education, was likewise left to the stake presidency for selection. Two names were placed in nomination for stake musical director, G. E. Wells and Sister Anna Lou Haus. Sister Haus was elected. The time and place of the next stake conference are left to the selection of the stake presidency. Announcements and appointments for the conference were then made by the stake president, W. S. Macrae; doxology was sung; dismissal prayer by W. A. McDowell. Dinner was served to the large crowd, cafeteria and style, by the sisters of Atherton group and everything passed off systematically and harmoniously. At 2 p. m. President F. M. McDowell spoke effectively on the theme, "Open Avenues for Service." At 7.30 p. m. preaching was by Brother W. A. McDowell on the subject, "The Law of the Lord." This meeting was in charge of Brother Amos E. Allen. Special music was by Atherton Ladies Quartet. Sunday morning at 9.30 the conference met in various groups—the children's division met at the church under the leadership of Sister May Curtis. President F. M. McDowell spoke to the young people's division on the advisability of a stake organization, and steps were then taken to carry this out, and an organization was effected. The following officers were elected: President, Gladys Beebe, of Atherton; vice president, Charles Wintermeyer, of Jefferson City; secretary, Genevieve Smith, of Lees Summit; councilmen, Gladys Carr, of Holden; Earnest Enslay, of Post Oak; Ben Kramer, of Knobnoster, and Ammon Andes, of Warrensburg. The adult division was addressed by Bishop J. A. Koehler on the subject of "Social Ideals of the Church." At eleven o'clock President McDowell again spoke, this time on the subject "Foundations That Endure," or the "Ongoing Program of God," and five great truths were stressed: (1) God is our Father; (2) All men are paternal sons; (3) Men are essentially brothers; (4) Brotherhood, and (5) The power of love. Special musical numbers were a solo by Bishop Koehler, and a quartet number by Atherton young people. Stake President W. S. Macrae in charge. At 1 o'clock Sister Charles Koehler addressed the women of the stake relative to the coming sacrifice period. There was also an elders' quorum meeting at the same hour. At 2 p. m. there was an ordination service in charge of President W. S. Macrae and W. A. McDowell, prayer by the latter. Violin number by Brother R. F. Moorman. Encouragement and admonition were given in the charge to the candidates for ordination by Brother W. A. McDowell. A solo by Sister Arthur Haus was accompanied by violin and piano. Brother Ray Edleman, of Lexington, was then ordained a priest by Bishop J. A. Koehler and Robert Dillon. Brother Charles Wintermeyer, of Jefferson City, was ordained a priest by Amos E. Allen and A. H. Wintermeyer, and Brother Joseph Brown, of Jefferson City, a teacher, by F. A. McDowell and Roscoe F. Moorman. Brother McWethy extended the hand of fellowship and welcome on behalf of the members and priesthood of the stake. A vote of thanks was extended Atherton Saints for their generous hospitality in feeding and caring for the conference. The last meal, it was estimated, cared for 500. The conference adjourned according to previous resolution; dismissal prayer by Bishop Koehler.

NORTHERN WISCONSIN.—District conference was held with Black River Falls Branch October 8 and 9. Business session was held at 2 o'clock. Elder Leonard Houghton was in charge and made a short talk. Motion carried that Elders Houghton and I. H. Bowen have charge of the conference. All reports were read and approved. Recommendation by District President Houghton to ordain Alva Jerome to the office of priest was accepted and approved. New officers for the coming year were elected as follows: District president, Leonard Houghton; counselors chosen by Brother Houghton were unanimously approved by the body, Elders I. H. Bowen and F. A. Atwood. Secretary, Mary Mair; treasurer, Horace Scafe; chorister, Sister Rufus Perkins; librarian, Sister George Hemstock; member of auditing committee, Sister Sherwood; Sunday school secretary, Sister Sherwood; Religious Education director, Brother Sherwood. Motion carried that the district presidency see fit and proper to hold a reunion in 1933, to do so in consideration with Minnesota District. Next conference will be held with Frankfort Branch. A vote of thanks was extended Saints of Black River Falls Branch for their hospitality. Bishops' Agent Lee Root was sustained by unanimous vote. Preaching at eight o'clock was by Brother Houghton. Sunday, October 9: Young people's prayer service in charge of Lee Root and Horace Scafe at 9 o'clock. Prayer service in main church at 9 o'clock. Church school in charge of Brother Sherwood at 10 o'clock, prayer by Elder Manley Shedd. Brother Houghton was the 11 o'clock speaker, I. H. Bowen assisting. At 2 p. m. a round-table was in charge of I. H. Bowen and Leonard Houghton. Brother Houghton was the evening speaker. Thus ended one of the best conferences ever held in Northern Wisconsin. The Spirit of the Master was felt by all, and our aim is onward to Zion.

LONDON.—The conference of London District met in London October 15 and 16. The business session opened at 2 p. m., Apostle D. T. Williams and the district presidency in charge. Apostle Williams gave an address in which he appealed to the Saints to create a spiritual atmosphere in the home by having family worship, studying the books of the church, and singing the songs of Zion in the family group, thus building up a spiritual background on which to grow, that all may rise gradually to the heights of the Divine. Elder R. S. Salyards also addressed the conference, and spoke on the great need for study of church books so that all will know why they are Latter Day Saints, and realize that only a close adherence to these principles will bring them successfully to their goal. The necessary business was transacted after which the following officers were elected: President, Elder James Winegarden; counselors, Elder J. E. MacGregor and Bishop J. C. Dent; treas. and bishops' agent, Clarence Weeks; sec., C. Schlotzhauer; music director, D. A. Witrow; supervisor of church schools, R. H. Atkinson, and assistants, Grace Perry and Elder Percy Farrow. At 8 p. m. a program by the young people of the district was very much appreciated. This consisted of a selection by London Branch Orchestra; prayer by Apostle D. T. Williams; chairman's address, J. C. Dent; organ selection, Mrs. C. Abell; solo, T. B. Richardson; violin selection, Harold Neal; address, Apostle D. T. Williams; cornet solo, Ronald Neal; reading, Miss Verda Evans; solo, T. B. Richardson; piano selection, Raymond Neal. The program closed by singing, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." Sunday morning at 9.15 the conference met in prayer service. The time was well occupied, and a feeling of peace and gratitude was present during the entire service. At 11 a. m., Brother Salyards occupied as speaker and urged that the Saints become well informed so that they may remain firm under all condition. Apostle Williams spoke at 2.30 and at 7 p. m. and urged that all be loyal, and that they look upon the heart and not upon outward appearance. The conference adjourned to meet again at the call of the presidency.

Our Departed Ones

SPROULE.—Lillian Bertha Turner was born on December 31, 1904, at Trinidad, Colorado. She was married to Paul Sproule July 12, 1926, and to this union was born one child, a daughter. She became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on September 6, 1913, and was faithful to her baptismal covenant. After an illness of about three years, she passed away at her home in Raton, New Mexico, October 24, 1932. She leaves to mourn her passing: her husband, Paul Sproule; her daughter, Eva May Sproule; her father, John Turner; four sisters; one brother, and many other relatives and friends. The funeral service was conducted by Glaude A. Smith at Raton, and interment was in the city cemetery.

PILTZ.—Mary Piltz, wife of Captain George H. Piltz, master of the cable ship Dickenson, died at her home in Hawaii September 13, 1932. Her maiden name was Mary Pinoham and she was brought up by Queen Liliuokalani, being one of the five girls who were cared for by the queen. During the reign of her sovereign she lived at Iolani palace, and after the queens' abdication went with her to live at Washington Place. She was baptized a member of the church October 11, 1836, by G. J. Waller. The funeral was held at the Saints' chapel, Lunalilo Tract, Makiki, Elder Waller in charge, followed by burial in Nuuanu Cemetery. Surviving are the following children: Mrs. M. Akana, Guy Piltz, Mrs. Friscilla Kramer, Hazel Piltz, and Winifred Piltz.

WALL.—Norman Wall was born March 29, 1889. Died September 30, 1932. He married Mabel L. Wells July 14, 1914, and to them was born one son, Norman Dan Wall. Leaves to mourn his untimely death, his wife, son, four brothers and one sister: Mrs. Savannah Lavender, and Thomas and Earl, of Danville, Virginia; Porter, of Shreveport, Louisiana, and Lucas Wall, of Hamilton, Washington. His father and mother preceded him in death some years ago. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder A. H. Nieman at Columbus, Ohio, October 2, 1931. The funeral was conducted by Elder Franklin Rieske, and interment was at the National Military Soldiers Home at Dayton, Ohio.

GEORGE.—William C. George was born in Manchester, England, December 1, 1855, and passed from this life at his late home at Kirtland, Ohio, October 12, 1932. When about three years old he came to America with his parents. In 1877, he married Alma Savoy, and to them were born five children: Edna, Richard, Alma, Marcine, and Nellie. Nellie died in infancy. November 25, 1887, the wife and mother of the home was taken by death, and in September two years later Mr. George married Mary E. Hulmes. Three children were born to this union: Mary H., Edwin L., and Claire. Claire died when but an infant. In 1893, he moved with his family to Kirtland, which place was his home for nearly forty years. In 1874, he entered the kingdom through the water of baptism, and to this covenant he gave himself unreservedly to the end. For many months preceding his death he was sorely afflicted with cancer of the throat, being unable to carry on a conversation except by writing. The ennobling qualities of his Christian life stood the test through it all. He was the embodiment of patience, gentleness, faith, and sweetness, and in this atmosphere he came to the end of the day and passed away. His soul was immersed with the Spirit of Christ's love and redemption, and his church and its mission were his constant concern. For a number of years he was in the employ of the Ohio State University at Columbus. His friends there were many and when affliction came upon him, he was not forgotten. He was intimately acquainted with many of the early ministers of the Reorganization. His faithful wife who went with him through the shadow of affliction in loving service and sacrifice, mourns his passing along with his children and many friends. The funeral services were held in the Temple in charge of Elders Ebenezer Curry, Earnest A. Webbe, and John L. Cooper. Interment was in Temple Hill Cemetery.

The Pigeonhole

A Good Christian

Just recently I met a good Christian. By that I mean a person whose religion goes with her everywhere, and not just to church. Hers is a religion of the heart, not of the lips. Her testimony is not eloquent—though she does not fail there—but she is very valiant in deeds. It is a refreshing and encouraging experience to meet one true convert to the gospel among so many church-goers.

She is not wealthy—in fact, she has a hard struggle to take the place of both father and mother to her family, and keep them together, to maintain a home for them, to send some to school, and to see that others are kept in steady work. All this would be more than enough for most women to do. But she does not stop there. She probably does more for the comfort of the traveling ministry than any other two families in her branch.

Her great virtue is thoughtfulness of the little things that contribute to the comfort and health of those who must be here and there, suffering the inconveniences that one can not escape in travel. If she knows that they have been for hours without rest or food, she has a place for them to take a brief nap and something warm for them to eat and drink. Others invite them to fine dinners on the big occasions. She takes care of them on all the little occasions when everybody else neglects them. And she does all of these things unostentatiously, as a part of her day's work, and without any particular claim for credit.

She is of that number whose faces are made beautiful by kindness, whose whole lives become transcendent in service.

I won't tell her name. It would embarrass her to tears to get any publicity for the work that she performs joyfully and regards as of little importance. Yet I can not help reflecting the great contribution that people like her make to the building of the kingdom of God. It is the spirit that moves them that makes their whole lives a noble example.

THE PIGEON.

To say I don't need the church is mere bravado. I needed it when my father died. I needed it when we were married and when our babies were taken from us, and I shall need it again, sooner or later, and need it badly. I am in good health now, and I could, I suppose, get along nicely for a time without a clergyman or a choir or even a prayer. But what sort of a man is he who scorns and neglects and despises his best friend until his hour of tribulation?—Edgar A. Guest.

The superstition that all our hours of work are a minus quantity in the happiness of life, and all the hours of idleness are plus ones, is a most ludicrous and pernicious doctrine, and its greatest support comes from our not taking sufficient trouble, not making a real effort, to make work as near pleasure as it can be.—Lord Balfour.

"There is no question that we have contributed to our own misfortunes. Selfishness is the besetting sin of humanity, and we have been guilty."—Secretary of War Patrick J. Hurley, at the Auditorium.

Thanksgiving Day

What have we for which to be thankful?

The custom of designating a specific day on which to give thanks to Deity for blessings received is well fixed and has its place among our holidays. It is quite appropriate, too, that the day should have been fixed at the close of the Harvest Home season of the year. For with larders filled even a winter of hardships can be faced with equanimity and even happiness.

And so we give thanks!

But returning thanks should by no means be peculiar to Thanksgiving Day. Those truly cognizant of dependence upon God for life and peace, should and do have always hearts overflowing with gratitude, and thanks are expressed in word or by deed every day and every hour.

The church, our church, today faces a situation which will try and is trying our mettle. We must needs be alert, active, full of faith and devoted to our tasks; but even in the midst of such times we have much for which to give thanks. And we do.

We join all who feel disposed on Thanksgiving Day, or at any other time, to share in concerted expressions of gratitude to a beneficent Providence.

F. M. S.

Remembrance

At a time when we are expressing our thanks for such blessings as we continue to enjoy, even in the midst of adversity, we must hold in remembrance those who have less of this world's goods to be thankful for than we have. All of us have suffered, but some have suffered far greater hardships than others have. Our pity and mercy must be extended towards the unfortunate. It is consonant with the spirit and teaching of the Master that this should be so. Only the spirit of selfishness and greed can move people to sit idly by in times of distress and hoard their resources to themselves for their own exclusive satisfaction.

In these times we must remember the families of the missionaries, those who have lived scantily in even the best of times. They have always been willing to live for little of this world's goods in order that they might carry on the work of the Master. They, in many cases have given all. They have sacrificed profitable careers, they have put their faith for the future in the church rather than in worldly wealth. Now we can not fail them. It is our moral responsibility. It is our turn to sacrifice for them. If we do not, we can not face the world as a church organization. If we neglect our honest debts our moral credit is worth nothing.

We must hold ever in remembrance the ideals of the gospel—to help the poor, to relieve the suffering, to visit the sick, to labor day in and day out for the cause of righteousness.

"Just a Mistake"

Not long ago, so the story goes, a criminal went from one city to another with the intention of engaging in the illicit liquor traffic there. He found a "gang" already well established in the other city, with a practical monopoly on that illicit liquor traffic. But he decided to compete, and he did so with the liberal use of pistols and the occasional employment of machine guns. In gang parlance this is called "muscling in." At last he was trapped in a lonely place by his enemies, and he saw that he was "on the spot." He decided to try to talk for his life. "Gentlemen," he said, "I see that I have made a mistake." "Yes," answered the leader of the rival gang, "but you will not make that mistake again!" And the next morning the police were baffled by another underworld murder. His repentance came too late. He did not admit his mistake until it came time for him to pay for the consequences of his folly.

The courts of our land are crowded with people who have repented too late. They did not recognize and admit their mistakes soon enough. Sin and evil carried them too far before they awoke to the fact that they were going the pathway to destruction.

I live not far from a very wide highway. When it was narrow and rough and the traveling somewhat dangerous, there were few accidents reported. Drivers were careful and lived up to their responsibilities. The very difficulties on the road seemed to put them on their guard against the fatal mistakes. But now that it has been made wide and smooth so that many can travel rapidly and in comfort, the accidents have increased. Hardly a week goes by but there are several bad accidents, with costly damage to property, with serious injuries to bodies and sometimes with fatalities to life. These are all the result of mistakes.

In all these accidents the drivers have known, but all too late, that they were making mistakes. And their mistakes sometimes have cost the lives of innocent parties who helplessly go to injury or death on the strength of the mistakes of others. They repented too late when brakes could no longer save nor steel protect them.

God knew, when he gave men their liberty and free agency, that they would make mistakes, and that they would make many of them. Something even less than the mind of Omniscience could have predicted that. But experiment is necessary to the growth of character and conscience, and to the development of that intangible part of the personality called the soul. You can make a man safe by enslaving him; but you can not thereby make an admirable or free-acting agent of any quality out of him. God knew that. He knew how long it would take to develop men who could be free and righteous at the same time. He knew the cost, but he wanted them badly, and He was willing to pay the price. And so it is that men find themselves with an endowment that was denied to all of the animals: their freedom of choice.

It is an odd thing, and one hard to understand, that it is this very freedom of choice which we have been given, that can raise us to the spiritual heights of heaven, or plunge us to the carnal depths of hell. We have only to choose our ways of life. And our choices are not irrevocable. If we have chosen wrong, we have the right to choose again—and it is this second and better choice, dictated by experience, which is called repentance. L. L.

Save Your Heralds

Certain Numbers Contain Useful Material That Should Be Preserved

People who are engaged in local and branch work often have need of material that has been printed in the Herald within the past year or two. Lists of plays, programs, helps, and special articles are of this kind. When inquiries come to the office for material, it is very convenient to refer to past issues of our publication.

It is unfortunate when the time comes that such people need material, and we refer them to it, they reply, "I am sorry. My subscription ran out, and I didn't renew it in time," or, "I didn't save my Heralds."

Our supplies of the specially useful numbers of the Herald are often exhausted quickly. We can not keep on hand enough of them for demands that can not be anticipated.

This teaches us two things: to save the Herald, and to keep up the subscriptions.

If all local officers would follow these two rules, they would find it much easier to carry on their work. Some people object that it takes too much space to save all copies. They could at least save the special issues that contain the useful material for programs and church work. L. L.

Of a Malignant Tongue

The tongue, says the Apostle James, is a devouring fire, a world of iniquity, an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. And behold what I would have applied to the tongue of the evil-speaker, had I undertaken to give you a just and natural idea of all the enormity of this vice: I would have said that the tongue of the slanderer is a devouring fire which tarnishes whatever it touches; which exercises its fury on the good grain, equally as on the chaff; on the profane, as on the sacred; which, wherever it passes, leaves only desolation and ruin; digs even into the bowels of the earth, and fixes itself on things the most hidden; turns into vile ashes what only a moment before had appeared to us so precious and brilliant; acts with more violence and danger than ever in the time when it was apparently smothered up and almost extinct; which blackens what it can not consume, and sometimes sparkles and delights before it destroys.

I would have told you that evil-speaking is an assemblage of iniquity; a secret pride, which discovers to us the mote in our brother's eye, but hides the beam which is in our own; a mean envy, which, hurt at the talents of prosperity of others, makes them the subject of its censures, and studies to dim the splendor of whatever outshines itself; a disguised hatred, which sheds, in its speeches, the hidden venom of the heart; an unworthy duplicity, which praises to the face and tears to pieces behind the back; a shameful levity, which has no command over itself or its words, and often sacrifices both fortune and comfort to the imprudence of an amusing conversation; a deliberate barbarity, which goes to pierce your absent brother; a scandal, where you become a subject of shame and sin to those who listen to you; an injustice, where you ravish from your brother what is dearest to him. I should have said that slander is a restless evil, which disturbs society, spreads dissension through cities and countries, disunites the strictest friendships; is the source of hatred and revenge; fills, wherever it enters, with disturbances and confusion; and everywhere is an enemy to peace, comfort, and Christian good-breeding. Lastly, I should have added that it is an evil full of deadly poison; whatever flows from it is infected, and poisons whatever it approaches; that even its praises are empoisoned, its applauses malicious, its silence criminal; its gestures, motions, and looks have all their venom, and spread it each in their way.—From a sermon by the famous French preacher, Bishop Jean Baptiste Massillon (1663-1742).

Building Upon the Rock of Ages

A few years ago a mission worker who was a beautiful saint went to comfort a friend who had lost a wife. If this friend was a Christian at all, he was only nominally so. The minister spoke to him of the consolations of the gospel. But the bereaved man turned on him bitterly and said: "Have you ever lost your wife?" The preacher answered in the negative. "Well," said the other impatiently, "you don't know what you are talking about. Wait till you have a sorrow like mine and see if your Christ can meet the test."

The preacher went away with a sense of failure. But the testing time was closer to him, too, than he dreamed. Suddenly, without the slightest warning, the news came that his brilliant and gifted wife had been killed in a railroad accident. The remains were brought to the city and taken to the mission hall. This grief-stricken husband stood by the coffin of his wife to speak. He said: "Some six months ago, I tried to comfort a bereaved husband, but I failed. He said I did not know what I was talking about. Is he here?" And the man stood up. The preacher then continued: "My friend, I know today. I am in the midst of a sorrow like your sorrow, and I want to tell you that, while my heart is bleeding and broken, I find His grace sufficient. I find that his hand holds me and steadies me. I find that my skies are as bright as the promises of God, and that underneath are the Everlasting Arms."—Clovis G. Chappel, in The Sermon on the Mount; Cokesbury Press.

Somewhere I read the story of a high school commencement. The brightest boy in the class was chosen to make a speech, but he lisped so terribly that he begged off and the teachers agreed it was best, and yet they felt his fine scholarship and his popularity with his fellow students should be publicly recognized. At length he said, "I can play the flute. Let me do that." It was an innovation, but they agreed. He set about practicing, and on the day of the commencement he moved the audience deeply as he breathed his fine spirit and skill into the instrument. That did not stutter or lisp, but gave his message, the message of an undaunted spirit.

Each in his own way must invest his life for the Master.—Howard K. Williams, in Young People's Leader.

TITHING

By Bishop L. F. P. Curry

1. Why must we return so frequently to a discussion of the law of tithing?
2. Tell the differences between tithing and sacrifice offerings. What moral obligation is back of each?
3. The person who opposes efforts to teach tithing in the sacrifice periods sets himself in opposition to the law of the church. Such persons should yield their individual and private judgments to the will of the majority.
4. Recount briefly some of the history of the practice of tithing.
5. What is the tithe? How much is it? How is one to determine it?
6. Explain the author's words: "The margin between total income and living expenses." It is a test of character and devotion to govern living expenses so that they shall not completely consume the total income. It is in the determination to assure such a margin, from which support for the church may be taken, that we find the true indication of our conversion and our Christian character.

THE FOUNDATIONS OF OUR FAITH.—IX.

By Elbert A. Smith

1. What has been the effect of the crisis of the church on the faith of the people?
2. What definite gains can the church count to its credit since the beginning of the Reorganization? Why should these gains give us courage?
3. What vision started the events that culminated in the founding of the church? What vision is it that keeps the people of our day at work with and for the church?
4. What are the basic principles of belief that underlie that vision?
5. Should we become impatient that we have not made faster progress towards our goal?
6. Though we may not reach the goal ourselves, for whom should we work, that they may reach it?

Friendship is a very beautiful and sacred thing, so beautiful and sacred that when it does come into one's life it should be guarded as wisely and carefully as though it was a rare jewel. For, like all rare and costly things, it has many cheap imitations, and these often bring unlooked-for sorrow and disaster instead of the joy and gladness which had been expected. All too often a passing attraction is mistaken for a lasting comradeship; and unless friendship possesses this rare element, it is but a make-believe.—Home and School.

General Churchmen Attend Texas Conference

The presence of Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry, Apostle R. S. Budd, and Missionary G. H. Wixom was no small factor contributing to the success of the conference of Southwestern Texas District which convened with First Church, San Antonio, October 9. Each of these visitors proved very helpful on the conference program.

Elder J. J. Ledsworth an Active Missionary

For three years Elder J. J. Ledsworth has worked as missionary in Northern Michigan District, and in that period has baptized nearly three hundred people into the church. News often comes to the Herald of his visits to and work in the branches of that district, and he is loved and respected by hundreds of grateful people. His report to the conference of Northern Michigan District, at East Jordan, November 5 and 6, accounted for a full year of missionary labors. Here are some of the high points: Sermons preached, 265; services attended, 365; baptized 50; made 540 visits; effected four new openings. In addition to these he administered to the sick, counseled workers, blessed little children, attended classes at General Conference and reunion. The church owes much to such consecrated laborers as Brother Ledsworth.

Elder Thomas Leitch Is Dead

Elder Thomas Leitch, former pastor of Fargo Branch, and active in ministerial work throughout the State of North Dakota, passed away October 18. Born at Asphodel, Ontario, February 14, 1862, and baptized in 1894, Brother Leitch faithfully served the church many years. Burial was at Clifford, North Dakota.

Apostle Roy S. Budd Takes Part in Memorial Services at Lincoln

The branch at Lincoln, Nebraska, observed the Joseph Smith Centennial anniversary October 30, a week early, in order to have Apostle Roy S. Budd as speaker.

Among the events celebrating the day were the reading of "Joseph Smith" the centennial oration written by Inez Smith Davis, and the blessing of the youngest descendant of Joseph Smith, Dorothy Dillon Anderson, a great-granddaughter. Dorothy, who is the daughter of Brother and Sister Duane Anderson, was blessed by Apostle Budd and her grandfather, Elder B. M. Anderson.

Fellowship Meeting Important in Graceland Home-coming

Always the Sunday morning fellowship meeting of Graceland's Home-coming is an important part of the week-end program. This year's service, October 23, was no exception. At an early hour, students, alumni, and friends gathered in the chapel for the worship hour. It was impressive. R. A. Cheville led the meeting, and President F. M. McDowell's talk, "Enduring Investments," touched a responsive chord in the hearts of everyone. To many, according to the Graceland Tower, the spirit of this service made it the most important and most inspiring part of the Home-coming.

Visitors Cheer Genoa, Colorado, Saints

Genoa Branch has in recent weeks appreciated the encouragement given by visiting general and district church helpers. These include Apostle R. S. Budd, District President Glaude A. Smith, Elder J. D. Curtis, of the district presidency; Floyd Engstrom, church school superintendent; Sister O. E. Sade, widow of one-time missionary who labored in Colorado, and Ralph Vincent, bishop's agent.

Genoa Branch is divided into three groups, each of which conducts a separate Sunday school, Seibert, Flat Top, and Genoa. People of this region have experienced four years of severe drouth, and now have scarcely the necessities of life.

Elder Hubert Case Injured in Auto Accident

Elder Hubert Case was injured in an auto accident November 5, when the car in which he was traveling with five other persons, went into the ditch near Saginaw, Michigan. Brother Case suffered a severe scalp wound. After spending a week in the hospital, he is now at the home of Brother Louis Grice in Saginaw, where he is improving.

Preaches to Colored People

Priest J. P. Carson, colored, of Chanute, Kansas, at the request of Brentwood Missouri Branch, traveled from Chanute to preach to his race at Webster Groves, Missouri, a distance of more than four hundred miles.

Saints of Brentwood assisted in the services, enabling Brother Carson to bring the gospel to his people. During the ten nights of meetings, many were in attendance and listened attentively.

Brother Carson has returned to his place of employment, but promised to return for a longer series next summer. There are several to be baptized upon his return.

Tithing

By L. F. P. Curry

I.

The pilgrims of an earlier day refreshed their souls by journeying to the shrines of their faith, finding in the meditations of the period of travel thither, and in the worship of that for which the shrine stood a clarifying and strengthening of their purpose. So may we today turn to the fundamentals of our faith, and in study and contemplation find emerging a clearer view of the purposes inherent in the enterprise in which we have a part.

Since the fact is so obvious, it is not unkind to say that again and again we show ourselves to be "forgetful hearers" in need of reminding that the law of tithing calls for constant obedience. Possibly, too, the teacher's maxim of constant review is as necessary here as elsewhere. For this or any law to be fixed in mind bids fair to fix it also in life. Thus there are several sound reasons for renewing the discussion of what to many may be more than "a twice told tale."

But another reason exists for examining anew this fundamental of our faith. It lies in the needs of this present hour. In order to pay the debts under which the church now struggles, no plan is so concise, so well understood, or so completely a part of the law of God as tithing. Complete obedience to this law very probably would meet the exigencies of the situation we now face. This is said with an all too painful knowledge of the manner in which our people now suffer from partial employment or none at all. All of us may be surfeited with "drives" and "campaigns," but who may say that he is sick of calls to obey the law?

The principle of tithing must be an immensely vital thing to survive as it has through many centuries of man's experience with God. That vitality may lie as much as anything in the simplicity with which the principle of tithing solves the problem of method in financing the costs in the kingdom of God, of making possible a common sharing of the burden on an equitable basis, and of being a harmonious part of the mechanism for bringing about equality in material things.

A complete study of the subject must await another time, it being sufficient for the present purpose to raise some thoughts with respect to the tithe as a tenth and closely related aspects which may be of benefit as they apply to our current requirements.

II.

When the race was young tithing was paid, as is seen in the account of Abraham's contact with Melchisedec. (Genesis 14: 20; 37-39, Inspired Version.) Tithing was a part of the Mosaic law, to which the children of Israel were intermittently obedient in that period extending from the entry into Canaan to the day of Christ. Jesus himself commended the Pharisees for their obedience to this phase of the Mosaic law, and at the same time condemned them for their omission of the "weightier things, . . . judgment, mercy, and faith. . . ." (Matthew 23: 20, Inspired Version.) There is no record of tithe paying after the Christian era, for centuries, but during the second and third centuries the writings available show that suggestions were made to pay tithing in harmony with the Mosaic law. During the fifth century payment of tithing was made a matter of church law. By the eleventh century in England, "it finally became customary for all to pay their tithe offerings," and "the custom . . . gradually changed into a common right."¹ A most important canon on payment of tithes in England appeared A. D. 1295, in the reign of Edward I. It states that because of quarrels and different methods of paying tithing uniformity was needed. It was therefore ordained that tithes were to be paid on the gross value of all crops; artificers and merchants were to pay tithes of the profits of their business; and wage earners were to pay tithes of their wages. "This meant that after deducting all reasonable and necessary expenses, they were to pay the tenth part of the profits."² Apparently it was assumed that crops cost nothing to produce and were a pure increase of the land, but in connection with business and wages the deduction of "reasonable and necessary expenses" were emphasized in arriving at the tithable net.

During the Reformation period the principle of tithing does not emerge as a matter of controversy, and for us the next point of interest in the historical sequence is the Restoration. Among the churches of this modern period, our own took the lead in the teaching and practice of tithing, and although our contemporaries, wittingly or unwittingly have followed our lead, our approach to the problem remains unique.

III.

The tithe, literally the tenth, has been said by some to mean a tenth of the total income or worth. However, the church teaches that it is a tenth of the net worth after the deduction of indebtedness, or a tenth of the increase after the deduction of necessary living expenses. The term is also applied to the surplus, per Doctrine and Covenants 106.

1. A History of Tithing, H. W. Clarke, 1891, page xviii. (Son-nenschein.)

The tenth of the total income is easy to ascertain; no strain is placed upon human nature in the temptation to deduct as much as possible from the gross; there are no questions involved either of selfishness or generosity. It is possible that this interpretation would result in greater income to the church, but the objection would still remain that those with small incomes and large "necessary living expenses" would share an unjust portion of the burden as compared with those having large incomes and proportionately moderate "necessary living expenses." Moreover, it has been pretty clearly proved that this method does not conform to the scriptural standard, broadly considered.

The interpretation that the tithe is to be paid on the increase in net worth or net income conforms to biblical usage, as far as it may be clearly understood, and to the latter-day message. It is fair, being equitable in application and incidence. It is a developer and test of character, and respects the agency of man.

By definition, increase is said to mean "that which is added to the original stock by augmentation or growth; produce; profit; interest." And interest, synonymously, means "any excess of advantage over and above an exact equivalent for what is given or rendered." In the light of this definition, present-day interpretation accords with Abraham's practice, in that he gave to Melchisedec a tenth of the spoils (Genesis 14: 20, Inspired Version), these having arisen from victory over the raiders who carried away Lot. Moreover, Abraham paid to Melchisedec "tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need." (Ibid., verse 39.) This distinctly recognizes the payment of the tithe of that which remains after his needs were provided, the net increase. The Doctrine and Covenants (106: 1) carries this view forward, using the word, interest, as a synonym of increase; and at the same time pointing out a fundamental aspect of the tithe in the payment of the entire surplus property of the individual. It is not so easy to follow the references in the Old Testament to the crops of the land and their relation to tithing, but the practice in designating the tenth of the flock passing under the rod (Leviticus 27: 30-33; Deuteronomy 14: 22-25, Inspired Version), is manifest, for from this flock the living of the owner had been taken.

As to fairness of application and incidence, the interpretation of the tenth of the increase falls alike upon everyone subject to tithing. Whether the living expenses be large or small, when taken in consideration with the gross income, the person heavily burdened in this manner is not called upon to pay disproportionately. If his net increase is small the tithing due is correspondingly small. If the net increase is large the tithing due is also correspondingly large. In the first instance the maintenance does not become a hardship to the limited purse, and in the second, the share called for again works no suffering. Everyone with an increase of any amount is given the opportunity of sharing.

The test of character in this interpretation arises in the creation of the margin between total income and living expenses to be deducted in ascertaining the increase. If one follows his selfish, possibly natural, bent, income may easily be spent, leaving none for the payment of the tithe accrued. Living expenses may be made unnecessarily large, or funds remaining after their provision may be dissipated. God has given to us the power to choose, and leaves it to us, very largely, as to the manner in which we administer our personal resources and account to him. We can not escape the accounting, however, and each person should not seek to excuse himself by pointing to the manner of spending of others, but should see to it that he is frugal in his own outlay, seeking to create what margin he can for the purpose of increasing the tithe to be laid upon the altar of God. A young woman once protested to the writer that the church was unjust in its tithing law, for the reason that she personally sacrificed by foregoing expenditures for clothing, and other things dear to a girl's heart, whereas a friend spent her income freely for clothing. Both appeared to be equal in standing before the church. The answer was obvious: Both were being tested in the manner of their practices; both were choosing.

Since God is the owner of all things, and we the users, our tithe in a sense is a rental we bring to him. Unlike the landlords of the world, he turns back to mankind, through the administration of the activities of the church every cent thus rendered to him. The tithe in this aspect of reciprocation thus becomes a symbol of the intimate association between man and God, both as to the material needs and well being of man, and in the adventures of the soul in religious things.

In upholding this meaning of the tithe as a tenth of the increase after living expenses, the bishopric of the church has always leaned towards conservatism, choosing to favor, if anyone may be said to be favored, the contributor, rather than to exact from him the last possible cent. In doing this no rights have been infringed as far as the people are concerned, and the integrity of the church from a scriptural basis has been maintained. How zealous are we in obeying the principle thus placed before us?

The Work of the Church

The Work of Women's Groups in the Church

By C. B. Woodstock

In some localities there is still uncertainty as to the place and function of groups of women of the church who wish to meet during the week for study or worship and to engage in various types of productive effort. Previous to the General Conference of 1930 such women's groups operated under the leadership of a Women's Department, a fairly independent organization with local, district and general officers. Much most valuable work was done in lines of study, worship, social contact, local aid and the actual earning of money for local and general church expenses.

In the great majority of the branches of the church the change anticipated in 1930 has been welcomed and the women are finding opening before them an unusual opportunity to render a splendid service to the church. That there may be a clear understanding of the purpose and plan of the change the following statement has been prepared. This is wholly in accord with the conference action and with the plan of organization set out in The Church School Handbook.

"By common consent and with the best interests of the work of the church in mind, the former Women's Department was merged with the Sunday school and the Department of Recreation and Expression in a single department of Religious Education for the church by the General Conference of April, 1930. It was by no means intended, however, that the work of the women in organized groups should cease. Rather should this function of the women of the branches find new emphasis and enthusiastic direction under the woman's group supervisor, closely associated with the pastor and the director of the church school.

"In all branches of the church the woman's group supervisor will be chosen by nomination of the pastor and the church school director and approved either by the branch as a whole or by the women's group itself. In many places the adult supervisor, if a woman, will also serve as women's group leader.

"Whenever the work of the women's group involves the holding of classes these should be arranged with the approval and the fullest cooperation of the church school director, and carried on under his general supervision. Other phases of women's group work, socials, bazaars, sewing and aid, and the like are carried out in consultation with the pastor, the church school director and the financial agent, in harmony with the church program for the branch.

"In Zion, where there are 13 districts and 46 women's groups, nominations in each district are made by the pastors and church school directors in each case, and the work of all is under the direction of a women's supervisor in Zion appointed by the pastor in Zion."

It must be obvious from the above that definite provision is made for the work of the women of the church. The nature of their work is not changed, nor are they released of the responsibility formerly carried. This activity is more closely related, if possible, to the other activities of the branch and all are unified under the sympathetic encouragement of the pastor and other officers of the branch.

Local women's groups are now ready to respond in an organized way to accomplish whatever lines of endeavor in the total church program may seem most to need their effort. This may be to provide week-day study classes, to render aid to the local needy, to earn for local or general church projects, or to provide social occasions with financial returns as in socials, bazaars, suppers, etc.

In this time when finances are low care should be taken that available sources of income and saving to the church should be carefully safeguarded. It is no time for waste or needless expenditure. Often the good sisters of a branch may assist materially in earning for the local and general church needs in ways which will not reduce the regular income of the church.

At Eastertime in Jerusalem men gather at the holy sepulchre and through a crack in the marble a light is thrust, and at this light the waiting messengers light their tapers, and others light their tapers from these, and so on to the outer limits of the crowd, and then on out and out until, it is said, from that original taper the light goes even to Russia.

In like manner, little bodies of believing Christians lighting their lives at the torch of Jesus, have gathered through the ages, lighting their torches one by one, from age to age, until the present, and will 'til time shall be no more. Is your torch burning?—Howard K. Williams, in Young People's Leader.

The Foundations of Our Faith

IX.—The Vision of Zion

By Elbert A. Smith

(An address at the Sacramental Service, at the Stone Church, Sunday, September 4, 1932.)

The past two years have been difficult for the church and for individual members of the church. Some of our most fundamental and cherished enterprises have been greatly hindered if not brought to a stop. Other enterprises not so fundamental have come to ruin. Many of our members have suffered great loss, some of them experiencing privation and want. Some have been under the hand of affliction and sorrow. The two years mentioned have been years of tribulation. But what was said in the book of Revelation? "Who are these arrayed in white? These are they who have come up through great tribulation." It is easy to go down in tribulation; to come up through great tribulation is a different thing.

STRONG TO MEET THE CRISIS

The spiritual attitude of the Saints as a whole is better than it was before these days of trial. Many have had a new devotion born in them proportionate to the crisis. Their souls rise up heroically to meet the needs of the hour. But naturally some are despondent. In Independence we have felt the full brunt of the blows borne by the church. Sometimes we hear men say that a hundred years of church history have passed away and we are no nearer Zion than we were—that the whole thing is a failure. Such statements are not true. They spring out of a spirit of despondency and as a consequence are greatly exaggerated.

OUR GAINS

There are those present today who remember when there were only two or three families living in all Zion and the regions round about. Now we have six thousand four hundred and sixty-one Saints in Independence; over sixteen thousand two hundred in Zion and the stakes. The gathering is an accomplished fact at least physically. Many of us remember when some of the fundamental principles involved in building Zion were seldom if ever preached to the Saints. They were not studied or understood. I myself recall distinctly the time when Bishop Kelley and Bishop Hilliard first came into the pulpit of the old Brick Church in Lamoni preaching equality, stewardships, and the consecration of surplus. We had never heard those doctrines taught before. Our teaching had been practically limited (in the financial law) to tithing. So we have made a distinct gain in our teaching and comprehension of principles involved. We may have gained even in the blunders and failures that we have made in our experiments. They are like the falls that we encountered when we were first learning to walk, painful, but even a loving father could not save us from those experiences. We would not or could not learn in any other way.

Tennyson says: "'Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all." It is better to have tried and failed than never to have tried. Thank God that we have tried and thank God we still have the vision and the will to try again.

OUR VISION

Back of every forward-going, religious movement and experience there must be a vision. "Where there is no vision, the people perish." There must be a vision of something higher and beyond anything yet experienced and that vision must be as compelling to the whole people of the church as was to him the vision which Paul saw. No matter what straits or difficulties or dangers he found himself in, no matter what antagonists were arrayed against him, he always replied, "I have seen a vision. I know I have seen a vision." And this vision made Paul an entirely changed man and the greatest missionary of all time. It was so with Joseph Smith, whose vision changed him from an obscure and unlettered New York farm boy into one of the most remarkable religious leaders that modern history has known and quite unlike any religious leader in modern history prior to his day. It was not alone the vision that these men saw for a moment or an hour of time but the persistent vision that remained with them.

The vision that this people has seen, more moving than any other vision, is of the City of Zion. We visualize a gathered people, living together in righteousness and in peace, a community from which ignorance and poverty are banished, where there shall be love and equality. We see the development of industries that will support such a community, carried forward in a way not now known in the world. We see in the community a school of

"Repent Ye"

By Leonard Lea

"Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye and believe the gospel."—Mark 1: 14, 15.

Repentance is simply the capacity and willingness to admit that you have made mistakes. The world is full of people who are too proud or too stubborn to admit that they have made a mistake. And many of them add deception to their pride and stubbornness in order to conceal their errors. It takes no intelligence to be stubborn. Anybody can insist that he is right when he knows he is wrong.

All of us—and nearly everyone can be thoroughly honest with his inmost thoughts—can see that we have made mistakes: not only one or two, but hundreds and thousands of them. Our blunders and errors are legion. And not all of them have been of trifling importance either. Some of them in the lives of all of us have been big and serious and harmful mistakes; mistakes that spoiled our chances of success and usefulness, mistakes that have marred the happiness and welfare of others, cruel and mischievous mistakes, whether we intended them to be so or not. "To err is human," says the proverb; the making of mistakes is a universal fault. There is nothing mysterious or difficult to understand about repentance; it is the full recognition of these mistakes.

Repentance is graduated to all scales of intelligence. The baby burns his hand on the stove, and repents for having put it there; his repentance is purely on the physical order. The young man tries a life of dissipation and sees the evil, the contaminating harm of it; and he repents for having wasted and misused so much of his life; and his repentance is of the moral order. A man of middle age whose moral standards have been high, but who has all his days believed in a materialistic philosophy of life, sees in the latest statements of scientists an indication that his materialistic philosophy is wrong, and that there are such things as spiritual values in the universe; he repents of his mistake; and his repentance is of a spiritual order.

Repentance can only proceed from a consciousness of sin. That consciousness of sin must be based on the perception and acceptance of a moral code and a set of spiritual standards.

Some people deny the existence of sin. They should as well deny the existence of mistakes. The denial does not destroy the thing denied. Sections of the social world in the experience recorded by history have defined sin differently, it is true for different societies, but it has fairly well established the idea of sin. A concept that has been worked into the thought and vocabulary of millions of people is not to be lightly dismissed by the supercilious skeptic. To deny the thing is not to change the fact. You do not alter any category or classification of life or its phenomena by taking away the name of it. The thing itself remains. There is such a thing as sin, and it blights the minds and souls of men, and its grosser manifestations destroy their bodies. The world is full of suffering and misery which is not checked by the laws of our governments, and much of it can never be checked by law. And yet it is wrong, horribly wrong, and there must be some agencies in the world to work against it. There is such a thing as sin!

Sin calls for repentance just as truth and justice call for the correction of errors. Sin is destructive, and repentance is re-creative. Every destroying force at work in the world and society must be matched or overcome by an equally strong force that operates for good, or society eventually will perish of the canker that is eating at it.

We have found in the last dozen years, if we did not know it before, that goodness can not be enacted among the people by legislation. The law finds it very difficult to change our habits; it can hardly touch our hearts. Only religion—and a religion like that of Jesus—can do that. Some of the most important things of our life have nothing to do with statutes or papers, receipts, accounts, and bills, and all the other things with which our business life is cluttered—though these things are highly important in themselves. Righteousness, loyalty, faith, honesty—these are the intangibles without which all of the tangible values in the world are as nothing. And indeed the tangible values of property are insecure unless they have the intangible values to preserve them. Repentance has its place, not only in the building of the kingdom of God, but as well in the business of governing the work-a-day world.

No repentance is complete until it carries with it restitution of wrongs committed. It is not enough to feel sorry, although, as the Scriptures say, "Godly sorrow worketh repentance." Note that the text does not say, "Godly sorrow is repentance." It "worketh repentance." It causes you to restore.

A story is told of a native lad who had become attached to a mission. He was caught stealing. He said he was very sorry, but he stole again. Finally it occurred to one of the ministers to ask the lad what he was sorry for. It turned out that he was sorry for being caught! He had not even begun to understand repentance.

Repentance is a recognition that justice has been violated. It is not complete until justice has been restored, so far as possible. Something must be done to make up for things that have gone wrong. Some sacrifices need to be made to prove the sincerity and genuineness of the repentance.

Sin is like a two-edged sword that cuts both ways. It may do physical harm to the one sinned against. But it does harm to the mind and moral fibre of the sinner. Indeed, the sinner always suffers more by the sin than anyone else. The truly tragic thing about sin is that it makes a man into that terrible thing that is a sinner. Repentance, on the contrary, is reciprocally beneficial. It restores something (though not always everything, for there are some things that can never be restored) to the victim of the sin. But likewise it restores something of vaster importance to the reforming sinner. It restores his mental cleanness and his right relation with the world of men and the kingdom of God. It restores his self-respect. It replaces him on an open and equal footing with all other men.

Sin is disease; repentance is health. Sin is a lie; repentance is truth. Sin is dirty; repentance is clean. Sin is malignant wrong; repentance is healing right.

People often ask about death-bed repentance. What is the last possible minute, they want to know, that they can continue in sin and expect to be saved? How far can they go and still escape destruction? There is something calculating and commercial about these questions. Ananias and Sapphira were of that spirit. And they suffered spiritual and later physical death for it. A like fate awaits those who continue to love the wrong things and the wrong kind of life. They will not be given capital punishment, of course. But the harm works within.

Terrible is the situation of one who lives a mistake and doesn't know it. But far more terrible is the situation of one who is living a mistake and knows it, but continues because he prefers the way of life.

Joy and peace and satisfaction await the person who repents of his sins and reconciles himself to God. It is true that God demands that repentance of him before he can be saved, in any sense of the word. But it is also true that his own nature demands it of him before he can be purified and purged of the things that have poisoned and thwarted and misdirected his life. When he has so repented and cleansed himself he can expect that personal mental health which will result in cleanness of soul.

It is never too early for one to begin that self-examination which leads to repentance and improvement. For repentance can begin to operate for your benefit at any time. It is never entirely too late for repentance, for there is always something good to be salvaged from a life, no matter how bad a wreck it may be. It is better early than late, however, for there is more to save, and more time for that restitution which is necessary to the balancing of the scales of justice.

You may be far from God, but there is a road that leads to Him no matter where you are; and you can find that road if you sincerely look for it. It may be a long road to travel, but it will be a road of happiness and peace, for you will know that at last the days of wandering in the wilderness are over and that you are on your way home, like a prodigal son who has come to himself and understood. The scales of false values are stripped from your eyes by the miracle of spiritual regeneration, and you can see your own life in the clear light of truth.

You have tasted life, and you have found its worldly pleasures vain, its wealth perishable, and its fame fleeting. Pleasure has not brought you happiness, fame has not brought you satisfaction, money has not brought you security, and the things for which you have sold your life you find to be not so fine as you had imagined them.

But there is peace and happiness, security and satisfaction in store for you if you reconcile yourself to God. The invitation is always open to you, for Jesus said, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me." Thus the Savior promises to you and to all others who will hear his voice that spiritual feast which brings the peace and joy that you can never have known in any other way. God's love reaches out to you wherever you are. John wrote, "God is love," and those who have devoted themselves to the good way of life tell us that love is His greatest characteristic. We can find that love if, having faith, we go forward through repentance through the development which will bring us complete regeneration.

The Sunday newspaper costs you five dollars a year. The Saints' Herald costs two dollars a year. If you must choose between them, which will it be?

The account of the passing of Sister Short appeared in last week's news. We present here the paper that was read at the funeral services. Her many works, and the societies she founded and helped maintain for benevolent and cultural purposes, remain as a monument to the nobility, thoughtfulness and kindness of her life. Arrangements have been made that the remains of her husband, M. T. Short, to whose memory she maintained so beautiful a devotion to the end, will rest beside hers in Mound Grove Cemetery, a symbol of their inseparable companionship.—Editors.

The obituary of Viola Vernon Short epitomizes both the pioneer's life of the middle west and the sacrificial history of an early Latter Day Saint missionary family. Her parents, James Vernon and Eliza Duncan Vernon were among the sturdy, God-fearing, American pioneers who came West from Virginia to help found the great State of Illinois and there they were converted from their Scotch Presbyterianism to the faith that became the dominating factor in their lives. At the little village of Millersburg, Illinois, they put up their home and there on April 28, 1854, Viola Vernon was born. She had one brother, Thomas Vernon, and one sister, Sallie Vernon Riddell, both of whom lived a full allotment of years and passed on ahead of her. The son of Sallie Vernon Riddell Thomas is present today.

The open house of James and Eliza Vernon sheltered many a traveler and its hospitality was especially warm to the missionary. It was a happy destiny that brought Morris T. Short, first a soldier in the service of his nation, and then a soldier in the cause of his church, to this friendly home. It was love at first sight for the stalwart young missionary and the lovely young daughter Viola Vernon, and the romance begun then, and the marriage that followed, were a perfect flowering of love at its highest and best.

Busy, happy, sacrificial years unfolded rapidly, the father traveling far and wide to proclaim his Christian message but with thoughts ever in tune with his loved ones at home. The letters of this Godly man and his devoted wife are a heritage in themselves.

In 1899 the family, now grown to include a son June A. Short, and two daughters, Cordie and Ruby, moved to Independence. Here on land platted years before by an Uncle Jacob Vernon and amidst the lovely maples planted by this uncle's hand, the Short home was built. It was a happy home and even the early death of Morris T. Short which came in 1902 did not for long disrupt it. The Mother became both parents in one and carried on as a true soldier's wife.

Viola Vernon Short

A
Biography

It were a long story to recite the many and varied achievements of Viola Vernon Short, but the community knows them all for good. It was in the Laurel Club that she wrought her best and from its founding to the day of her injury she was a moving spirit in this loyal organization. She loved the Laurel sisters as her own and their many kindnesses to her were treasured up to the last. Verily she died in the service itself for she was in uniform on her way home from a Laurel function when she fell and sustained the injury from which seven weeks later on Tuesday, November 1, she died.

"Mother Short," as she was known to all her family, loved the sons and daughters who married into her family circle as her very own and her eight grandchildren who all survive her were a crown of blessing to her years. She gave unstintingly of her love and care to them all and they today sustain the loss of one who was ever a sweet presence among them.

Her eldest daughter, Mrs. W. E. LaRue, from Washington, District of Columbia, together with her son June and her daughter, Mrs. Arthur E. McKim, were with her constantly and her passing was the sweet sleep that comes with full and well spent years.

A beautiful tribute comes to hand from one who knew her well, a woman near her in years and in sympathetic understanding: "Today the mortal remains of a dear friend will be laid to rest, and as one who learned to know her well, I can but express a few of my thoughts and feelings in appreciation of her beautiful character. In our association together I sometimes caught a glimpse of her innermost spirit. Hers was an unusually pure and upright soul. She loved life, and the natural beauties of earth, the grandeur of the mountains, as well as the simple blossom growing by the wayside. She had the natural gifts of an artist, and also of a poet, which were ever a predominant influence in her life's work. Her's was a simple faith and trust in God, and the future life—the home above, and the more abundant life."

QUESTION TIME

Please state the year, day, and hour of Christ's crucifixion.

The exact year is not entirely certain. John (19: 31) shows that the next day after the crucifixion was not only a sabbath but was "an high day." This means that the Passover and sabbath came on the same day. The only times when such a combination was possible in that period were A. D. 29, 30, and 33, as the Passover always began after sundown on the 15th of Nisan, being prepared on the 14th. Early Christian tradition appears to favor 29 A. D., which would place the crucifixion at March 18th. The year 33 evidently would be too late, but some still hold to April 7, A. D. 30, the date on which the 14th of Nisan came in that year.

From the foregoing facts it would appear that Jesus was crucified on the day before the Jewish sabbath, but at what hour of the day has been the subject of discussion. The statement of Mark is: "And it was the third hour, and they crucified him." (15: 25.) But John (19: 14) states that Christ was still before Pilate at "about the sixth hour," which must allow some time to elapse before he was finally crucified. This apparent difference seems best explained by assuming that Mark used Jewish time, which would be about 9 a. m., while John used Roman time, on which basis the sixth hour was about 6 a. m. If this be conceded, the crucifixion occurred about three hours after Christ was before Pilate, and no discrepancy would exist by this reckoning.

John 1: 35-39 appears to support the assumption that this disciple used Roman time, for it states that two disciples followed Jesus at about the tenth hour, and abode with him that day. If this be correct, it was about 10 a. m. when they came to the home of Jesus, which agrees with the other circumstances there narrated.

Were the Hittites a nation, or were they only a tribe of people?

Doctor Isaac Taylor states that they were "the most powerful nation of northwestern Asia" prior to the rise of Assyria. They were already a powerful nation in the time of Abraham, and the Egyptians were unable to conquer them, and at one time were in fear of them. Opinions differ as to whether or not they were of Semitic origin, but Young calls them descendants of Heth, of the lineage of Ham.

The Hittites are referred to in fifteen books of the Bible, and some of them associated with Jewish people, as did Ahimelech, Ephron, Judith, Uriah and others of scriptural mention. Egyptian and Assyrian inscriptions mention more than 300 Hittite places, and one of the Hyksos dynasties is said to have been Hittite. At one time the Trojans were under the command of the Hittite king in his war against Ramesis II, as were also ten or more other peoples. Before the great battle Egyptian history referred to him as "the miserable king of the Hittites," but after it they called him "the great king of the Hittites," indicating his military prowess, and perhaps his success.

That the Hittites were a long-established nation is indicated by the fact that a great number of inscriptions found scattered over a wide area are ascribed to them. They originated the double eagle figure and also the mural crown, and the earliest money transaction in history was between them and Abraham. The Egyptian records show that the Hittites were far in advance of the other nations in both the arts of war and peace. They are first mentioned in the inscriptions of Sargon I, dated by Mr. Pinches of the British Museum at about 3800 B. C.

What does the term "bottomless pit" mean in Revelation 9: 1, 2 and elsewhere?

This term is derived from the Greek word abusos, meaning "very deep," and from phrear, meaning "pit" or "dungeon." The Emphatic Diaglott, and the Moffatt, Syriac, and Revised versions render it "pit of the abyss," which better accords with the meaning of the Greek term. The Septuagint uses it to apply either to the ocean or sea (Genesis 1: 2; 7: 11), or to the underworld (Psalm 107: 26). In Romans 10: 7 the same Greek word is used of Christ's descent into the realms of the dead, and this seems to be the meaning in the Revelation text.

Explain "amercé" as used in Deuteronomy 22: 19.

The Hebrew word is anash, meaning to fine. It meant a pecuniary penalty for an offense committed. In law it was a fine imposed in the judgment of the ruler, and not statutory. But the scriptural text does not indicate this distinction.

Vitamin C

By Mae Clark Warren

Head of the Home Economics Department, Graceland College

This article discussing vitamin C concludes the series on vitamins. You recall that the vitamins A, D, and E, were grouped under the fat soluble vitamins, while F and G (B_1 and B_2) and C were grouped under the water soluble vitamins. Vitamins F and G (B_1 and B_2) were discussed last month. The discussion this month is the explanation of the deficiency disease caused by a lack of vitamin C in the diet, and the common foods one should include daily to insure an adequate supply.

Vitamin C is called the antiscorbutic vitamin. The word antiscorbutic comes from the word scurvy, the disease which is now attributed to the lack of vitamin C.

Scurvy is an old, old disease. Many accounts of it are noted in history, especially among soldiers, sailors, and explorers who subsisted for long periods of time without fresh foods.

In 1747 Doctor Lind, a surgeon in the British Navy, experimented with twelve scurvy patients on board a British ship, the Salisbury. (1) Doctor Lind thought the disease was caused by the sailors not eating enough of certain kinds of food. He tried the curative effect of a number of foods and herbs. The men were divided into groups. They had one common diet and in addition some were given vinegar, some cider, one group sea water, while still others were given oranges or lemons. The extract of several seeds and gums was given to one group. The result of this nutrition experiment was that in six days, the men receiving the oranges and lemons had improved the most. This experiment was followed by others and as a result lemon (lime) juice was added to the regular ration of the British Navy. Scurvy practically disappeared even though the diet was the same except for the daily addition of the lemon juice. (This explains why British sailors are sometimes referred to as "limies.")

You recall that in the experimental laboratory work of vitamin A, B, D, and E, white rats were used. Guinea pigs are used for most experimental work with vitamin C, because rats are not susceptible to scurvy. If the diet is devoid of vitamin C, a person will develop scurvy in about four months. Guinea pigs will develop the disease in about two weeks. Guinea pigs which show definite signs of developing scurvy, lose weight, their joints become very tender and swollen, and they lie flat on their stomach, a position assumed to relieve the pressure on their joints. Such an abnormal posture is referred to as scurvy posture. Changes in the bones may occur; the ends of the ribs usually become swollen and upon autopsy the joints usually show signs of hemorrhage. (2) Animals suffering from scurvy are weak and listless. Diarrhea occurs in nearly all cases.

Although severe cases of scurvy do not often occur in this country, many cases of latent scurvy are known. The symptoms are characterized by dullness, congestion of the alimentary canal, soreness and stiffness of the joints with a tendency for the joints to hemorrhage. There is also a soreness of the gums leading to looseness of the teeth. This does not mean, of course, that all rheumatic pains are caused by a lack of the vitamin C. There are many infections and diseases which may cause rheumatism. Latent scurvy, however, is one form of rheumatism.

What foods does one need to include in the diet in order to insure an adequate amount of vitamin C? Among the richest sources are oranges, lemons, limes, tomatoes, and raw cabbage. Apples, bananas, carrots, and potatoes do not contain such a high concentration of the vitamin, but are important because of the quantities eaten. Potatoes become a very important source of the vitamin because of the large extent to which they enter into the daily dietaries of many people.

Vitamin C is so readily oxidized (this occurs when heat is applied in the presence of air) and destroyed, so that a partial deficiency of this vitamin often occurs unless a special effort is made to eat raw fruits and vegetables. Thus citric fruits, lettuce, cabbage, apples, and carrots are much better sources of Vitamin C if they can be eaten raw.

Acids present in the food help to prevent the destruction of the vitamin, while a base (soda) will hasten the destruction of the vitamin. This explains why cooked tomatoes may still be very high in vitamin C. One should not, however, overcook tomatoes because the longer the heat is applied, the more of Vitamin C is destroyed. Tomatoes canned by the cold pack method are, of course, much higher in the Vitamin than those canned with the open kettle method. Canned tomato juice is especially valuable as a substitute for orange juice when the price of oranges prohibits their use. In these times of economic stress, tomatoes are cheap, why not

God Speaks to Us on Every Hand

(A Selection)

"God is speaking to us through natural objects; in the order which we find in the universe; in the beauty which is common to flower and to star; in the ceaseless succession of living creatures; in the marvel of our own bodies; in the uses which nature serves in our lives.

"God is speaking to us in our own souls; in those intuitions of the good, the true, and the beautiful that arise within us, we know not how, and furnish us with the standards by which we judge the choices and the conditions of life as better or worse, beautiful or ugly, useful or harmful.

"God is speaking to us in human history, in the persistent social ideals through which our understanding of his character gains definiteness and his purpose is made explicit; in the succession of great personalities who have been most vividly aware of his presence; through the books that record their insights and perpetuate their memory; and through the institutions that carry on the work which they have begun.

"God is speaking to us in the suffering that harrows the soil of the soul, the suffering that disciplines our own lives, the suffering in other lives that stirs our sympathy.

"God is speaking to us, above all, through human need; the need that we feel in ourselves of inspiration, of guidance, and of renewal; the need of others who turn to us for help that we are often impotent to give. It is his voice that comes to us across the ages in that familiar word of Jesus, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"—William Adams Brown, in Pathways to Certainty.

An Experience in Baptism

By Mrs. Roderick May

Being a constant reader of the Herald and Ensign, and receiving so much encouragement and inspiration from their pages, the thought came to me to add my mite that possibly some one may be strengthened and encouraged by a word of testimony as a witness for Christ, and the restored gospel in these last days by prophets long foretold. As I have been requested by some to write an account of the baptism of myself and Sister Bushnell, who still lives here in Independence, and can witness as to the truthfulness of this statement, as can also Brother A. Dempsey, of this city. I will state briefly my wonderful experiences.

It was in midwinter of the year 1875 in London, Canada, that we were baptized. I had heard Brother J. J. Cornish preach a number of sermons, and was convinced that I had heard the true gospel of the kingdom of God, and asked for baptism on Wednesday night after prayer meeting. It had been a day of sunshine. The ice had melted, but a thin coat of ice had frozen in the evening making it slippery, and we had about a half mile to walk to the river. There were about twenty Saints and ten nonmembers present. One of this number was William Clow, who at this time was a devout Methodist, a Sunday school teacher. When some one would slip and fall, he would laugh and make fun of it and treated the matter lightly. It was a very dark night, and appeared dangerous to some going out into the river where the ice had thawed and pieces were floating down stream; but the Lord, whom we were serving, was gracious, and as soon as we stepped into the water a beautiful pillar of light descended from the clouds and hovered over us illuminating the river, and encircled us, extending over to where the people were standing on the shore. As soon as I was raised from the water I cried out, "Do you see the glorious light?" Brother Cornish, with tears streaming down his face said, "Oh yes, sister, it is the glory of God." Surely we were baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost. This light remained until we reached the shore, where we found the Saints, and others on their knees, thanking the Lord for such a wonderful manifestation of his loving favor, and the nonmembers looked on with wonder and amazement asking the Lord's mercy. William Clow, who had before been laughing, heard a voice distinct and clear, admonishing him, "You must not laugh at this people; these are my people." During the confirmation that night the voice of prophecy was heard and a promise from the Lord that certain blessings would come to me, the gift of dreams, visions and prophecy. This has all been fulfilled. All of the nonmembers, who were present to behold this wonderful experience after much studying and searching the scriptures, received light and were led to obey the will of God and received a knowledge of its truthfulness.

I now desire to tell the Saints and friends in England and elsewhere, that I am still firm in the faith of the restored gospel, never more to be tossed about by every wind of doctrine. Since our long stay of nearly ten years with the Saints in England, I recall many pleasant memories of their hospitality and kind treatment when we were trying to plant the gospel seed in the hearts of the people. We have often felt the impression that God had a people yet to be gathered out in future time. I also recall the trials and tribulation and horror of the war and its devastating effect. Painful and distressing were the scenes we witnessed. It was then we felt how blest the tie that binds the hearts of God's children in the love of the truth, and we also realized the protecting power of God encircled round about us delivering us from the destroyer. As it was, not a Saint I know of was injured in London, and many people would gather in the little hall at Enfield and feel more safe under its shelter, having heard Brother Judd preach the gospel inviting the people to search the scriptures and warning them to prepare for the hour of God's judgment. How glad we are now that our well beloved Brother Rushton has returned to the land of his nativity to assist in building up the church and kingdom and to establish its righteousness. Our prayers are that he may be a power in the hands of God for good and that his efforts may be effectual in reviving the Saints, that the seal of God's approval may rest upon his labors, so that when the set time to favor Zion has come the Saints may be ready to come with songs of joy to the city of refuge, when they must needs flee to Zion for safety. May the light and power of the gospel shine out upon the Saints and people of the British Isles once more as in the early days, is our prayer.

As in former days, when the voice of John the Baptist was heard crying in the wilderness, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, so today after wandering in the wilderness of sin the call is again heard as on the day of Pentecost, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost, for the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." God is calling the people back to the old, old paths, for "this gospel of the kingdom" was to be preached for a witness unto all nations and "then shall the end come." The gospel reveals but one way of salvation, one Lord, one faith, and one baptism. Happy are the ones who have entered into the kingdom in God's appointed way.

The Lord has said, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." The Apostle John says: "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

Dear Saints, how thankful we should be that we have heard the voice of the good shepherd, and choose to follow where he leads, having heard of the voice of revelation calling us out of Babylon that we partake not of her sins and receive not of her plagues.

We have proved God's promise to be true that we should know the truth and the truth would make us free, and give us the sure testimony that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, which knowledge the world can neither give nor take away.

What a firm foundation we stand upon! No other foundation can any man lay save that of Christ Jesus, if so they perish when the winds and the storm beat upon them. Truly, there are many who cry, "Lord! Lord!" but obey not his commandments. They shut their eyes and close their ears against the truth. Surely the warning voice has gone forth in this day of preparation. Zion must arise and shine, and her children must obey the celestial law that they might be able to abide the celestial glory.

May the glory of God rest upon Zion which can not fail, nor be moved out of her place, for God has promised by the power of his might to be her salvation. Therefore let us be united, and of one heart and mind, and Zion shall rejoice. So when the cry comes, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him, may the bride, the church of the living God, have on the robes of righteousness that they may enter into the marriage supper of the lamb, and with the Saints of all ages, crown him Lord of all. May this be the happy lot of all his Saints and the children of God from every land and clime is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

Healed Through Prayer

By Florence Rock

Words can not adequately describe my gratitude and thanks to God for his mercies. As I lie here in the hospital, I feel that I must write of my experiences, being confident of cheering other Saints. Does God answer prayer? and again, Is there power in administration? I must bear my testimony.

Just twelve months ago I was taken ill and this illness resulted in an attack of tuberculosis of the lungs. I was sent away for three months' treatment in a sanatorium. When I returned home I was still ill. My lung had not healed, and I had to sleep outdoors in a chalet. The time came for my examination by the doctor, and feeling ill, I once again petitioned my heavenly Father to heal me. I called for administration and had no fear afterwards, for I knew that God had heard the prayers offered by me and in my behalf.

When I went to the specialist, he said that my chest was healed but that something was wrong with my back which he thought might be tubercular. I was X-rayed, and the plate showed the defect in the spine but not tuberculosis. The doctor said it was arthritis and that there was no cure, but I was sent to this institution to obtain relief. I had prayed for guidance and wished I could once again be administered to when to my surprise Brother and Sister F. H. Edwards came into the ward. What a relief and comfort once more to be encouraged by one of God's chosen servants! Brother Edwards administered to me and that night I slept as I had not done for some time.

Even this does not end my testimony. On Friday last week I misplaced a bone in my back while trying to reach for something. I was in agony and the nurses saw it. Finally on Sunday morning they decided to call the doctor. About 11.30 a. m. I was impressed to sit up, a thing I had not been able to do and suddenly my back cracked and the bone went back. My pain left and has not returned. That afternoon Elder A. Kendrick visited me, and I told him of my experience and when it had happened. I learned then that the Saints in Birmingham were holding a prayer and testimony meeting and praying for me at that hour. Once more it proved the power there is in prayer.

On Monday the doctor examined me. He thought it best I have my spine X-rayed. This was done and it was found that every defect has gone. God has blessed me in many ways. Though my faith has been tested to the utmost, it is strengthened. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may continue faithful and prayerful. Also, pray for Sister Foster who met with an accident three weeks ago and is in this hospital in another ward. What should we do without the gospel? Even in a place like this, the opportunity comes to let our light shine. Let us be not discouraged for our heavenly Father is mindful of us.

BEARWOOD, BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND.

Sister Ruth Hayes, who is now in the Lake Julia Sanatorium, Puposky, Minnesota, suffering with tuberculosis, writes of a series of illnesses from which she has been relieved through administration. Always the prayers of the Saints have helped her. Among those who have been effective instruments of divine administration are Elders Lester Whiting and George Day. Sister Hayes reports progress in health in the last few weeks.

Sister Aldora Shell, Brewton, Alabama, Route 3, writes that she has had many wonderful experiences in the gospel. She recalls them even from early childhood, healings, blessings, testimonies. Sister Shell is the mother of six children, five daughters and a son, ranging in age from one to thirteen years, who enjoy the privileges of church and Sunday school. She enjoys the letters of the Saints and rejoices in the knowledge that the good spirit is working in all the world where the gospel is being proclaimed. She wishes always to be loyal and faithful in the Master's cause.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Lucile Veal who lies very ill in the Greeley, Colorado, Hospital, asks the prayers of the Saints that she may continue faithful to the end. She bears a strong testimony of God's wonderful love, and expresses sorrow that she has many times failed to take advantage of opportunities to serve the Lord. Her condition is serious, but she trusts in a loving heavenly Father.

Sacrifice and Debt Paying

By M. F. Gowell

I sometimes think that we as a people don't know much about sacrifice, and not too much about debt paying. The habit of debt paying is not near as widespread or deeprooted as the habit of debt contracting, or credit would not have failed as it has. The overstraining and the abuse of credit has brought nations and individuals up against a stone wall. (Wall Street?) So we have the depression. Business has been run on the credit system. The credit system having failed (temporarily perhaps), everything is halted. The social order is weak at the bottom in its individual units, as all are debtors or spenders—that is, self-gratifying spenders. In consideration of the extreme poverty of many millions in all nations, both spiritually and temporally, and of our debt of love to them—the great amount we owe them and the little we are paying—we have nothing to boast of as debt payers. The structure of society is weak at the top as might be expected, in that its governing authorities have not spared to run up debts and unbalance the budget both in times of war and peace. For political purposes our own Congress runs counter to the warnings and recommendations of the highest authorities in financial matters, and invites disaster, while scorning safety. If the individual does not take warning from the existing conditions and put the brakes on himself in regard to debt contracting, observing the Divine injunction to “be frugal,” who or what will save us? God himself will not save us. We must “save ourselves from this untoward generation.” The generation will not save itself. All about us the social structure is crumbling. It must soon fall.

TAKE UP THE CROSS

It is evident that we as a people must put forth a mighty and sustained effort to save ourselves, first from the incubus of financial debt that we have contracted in order that we may be able to pay the larger debt of love that we owe to “every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.” Nothing but real sacrifice will enable us to pay this debt. As the payment of the present church debt is conditioned on sacrifice, the guarantee of the payment of the still larger debt of love must be sacrifice. I have not until recently been able to sense the full significance of a dream of many years ago which instructed me that I must make great sacrifices till the temple is built. I think I at least begin to understand. As I see it now, the sacrificing period is on to continue till the temple is built, (at least it is for me), and presumably till the Lord comes to accept it at our hands. A brief period of sacrifice, then a relapse to former indulgences, will not fill the measure of sacrifice demanded of us as a people and as individuals. Our hearts must be put into this work of God for man, as well as our heads. If our hearts are in it in reality, our bodies will respond as living sacrifices, and no unnecessary indulgences will be granted their luxury or fashion-craving demands. To rid ourselves of debt, individual and collective, which must include in its larger outlook our debt of love to the world, it must needs be so. I must not only take up my cross periodically, I must take it up daily to fill the measure of sacrifice required. The foundation of our structure in individual righteousness must needs be sound and free from selfishness or self love. The value of one right principle established in the mind and heart of man can not be measured in terms of gold, or houses, or lands. They are as nothing compared with it. So it was not much after all that Jesus asked of the rich young man when he required him to sell what he had and give to the poor, then come and follow Him. He was but asked to release himself from the bondage of serving things, that he might serve in a larger and better way in association with the Lord. But he went his way exceeding sorrowful when he might have gone on in the Lord's way rejoicing.

THE RICH AND THE POOR

I have no feeling against the rich if there are rich in the church, rather a feeling for them in suggesting sacrifice. I have no brief for the poor if there are poor in the church. All may be rich as God views riches if the spirit of sacrifice is possessed. All are poor who do not possess it and allow it to rule in their lives. They are not in as close relationship to God as they might be, however much they may try to deceive themselves. This is not saying that the worthy poor should not be honored. They should be, and even sought out as the Lord has commanded, for they are not forward in making their needs known. If employment can be furnished or procured for them whereby they may retain their self respect, it should be. Other help may be judged by individuals or the church as occasion requires. But neither poor nor rich can be exempt from penalty for unwise outlays or expenditures.

THE AMOUNT OF TITHING AND SACRIFICE

The conditions and necessities of the church at the present time seem to be comparable with reference to finance to those of the church when Section 106 (Doctrine and Covenants) was given. Under those conditions the question was asked of the Lord, “Show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing?” Evidently his servants in 1838 were somewhat familiar with the principle of tithing (literally tenting), but were not satisfied that one tenth would or could fill the measure of sacrifice required for the building up of Zion and the preaching of the gospel in all the world, together with the conditions of debt as incurred by the presidency. The building up of Zion was before the Lord and the people. It was imminent. It is today. The church can not function as a church scattered all over the world as it could in a gathered condition. It must be organized temporarily, and according to God's laws or it will be cut off. (Doctrine and Covenants 51:1.) The appointment of stewardships is a basic law in building up Zion. This can not be done except by the consecration of properties. This law can not be made operative and effective except as a whole. The one tenth we owe the Lord without Zion is not sufficient for the building up of Zion. It is but the law of Moses. It makes nothing perfect in society. The larger debt of love is all that an individual can give or pay and operate his stewardship. To know his debt the individual must know what his stewardship is. The church must begin to know what an individual's stewardship is, hence the requirement of coming before the bishop, or the coming together of the individual and the official head in temporal things for a decision as to what and how much the individual responsibility is. There must be mutuality or cooperation in temporal things. Are we not facing the necessity of a proper beginning for the building up of Zion, which proper beginning or "laying the foundation of Zion" requires all that an individual can put into it of himself, and therefore of his possessions; all his surplus over and above the needs of his stewardship? We have not tackled the job, but must do it or be cut off. The world will not save us. Neither can we save the world until we are organized and endowed for it. But our mission is to save the world as far as possible. It is not possible without Zion. We can not save ourselves without Zion.

The matter of who shall move to Zion or constitute the nucleus for future enlargement is a very important matter requiring logically the consideration of the Presidency and Bishopric as the law states. (Doctrine and Covenants 48:2.) Who comes to Zion in the spirit of sacrifice and law observance is likely to continue therein. I am no longer for spasmodic sacrifice. I am for continuity of sacrifice not only till the present church debt is paid, but until the temple is built and the preparation is adequate for warning the world by precept and by example.

I can ask myself as an individual how much sacrifice I shall make, and answer my own question by saying, "All that I am capable of making." The church as a church does not need to ask that question over again for it has been asked and answered, and the answer is before us in print in rather specific terms, needing in its application only the advice and action of the Bishopric. I tell myself each day that I must look duty in the face for that day. An occasional glimpsing of duty is not sufficient, or a partial look at it. My responsibilities may not be large, but they are continuous. I will cheat myself by sidestepping them.

INDIVIDUALS MUST BE READY

No demand of the Lord, or the Presidency, or Bishopric, will amount to anything any farther than there is spirit and initiative in the individual units or members of the church to take hold of it willingly and gladly. I can't judge how much of this there is at the present time to "go on in faith" with reference to the Zionic proposition till it is a fact, no longer a fancy. It is not needful that I should judge any but myself, though we are told "that the inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 64:7.) I can judge of the foundational principles and conformity or nonconformity to them. I hope there is plenty of the Zion-building spirit to see it through until the temple is built and ready for the Master's acceptance. The present sacrifice demanded is with a view to the payment of the church debt which when paid means, "Onward to Zion." The real objective is Zion. Towards the close of a former sacrifice period, I was given to know by the Spirit that Zion's redemption was near. It seemed so very near, and yet since then we have been plunged into the "depression" with the rest of the world. Since the last sacrifice period and at this time I can better see the way forward. It is as I have indicated, which means me and you, the rich and the poor alike, no exceptions, no favorites. If we are mere servants, we do as little as we can perchance for the money we get out of it. If we are sons indeed, we do as much as we can with little thought of wages or money for our part. We delight to serve, the more largely the better it suits us. When we make sacrifices we are so well compensated that they do not seem to be sacrifices. They are sacrifices before but not after. Zionic joy and millennial rest and peace will wipe out all memory of sacrifices made to attain. What sacrifice have we made, what sacrifice can we make commensurate with the sacrifice of our Lord and Savior?

THE LIFE OF SACRIFICE

It is a blessing that we are asked to make a sacrifice in association with Him, that we may share his reward and joy, his commendation and approval now and at his coming. Let us not miss the sacrifice (so called) opportunity as it comes to us, or as we see it without special demand of the authorities. I have reason to believe that there are those who sacrifice continually and are incapable of doing more at sacrifice periods than at other times. They are leaders rather than followers, however poor they may be.

This is not written for their benefit. It is written for the benefit of those who are not responding, only in part, to the high demand of the gospel of Christ, which if responded to by rich and poor alike and fully, would meet the debt obligation with comparative ease and we would be moving Zionward, hastening Zion's redemption. Zion's redemption is near, very near, if we respond to the great and high demand of the hour. It is not near for us if we do not. The means of our salvation are with us if we use them. If the rich do not, the poor can be made rich and the rich be made poor. The mistakes or so-called mistakes of the leaders are but excuses for noncompliance with the perfect law as it stands on the statute books of our faith. The mistakes may not be as large as some we have made ourselves, or are making. Before coming in touch with the faith of the Saints, I heard a lecture by Robert Ingersoll on "The Mistakes of Moses." Though I was young, my impression was that it was quite unfair. It was nonconstructive and unnecessary.

"THE WILLING AND OBEDIENT . . ."

More judging of the individual self in the light of the perfect law, less judging of the other fellow would greatly hasten things with reference to Zion. (See Psalm 15.) I have no apology to make for the law or for writing that which is intended to magnify it and encourage accountability to it to the full extent of spiritual and temporal responsibility. The rich and poor all look alike to me, money distinction notwithstanding. The pure in heart are all that are worth while, and that purity is to be measured by the perfect law. It can be known as it is expressed in action, not inaction and failure to sacrifice according to the celestial law, the only basis of Zion's redemption. Shall it be hastened or retarded, is a question we may ask and answer, each for himself. Are we paying or have we decided to pay our individual debt of love to mankind which requires all we are able to pay, not a little spasm of sacrifice periodically, in my judgment, as I consider Jesus Christ and the law he has revealed in written form. We can at least be willing, if not highly able, for, "The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days." (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.)

MACHINERY WITHOUT POWER IS USELESS

As I have intimated, the humblest among the membership of the church may be leaders by example, and we need and appreciate such, but revelation and experience both teach us that we need spiritual leadership in the priesthood to forward the work of restoration and redemption, concerning which the Lord once said: "Therefore, blessed are ye if ye continue in my goodness, a light unto the Gentiles, and through this priesthood a savor unto my people Israel." (Doctrine and Covenants 84: 3, 4.)

It can not be otherwise than that through the spiritualization of the priesthood, the whole body of the church is to be leavened. No mere mechanics or technique of visiting or study of homiletics will suffice. We have been brought into a condition where we are made to realize that man at his best is insufficient, and that Zion can not be redeemed until the "elders are endowed with power from on high." Then the church will respond as it should respond to the demand for sacrifice and the need for finance. We must place the leading responsibility where God has placed it, or allow it to rest upon ourselves to the extent that God has intended it to. Nothing but personal contacts with Divinity will suffice the priesthood. They should know how to go about it to obtain such contacts and be in a condition to raise the standard of Zion among the membership. In the last analysis then, the need is of an endowed priesthood. With the priesthood converted, the conversion of the membership or those who are prospective members and what they possess will be easy, not difficult as at present.

I would again affirm that this law needs to be taught and applied "as a whole." (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.) If I can not teach it as a whole, I will keep still till I can. I will not teach the law of Moses when I should be teaching the gospel. In my humble but firm opinion, it is of no use to dabble with the appointment of stewardships until we are more ready for it. The spirit of consecration and sacrifice is not with us to a sufficient extent as yet. The machinery is of no use without the power to run it. The priesthood must be charged with it at least. Then the membership will be ready to respond.

WE NEED THE SPIRIT OF GOD

We may lack money individually and collectively, but there is nothing we lack so much as the Spirit of God. The financial problem is not the basic problem. We will have to look into the perfect law more deeply as individuals to judge what our basic problems are. If faithful, we will be able to judge ourselves. We will have enough of the Spirit of God to do it. We will be ready for the judgment of the highest authorities in heaven or on earth. We need to be, for "Zion shall be redeemed with judgment [not judgments] and her converts with righteousness." (Isaiah 1: 27.) We should welcome the full operation and application of the law with the judgment necessary for it. Are we content with a profession of belief in the celestial law while we live back under the law of Moses and its tithing?

If, or so long as we are, we will have no more Zion here than the Jews had at Jerusalem.

Apostle John W. Rushton Visits Sweden and Denmark

Hold Meetings at Stockholm

After spending exactly four weeks in Norway, Brother Rushton, accompanied by the writer as his interpreter, went to Stockholm, the capital city of Sweden. We received a warm welcome at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bertil Lindberg, who by the way, are not members of the church. If they had been members they could not have treated us more kindly or with greater hospitality.

We found the Saints in Stockholm quite discouraged owing to the fact that no missionary work has been done there since 1928. They have no regular meetings and feel very much alone and neglected. Of course they asked Brother Rushton when a missionary could be sent to them. Under present conditions in the church not much encouragement could be given them along that line. The best Brother Rushton could do was to promise them that I would try to visit them at least twice a year as long as I am in this mission.

During the eight days that we were there we held four meetings and visited daily in the homes of the Saints. The attendance at the public meetings was good, and the messages of our brother were well received by nonmembers as well as members. I felt blessed in trying to interpret his sermons in the Swedish language. A local elder resides near Stockholm, but because no home that is suitable for meetings is available, very few are held. In discussing with them the matter of trying to hold regular meetings, Brother Lundström very generously offered to pay the hall rent for a meeting the first Sunday in each month. This was arranged for, and the Stockholm Saints may now look forward to at least one meeting a month in which the sacrament may be served and preaching had if desired.

Stockholm is a beautiful city built on three islands. During the week we were there the Prince of Wales was also visiting the city and the Union Jack was in evidence everywhere on the streets as well as in the business houses. The sight of that old flag of course brought joy to Brother Rushton's heart. And we were fortunate enough one evening in the Central Station to see the Prince of Wales and his brother, Prince George, as they passed within three or four feet of where we were standing.

Cheer Members at Aalborg, Denmark

We were loath to leave our brothers and sisters alone again in that city, but it was necessary that we go to Denmark. We went by train to Gotenborg and took the boat from there over to Fredrickshavn, Denmark. We had a very rough voyage and as usual I was very seasick. That was the longest six hours I think I have ever spent. Brother Rushton, fortunately, was not sick and apparently enjoyed the experience of a storm at sea, although he was quite sympathetic with me.

From Fredrikshavn we went to Aalborg by train, where we spent about five days holding meetings and visiting Saints and friends. Here, too, we found the work in bad shape with no regular meetings and several of the Saints indifferent and discouraged. They need a leader who can teach them the gospel of Christ in terms of their social problems. Brother Rushton's sermons seemed to touch a warm spot in their hearts and the response and enthusiasm was good to see. At our public meetings we were surprised at the large attendance of nonmembers especially with so little advertising. The little hall we rented for the first evening was filled to capacity which made it necessary for us to change to a larger hall for the next night. We wished we could have spent more time there. These Saints also feel very much alone with no missionary among them. They, too, put the question to Brother Rushton, "When can we expect a missionary?" Upon being answered that that is very uncertain they then asked him, "Why can't Brother Ruch and family come to Denmark? They have been in Norway long enough." Because of having more members which gives us a larger field of operation it is thought best that we remain in Norway, but our brother promised them that I would try to visit them periodically.

Brothers Rushton and Ruch Separate at Copenhagen

From Aalborg we went by ship to Copenhagen, the capital city of Denmark. It is a real city of about six hundred thousand and has been rightly called the "Athens of the North." Here we spent two busy days looking up members and friends. The first day we enjoyed the hospitality of Apostle P. M. Hanson's relatives who were very kind to us. In their automobile they drove us to many places of interest, among others the castle "Kronborg" where Shakespeare tells us that the Ghost of Hamlet's father walked.

Knowing that Brother Edward Larsen's parents lived in Copenhagen we looked them up next day and spent a pleasant two hours with his mother who was the only one home when we got there. We just have two or three members in the city and we succeeded in finding one of them. She is a lady about forty years of age and is quite cultured. She speaks English, German, and French as well as Danish. She has had many unusual spiritual experiences which she related for us. We spent a pleasant three hours with this interesting woman.

On Saturday morning, October 22, Brother Rushton and I separated in Copenhagen after being together every day for six weeks and two days. Being associated that long, holding meetings together, organizing branches, administering to the sick, visiting Saints and friends, discussing problems of the mission, eating and sleeping together, we feel as if we know each other better than before. I had never before had the privilege of his association and knew him only by sight, but now I can say that I do, in a measure, know him personally. I found him a very considerate and congenial companion, and even in the difficult situations in which he found himself in these foreign countries where he could not understand the language or make himself understood, where customs were strange to him, where the modern conveniences of the average American home were missing, and where the food is prepared and served differently from that to which he is accustomed in America, he proved to be a good sport, met every situation as a gentleman and man of God, and did not criticize or complain.

The Saints of the Scandinavian Mission, together with the missionary and his family, thank Apostle Rushton for the interest he took in our problems and for the encouragement, advice, and help which he gave. We hope to see him among us again before his return to America.

His train left Copenhagen for Berlin, Germany, two and one half hours before I was to start my journey back to Norway. When he had gone I felt very much alone standing there on the platform and the great responsibility of trying to represent God and be a leader to his people in these three Scandinavian countries almost overwhelmed me. I felt very keenly the need of God. Sister Ruch and I ask an interest in your prayers.

Brother Ruch Goes Back to Norway

As my train back to Oslo, Norway, was to pass through Helsingborg, Sweden, I planned to stop there a day or two to visit our few members whom I knew only through correspondence. I arrived there Saturday afternoon and was given a warm welcome. Saturday evening and all day Sunday was spent with the Saints and a very enjoyable time was had. I preached two sermons for them, and they kept me singing a good deal of the time as they enjoy hearing the songs of Zion. They have had no missionary work done there since C. A. Swensen left there in 1916. Since then several families of Saints have gone to America and some of them are living in Independence. The three members who are still living there are faithful and deeply interested in the church. They also asked me that ever present question, "when will there be missionary work done in Helsingborg again?" After being with them that short time a deep feeling of brotherhood and love had grown up between us, and it was difficult for me to believe that I had so recently met them for the first time. There is something in this work which binds us together as one family.

I left Helsingborg Monday morning and arrived at Oslo that evening. Thousands of people were at the station, but not to meet me. Otto von Porat, Norway's famous boxer, was returning on the same train from his knockout victory on the Friday evening before in Berlin over Hein Muller, Germany's heavy-weight champion. Porat is Norway's hero these days and he was carried out of the station on the shoulders of his admirers.

We Latter Day Saints have our hero in Jesus Christ. Let us worship our hero and walk in his footsteps and may the beautiful traits which characterized his life become a part of our daily lives.

V. D. RUCH.

GREFSEN, NORWAY, November 1, 1932.

I wonder what the best method of revealing Jesus is if it is not in art, architecture, literature, theology, ritual, music, institutions, or organizations. I am wondering if the best method of revealing Jesus of all methods that have been tried, is not found in the characters of men and women. At times down through the ages men and women have caught the inspiration of the message of Jesus, have taken him seriously, and have gone out and set on fire the souls of others. They have endeavored to complete the unfinished portrait of Jesus.—From "The Unfinished Portrait," a sermon by F. M. McDowell, preached at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Monday, October 10, the following officers were elected: Pastor, J. C. Page; director of church school, A. L. Sanford; director of music, Mildred Sanford; secretary, L. H. Lewis, and treasurer, August Lee.

The following Wednesday evening the prayer meeting was in charge of Arnold Ourth, whose theme, "Cooperation," met with splendid response. A goodly number were present and the spirit manifested was encouraging for the new year.

Two Boy Scouts, twelve and thirteen years of age, Joseph Henderson and Roderick Lewis, are regular attendants at the midweek services, and their testimonies are an inspiration to the older ones. Joseph is a great-grandson and namesake of Joseph Burton and Roderick a grandson of Tamzie Newcombe, sister of Emma Burton.

"What Lack I Yet?" was the theme of the pastor's sermon the Sunday following, causing each one to ask himself the question, "What more can I do for the advancement of the work in our branch?" The results are being manifested.

The worship programs published in the Saints' Herald are being adapted to the needs of the branch and posted a week in advance with the names of those taking part. Thus far they have met with a splendid response.

The Book of Mormon quarterlies, edited by C. B. Woodstock, are being used in Sunday evening classes. The class study is followed by a program or short sermon. Last Sunday, "The More Abundant Life," by Clara L. Nichols, was pleasingly carried out by the young people.

Graceland Day was observed with appropriate songs and readings. Mildred Sanford compared Graceland with other colleges and A. L. Sanford talked on "A Parent's Observations." The collection for Graceland amounted to ten dollars. Two Nauvoo young people are attending Graceland this year, David Lee, a freshman, and Jack Sanford, a sophomore.

Brother and Sister Lee, Mary and John, were privileged to attend the Graceland Home-coming, October 23, and witnessed the college play in which David took part.

The women's department has been working for some time to raise money for the purchasing of new seats for the building. The realization of their hopes seemed to be some time in the future until Brother Johnson, pastor of the branch in Decatur, Illinois, attended the reunion and informed workers that twenty-four new oak pews, made to sell for $1,550, were for sale in his city for $150. Through the kindness of Brother Johnson and District President F. C. Mussell, the matter was investigated and the seats purchased. They add much to the appearance of the church building.

In compliance with the wishes of the Presiding Bishop, the women's department is now desirous of bending its energies toward helping the general church.

A number of interesting visitors have been here since last writing. Among these were Patriarch Richard Baldwin and wife and Brother and Sister Nicholson, of Saint Louis, who were guests of the Sanfords over Labor Day. The Baldwins came prepared, and presented a well arranged program for the Sunday morning services, each one present was given a mimeographed booklet of the complete program. In the evening Brother Baldwin gave a splendid sermon on zionic attitudes.

Elder H. A. Doty was here on the evening of September 27 and delivered an illustrated lecture on "Jerusalem to Galilee and Through Syria." The slides were made and colored by Brother Doty from pictures taken during his sojourn in Palestine.

Brother and Sister Gilbert Bowser, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, were guests of the Pages for a few days, and Brother Bowser spoke one Sunday evening.

Sister Henry Williams, of Tipton, Iowa, is making her home with the Pages for a time. She is a great-granddaughter of Catherine Salisbury, sister of the Martyr.

A number of Saints from Rock Creek and other parts of the district gathered at the church on October 2, bringing with them their fruit for the harvest festival, which made a nice display. It was then shipped to Independence.

A special prayer service was held one Wednesday evening in behalf of little Maxine Salisbury, granddaughter of Sister Hattie Lambert, of Rock Creek, whose condition was critical. Since that time she has shown decided improvement.

Joan Louise, infant daughter of Blanche Klingelmuller, was blessed October 30 by J. C. Page and L. H. Lewis.

Brother Page was agreeably surprised on the evening of his birthday anniversary when his Sunday school class of twenty members dropped in to spend the evening. A social time was enjoyed and refreshments of ice cream and cake were served.

Sister Keir, of Chicago, presented an old-fashioned knitting machine and old-style balance scale, to be added to the antiques with which the rooms in the Old Homestead are being furnished.

Last evening there were twenty-five present at the midweek prayer service, and there were twenty-four testimonies and three prayers. Eight-year-old Mabel Henderson took part for the first time.

Wigan Branch (England) Celebrates Twenty-first Birthday

W. H. Chandler, Early Worker, Is Special Speaker

Sunday, October 9, was an auspicious occasion for Wigan Branch, a day which recalled happy memories. On this day the local harvest thanksgiving service was held and the twenty-first anniversary of the branch was celebrated.

The day also marked the twenty-first birthday in the church of Priest J. Entwistle, branch historian, and was the twenty-first anniversary of the blessing of Brother Entwistle's eldest son.

Twenty-one years ago Elder W. H. Chandler, now president of Manchester District, traveled from Warrington to Wigan to see what could be done to reorganize a branch of the church that had gone out of existence. He came to Wigan with the spirit of work in his heart and set about his task with all the power he could command. He knocked at the door of Elder W. Spargo, who has since passed on, who welcomed him as soon as Brother Chandler explained his mission. These two men set out to visit the scattered members. The first visit paid was to Elder James Spargo, another stalwart of the church.

These three men organized a meeting and invited a few friends. The preaching was inspiring. This meeting formed the foundation of a great work in Wigan. A business meeting was called a short time afterwards, to organize the branch with all its officers. This was held October 1, 1911. Elder W. H. Greenwood, of Manchester, presided and gave an inspiring address on the importance of the work and its achievements. The branch organized.

Elder Chandler commenced to work with a handful of Saints. A room known as the Moot Hall was rented in Wigan Market Place, and in this little room the Saints were blessed with the Spirit of God to such an extent that they soon had the room full of interested people. They then started an open-air campaign on Wigan Market Square, where they soon found out their persecutors. Some of the members were much astonished at the attitude of men whom they had thought good Christians. Each Sunday night as Brother Chandler opened his meeting, persecution came from every part of the crowd until they became so rowdy and violent that the police came on the scene, and the Saints had to ask them for protection. Be that as it may, the spirit of the work prevailed. Brother Chandler went on and built up a fine branch. He conducted about fifty souls into the kingdom. He did his work well notwithstanding the hardships through which he passed, and worked for the love of God and his church.

And so, after twenty-one years, the branch invited him to return and preach at its anniversary service. His address on "Christ Left One Church Upon Earth" inspired the hearers.

Since the organization of the branch, Wigan people have been blessed by the visits of a few missionaries from headquarters. Here are some of the visitors, Apostles U. W. Greene, J. F. Curtis, J. A. Gillen, D. T. Williams, T. W. Williams, Elder Fry, Patriarch and Sister Richard Baldwin, and Elder D. B. Sorden. All of these left behind happy memories.

The work is still going on. Elder F. O. Davies comes among the Saints to give encouragement. At present Elder W. J. Fawcett, 1 Alliance Street, Wigan, presides over the branch. He would like to hear from some of the brothers above named.

Boston, Massachusetts

Organize for New Year of Activities

Boston Branch had its Graceland program. There was a paper by Mrs. Agnes Fisher and also a talk by Miss Roberta Lewis, from Nauvoo, who is in Boston this winter, attending Boston University. Miss Lewis is also doing excellent work in the junior church, being very popular with all; and "all" is not restricted to the junior church department. The primary department is in charge of Mrs. Frances Traver. Mr. Arthur Beverage is doing valuable work in this younger division of the church also, talking to the children each Sunday.

Wednesday evening, November 2, a short business meeting was held after the regular prayer meeting to ratify the appointments of the heads of the various departments. They are, "The Leaders" (women's group), Mrs. Rebecca Carter; "The Crusaders" (young people), Edward L. Traver, jr. The others have been mentioned, junior church and primary departments.

The leaders will hold their first meeting at the home of Mrs. Leah Traver, Arlington, on Thursday, November 10.

The conference has been postponed from November 12 and 13 until November 19 and 20, in order that President Floyd M. McDowell may be here to conduct classes.

The "younger-young-people," as they are called, had a Halloween party at the Fisher Business College on October 29, and an enjoyable time was had. Several "distinguished" guests were there. They established themselves on the ground floor, where there was the least danger of meeting with any of the ghosts, sailors, and other strange characters that were to be seen. They were E. H., M. C., Florence, and Sanford Fisher, and Wallace and "Becky" Carter. There were peanuts galore for them and they found the cider delicious.

"Last week" writes Ruth Alice Carter, Boston's correspondent, "I visited the scene of our fair summer days, and felt that it was a pity we couldn't have one of our fine old prayer meetings there under the gorgeous red and gold of the beloved Onset scene. However, the tide was out, so—well, you who have seen the famous 'Mud Cove' at low tide, will understand what I am leaving out."

On October 2, two of the sacred ordinances of the church were administered. The baptism of little Celia Black was followed by the blessing of the baby of Mr. and Mrs. Belmore. May both of these children continue in the path in which their parents have started them.

Mason City, Iowa

Harvest Festival Gifts to Needy

Recent meetings have been most inspiring. October 9, was Harvest Home Festival Day for the branch. Donations came in abundance, there being three bushel baskets and one box full of potatoes, cabbage, squashes, carrots, pumpkins, beans, rice, and some canned goods.

Sister Luda H. Nelson was chosen to deliver these supplies to needy families of Saints and local harvest contributions were kept here instead of being sent to headquarters.

October 30, twenty-six gathered at the home of Sister Henry Smith for classes and at noon a sumptuous potluck picnic dinner was served.

Everyone enjoyed a good dinner and afternoon of conversation. They departed looking forward to spring and a renewal of classes. It was thought necessary to disband meetings because of approaching cold weather and possible bad roads for those who have a distance to drive.

Wagner, South Dakota

In October this group had a "backward party" at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Bueler. Guests dressed backwards, entered the home backwards, saying goodnight to the hostess. Lunch was then served, and the remainder of the evening was in charge of the game committee.

"Belief of the Church for Youth" is the subject of study for the adult class. The young people's class is discussing "Problems Young People Must Solve."

Graceland Day was observed October 23. Short talks were given by Sister Ruth Bueler, "Curriculum and Financial Aids at Graceland"; Sister Nina Amundson, "Social and Extra-curricular Activities," and Sister Kleta Finley, "Graceland Fellowship."

A trip through the witch's den, fortunes, ghost stories, games, and stunts were enjoyed at the ghost party at the Calvin Crisman home, October 29. Forty were present.

Preceding the Sunday school hour, October 30, Sister Nina Amundson sang, "The Heavens Declare the Glory of God."

San Antonio, Texas

First Church, South Cherry and Rockwood Court

Southwestern Texas district conference convened October 9, with First San Antonio Church. At 9.45 a. m. the church school was in charge of local officers, and Bishop L. F. P. Curry was the eleven o'clock speaker. He spoke with splendid liberty along financial lines. Both attendance and attention were good.

Most of the members remained at the church where lunch was served on tables on the lawn back of the building. People were present from San Antonio Second Church, from Hines, Pipe Creek, and Medina City. Brother and Sister George Hiles and daughter, Mary, from Beeville, brought a large quantity of "Mother" Hile's doughnuts which were enjoyed.

The ministry present included Apostle R. S. Budd, Bishop L. F. P. Curry, and Missionary George H. Wixom.

The conference assembled in business meeting at 2.30 p. m., President E. L. Henson, associated with Apostle R. S. Budd, was in charge. The peaceful influence of the Spirit was felt throughout the session, and business was transacted in perfect harmony. The following officers were unanimously chosen: President of the district, Elder J. A. Robinson, who chose as counselors, H. E. Henson and T. J. Jett, jr. Teddy Dorow was sustained secretary of the district; Floyd Jett, supervisor of Religious Education; Sister J. A. Robinson, musical director.

In the evening Apostle Budd spoke trying with all earnestness to convince the Saints of the importance of living their religion. Brother Budd arrived at San Antonio about 6 p. m. Saturday, the day before the conference, and was met by J. A. Robinson, who took him home. After partaking of refreshments, he was conducted to the church where he preached.

The choir, directed by Mrs. Fay Hall, assisted by Miss Emma Jackson, furnished music.

Everyone felt that this was one of the best conferences held in a number of years.

Bishop Curry talked to the women of the church, soliciting their cooperation in a financial way to help raise funds for the payment of back missionary allowances. Judging from the way these women are now at work, this appeal was not in vain. They meet at the church every Thursday afternoon to work, and some go in the morning and remain all day. They are securing all the quilting they can do. Brother J. A. Robinson meets with them and talks on different topics while the women quilt. Recently the women had a guest, Mrs. R. E. Miller, of Dallas. Sister Miller used to live in San Antonio, and old friends were glad to see her.

The women sponsored a Halloween festival which netted them a sum of more than fifteen dollars, to go to the general church.

Prior to the district conference Elder G. H. Wixom held a series of meetings. His talks, delivered with splendid liberty, were deeply appreciated. Attendance was fairly good. After the conference he went to Beeville, but returned to preach here October 23.

T. J. Sheppard, an old-time missionary, was the morning speaker on that day. It was good to hear his voice once more raised in defense of the latter-day work. Though he is advanced in years, his effort is characterized by the same clearness of mind and ability to put his message across as of old. His text was "Work while it is called day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

Genoa, Colorado

General and District Officers Help Scattered Drouth-stricken Branch

We are few in number and have suffered from four years of severe drouth, and sometimes we feel that we are the "forgotten man" we hear about. Then something happens that makes us feel that we still have the Friend who fails not.

I have lived in a number of branches of this church and have never found a more united company of Saints even though they are widely scattered. We have three Sunday schools in the branch, all using our own literature. One is at Flat Top; one at Seibert, and one at Genoa. All are striving to build spiritually although all are suffering severely from the drouth and the world-wide depression.

Apostle Roy S. Budd and Elder Glaude A. Smith were in this branch in September. They spent one day at Seibert, one in Flat Top community, and most of two days at Genoa. We used (perhaps they would say "misused") them all the time they were among us and enjoyed their stay, even the evening at Flat Top, when we think the subject should have been, "Lend Us of Your Oil for Our Lamps Have Gone Out." Instead Brother Budd gave a fine sermon on "The Law." Poor lights did not seem to make any difference to him or to us either. Both men gave many good things for us to remember long after they are gone.

Brother Budd made many friends all over this district. Brother Smith has had many friends ever since he came among us.

The Sunday of their visit was Genoa's rally day, and Saints came from all around. Many were here, some coming from as far away as Goodland, Kansas.

Two weeks later Brothers J. D. Curtis and Floyd Engstrom from Colorado Springs, accompanied by Sister O. E. Sade, visited this branch, and there was a second rally day. Brother Curtis is of the district presidency, and Brother Floyd Engstrom is district church school superintendent, while Sister Sade is a very dear friend, widow of Brother O. E. Sade, who labored as missionary here for some time, and left us with tender memories of his useful life. We had beautiful services that day, and to us Sister Sade's visit filled the day with happy memories.

The next Sunday brought Brother Ralph Vincent, bishop's agent for the district, and another full and pleasant day.

We are quite well ministered to in this branch, being presided over by an active high priest, assisted by an elder, two priests, two teachers, and a deacon. All but the high priest are young men and active in the church work. Elder Sutton (high priest) does all the missionary work he can, traveling over eastern Colorado, visiting the scattered ones and preaching and baptizing. His work often calls him into western Kansas. His field is a wide one, and calls for much more time than he can give. Yet, frequently, he returns to the branch and helps us here.

This will be a hard winter on all of eastern Colorado. Some have raised practically nothing for four years, and all will have barely the necessities of life. Many, even among the Saints, will have scarcely that. We have collected and made over clothing to help as we can.

Saints of this region are much concerned about the church and its work, but under existing conditions there seems to be not much we can do except to hold fast and try to keep the faith.

ELIZABETH SUTTON.

Sister Mary Ann Farley Passes Away

Sister Mary Ann Farley was the wife of William B. Farley, the president of Western Colorado District. She was his constant companion and helper in his labors for the Lord, and they were planning a trip over the District together when she suddenly became sick with pneumonia and passed away within four days, October 25.

The esteem in which Brother Farley and his wife are held, in their home town, Durango, Colorado, was well attested to by the large group of friends who filled the Community Club Hall, where the funeral services were held. Friends of many and varied church affiliations came to pay their last respects to a good life, well lived.

Elder Glaude A. Smith, president of Eastern Colorado District, was called to take charge of the services, held October 30.

Far West Stake

Young People's Rally

The young people's rally for Far West Stake, held at Stewartville, Missouri, November 12 and 13, proved beyond all doubt that the young men and women of that section are responding to the needs and call of the church. "Faith of Our Fathers—Living Still?" was the theme of the rally, and every part of the program answered that question with a ringing "Yes."

Though many inches of snow on dirt roads made it impossible for some to attend the rally, the crowd was good in size and attention. Guest speakers were Elder Roy A. Cheville, of Graceland College, and Elder Leonard Lea, of Independence, Missouri. To the young people's stake organization goes a large share of the credit for the success of the program. Officers of the organizations are, Wayne Simmons, president; Kenneth Piepergerdes, vice president; Helen R. Beadnall, secretary-treasurer, and Leonard G. Ehlers, director of activities. The rally also had the stanch support and help of the president of the stake, Elder Ward A. Hougas.

On Saturday night an entertaining program was given by stake young people and their guests. There was music by a quartet from Fourth Saint Joseph Church; a vocal solo by Thurston Schoff, of Oakdale; a piano solo by Gertrude Hayter, Third Saint Joseph. Then a play, "Aunt Debby's Speculation," was given by young people from Maple Grove and Stewartville. Kingston Branch contributed a musical number, and the young people's choir from Second Saint Joseph Church sang, also a quartet from Cameron. Brother Cheville was the leader in the fellowship hour.

Sunday's program was crowded, and outstanding in these activities was the allegiance meeting of the young people at eleven o'clock, Ward A. Hougas and Roy Cheville presiding. In the course of a few moments many expressed their desire to serve the church as they are needed, consecrating their time, talent, and strength to its needs.

Downstairs at this hour Brother Lea spoke to the older people.

A good response was given to the nine forty-five lecture by Brother Cheville, and the hymn fest led by L. G. Ehlers at ten thirty, proved as one visitor expressed it, that "the young people of Far West Stake certainly can sing."

Everyone had been asked to bring lunch, and at twelve fifteen the congregation sat down to eat basket dinner.

At two o'clock a musical prelude by the Girls' Chorus, of First Saint Joseph Branch, directed by Mrs. Ruth Haden, opened another hour of entertainment and enjoyment. Mrs. Leonard Lea read "Twelve Young Gideons," and a quartet from Cameron sang. At two thirty class discussion was led by Roy Cheville.

The sacred program in the evening proved a fitting close to the rally. Music was supplied by Stewartville, Guilford, and Maple Grove Branches, and the O. T. Z.'s, of First Saint Joseph Church, presented a pageant, "The Call to Youth." "Youth's Answer" was the theme of Elder Ward A. Hougas's sermon.

Officers of Far West Stake and the young people's organization are endeavoring to make this rally a regular quarterly event. To another of its kind the youth look forward.

Holden Stake

Strasburg Mission

A little over a year ago a few families of Saints moved into this vicinity, bringing with them a desire to worship in this community. It is so far to Holden that some could not attend services. Elder Roy Keckler, of Kingsville, was sent here by the stake presidency to hold a series of meetings. These were conducted in a hall at Strasburg. Some interest was shown, and local Saints were on the alert for a regular place of worship.

Throughout the winter, prayer services were held each Wednesday night in the home of Brother and Sister J. J. McLanahan, near Strasburg, and in March of this year, permission was obtained to hold Sunday school and preaching services in a country school building in Strasburg district.

Brother Eliason helped the Saints to organize a church school which is now growing under the leadership of Brother M. A. Goodfellow. There is an enrollment of thirty-five. Sister Goodfellow is the musical director and Sister M. R. Swift, of Pleasant Hill, the story-teller, favors the group with a fine story every Sunday immediately after church school.

As soon as the Saints obtained use of the schoolhouse, Brother Kleckler began to preach every Sunday night and his sermons have been wonderfully interesting. Local members feel that there is a chance for great work here, and non-members who attend services are observing all things closely. There have been as many as sixty-five in attendance at preaching, and as a result of these services and visiting, four have been added to the group by baptism.

Sacrament services are held in the home of Brother and Sister Goodfellow with good attendance and a wonderful degree of the Spirit. Sunday, November 6, twenty-five were present. Prayer services also are well attended, there being as many as forty present.

This is a new field and the Saints are whole-heartedly and unitedly striving to do their part toward the redemption of Zion. The women have answered the call of President F. M. McDowell and are doing their bit. The attitude of the Saints is one of valiant loyalty to the covenant they have made to their God and to the gospel they have embraced. The workers of this new, little group ask to be remembered in the prayers of the church, that the gospel work will grow at Strasburg.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The adult and young people's departments of the church school assembled in the main auditorium on Friday evening for a "depression party." Depression clothes were worn, and shortly after nine o'clock old man depression was excluded from the party and a jolly good time was entered into by all. Community singing was led by Harold Burgess after which amusing games were played. All entered into them whole-heartedly and for an evening the "depression" was forgotten. The climax brought about a treasure hunt, and the treasures found were turned over to the pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister C. E. Wight. Refreshments of doughnuts and cider were served.

The sacrament service the first of the month was very well attended and a marked degree of the spirit of testimony pervaded.

The leadership school met a hearty response from the different groups of the stake and the enrollment was gratifying to the stake presidency.

After a snowstorm election day and a week of cold and chilling weather, last Sunday dawned, a beautiful November day, the sun shining brightly. The eleven o'clock hour was occupied by Elder A. B. Phillips. The choir, under the direction of Clayton Wolfe, rendered the anthem, "Lead Kindly Light." Sister Mae Kelly, of Omaha, was the guest soloist, singing in her clear soprano, "The King of Love My Shepherd Is."

After a half-hour concert by the choir, the congregation enjoyed the inspiring sermon of Elder John F. Sheehy at the evening service. The choir repeated its program over KMBC at ten o'clock under the direction of George Anway.

Stake conference will convene next Sunday and Monday, November 20 and 21. Apostle John F. Garver will be the speaker at the eleven o'clock service. On Monday evening the business session will be held. Many items of importance are to come before the assembly.

Plans are well under way for a Thanksgiving service at Central Church on Thanksgiving Day after which a turkey dinner is to be served and a general get-together time is planned for the big church family. Neighboring Saints and friends are invited and urged to make your reservations at the church office.

Sister Fred Gerber, who fell several weeks ago injuring several ribs, is able to be up for a short time and receive her friends. Sister Pritchard, who sustained a broken hip last June, has been removed from the Trinity Lutheran Hospital to her daughter's home and is getting along nicely.

Independence

Stone Church

On Sunday morning Apostle F. Henry Edwards delivered a thoughtful sermon to a large congregation. This was, in effect, a farewell sermon for a time, for Brother Edwards left Sunday night for the Pacific Coast, where he will labor until Christmas, going north into Oregon and Washington.

As the Scripture basis of his discourse, he chose to read Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3, and discussed the church and its significance in the lives of men and the progress of the world.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang two anthems, "Bless the Lord, O My Soul," and "Into the Woods My Master Went," by Sidney Lanier. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder W. E. Shakespeare.

The funeral of little Grace Maxine Booker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Zeno Booker, occurred at the church at one-thirty in the afternoon. The three-year-old child died at the Independence Sanitarium November 11. She is survived by her parents, a brother, Zenos Francis Booker, sixteen months old, and two grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Hawley, of Deerfield, Missouri. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the services, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Close upon the six o'clock evening class study came the evening preaching service. "True Succession in the Church Presidency and the Place of the First Presidency in the Church" was the theme of Historian S. A. Burgess.

Special music was by a quartet composed of Mrs. Nina G. Smith, Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, J. Glenn Fairbanks, and D. O. Cato.

At the annual church school business meeting, in charge of Pastor John F. Sheehy, Monday night, the following corps of officers was chosen for the coming year: General superintendent, S. A. Thiel; assistant superintendent, Elder H. W. Harder; nursery superintendent, Mrs. Horace Roberts; beginners, Mrs. Tessie Smith; primaries, Miss Ruby Williamson; juniors, Mrs. R. A. Moler; intermediates, Miss Leta B. Moriarty; young people, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Beck; adults, Mrs. J. F. Frazier; secretary of church school, Miss Elizabeth Okerlind, and Christmas Offering superintendent, Mrs. Edith Bullard.

Action was taken by the body to discontinue these annual meetings, referring choice of church school officers to the pastor and the school's executive council.

Reports from the various departments indicated a brave effort to carry on in the work of Religious Education though at this time many retrenchments and sacrifices are found necessary.

Second Church

Pastor William Inman was the officer in charge of the eleven o'clock service Sunday, November 13, assisted by Elder John Miller. After the invocation a response, by the choir, was entitled, "Bow Down Thine Ear." Miss Pauline Crawford and Mrs. Joy Hulmes sang a number accompanied by Mrs. Helen Barnett, followed by the choir which sang "O Lamb of God." Elder J. F. Sheehy, pastor of Zion and speaker of the service, chose as his text, John 7: 17.

The theme of the junior service was "Peace." Brother Conyers was in charge, helped by Billy McPherson as pianist, and Evelyn Anthony as leader of the music. "The Iron Cross," a story, was told by Mrs. Agnes Edmunds. Elder Dewey McNamara, assistant pastor of Zion, told of his experiences in the World War. His talk was very interesting.

An organ prelude by Sister Lena Mortimer opened the seven thirty service. Mildred Foulk, accompanied by Geraldine Fields on the piano, sang "Trees." Brother A. H. Thomas offered the opening prayer. A girls' quartet composed of Nadine Inman, Geraldine Fields, Mildred Foulk and Elsie Lee Street sang "Only the Child-Like," accompanied by Sister Gladys Inman. The speaker, Bishop A. B. Phillips, used as his subject, "Revelations of the Late Joseph Smith and What Might Have Been the Results Had We Heeded Them."

As a correction: The newly-elected Second Church officers should have been as, William Inman, pastor; Ben Sarratt, assistant pastor; Sam Inman, bishop's agent; Roy Settles, Sunday school superintendent, and Mrs. J. T. Westwood, jr., director of music.

The young people have taken upon themselves the furnishing of Christmas treats for the children. Several have already given something toward the cost.

Brother J. T. Curtis who has been ill for some time is improving.

Walnut Park Church

Pastor Frank McDonald was the speaker at the morning service Sunday. The financial needs of the church formed the basis of the service, and Brother McDonald delivered a discourse inspiring his hearers with a vision of beckoning Zion. "Zion, the Beautiful, Beckons Us On," played by Drexel Mollison at the organ and Sister Gladys Reynolds at the piano, furnished an appropriate setting for the service, and the choir, directed by Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, sang, "More Love to Thee, O Christ."

Marian Louise Ginn, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Otis Ginn, was blessed at the morning service, Elders George Jenkins and F. W. Lanpher officiating.

The attendance at Religio, held at six o'clock each Sunday evening, is steadily increasing. One hundred and eighty-eight were present Sunday. After the class period a program was given by the Boy Scouts of Troop 227. Brother C. G. Closson, scout committeeman, was in charge. The scouts, under the direction of Jessie Anderson, presented a playlet, portraying a meeting of a troop of Boy Scouts. The following scouts took part in the playlet: Jack Green, Marion Wille, Leonard Curtis, Henry Countryman, John Crandall, David Crandall, Robert Masters, and Harold Dillee. Between scenes Jessie Anderson read "Deceitful Man," and at the close Lucille Mosby Gard read two numbers, and Elder W. T. Gard gave a five-minute talk.

Evangelist Ammon White was the speaker at the Sunday evening service.

Friday evening, November 11, the Walnut Park Church was the scene of the wedding of Miss Margaret Terryberry and Lloyd Stoner. The ceremony was read by Elder John F. Sheehy. Preceding the service Thelma Vincent Krahl sang "Until" and "Because." Florence Koehler Campbell accompanied her and also played the wedding marches. The bride's sister, Miss Jean Terryberry, was her maid of honor. Miss Norma Dean Fryor was bridesmaid. William Whetstone was best man for Mr. Stoner, and Jesse Chadwick was groomsman. A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents, Brother and Sister A. E. Terryberry. The young couple will be at home after November 21 at 1337 South Osage Street, Independence.

Enoch Hill Church

Enoch Hill church school is increasing in interest and numbers. If attendance keeps growing the church building will soon be too small. Due to the proximity of Armistice Day, patriotic numbers were used at the morning service last Sunday. The poem, "Our Dream," was read by Mrs. Ruth Hayes, and Dorothy Winegar told an Armistice Day story.

At the morning service the choir sang "Star Spangled Banner." In his sermon, Pastor H. L. Barto portrayed the beauty of a Christ-like life, and showed that men must pass through suffering equal to the suffering of Christ in order that they may be glorified as Christ was glorified.

"Israel Is Free," was sung by the choir Sunday evening, after which Patriarch H. O. Smith gave an instructive sermon on the necessity of the First Presidency, and clearly set forth the duties of the various church officers.

The women's department is busy. The workers are happy that they can do something to help the work of the church along. They meet every Thursday for work, spending the entire day, each woman bringing a covered dish. In the afternoon they have an hour for class work to further their knowledge of the Scriptures. Elder Walter Self is their instructor during this hour.

The young people on the hill are sorry to lose Elder C. E. Beal, who has been their capable leader for several years, but are happy to know that since they can not have Brother Beal, they are to have one equally capable in the person of Elder H. E. Winegar.

Twenty-five boys and girls of young senior age belonging to the class taught by E. H. McKean and Ruth Hayes, had a jolly evening at the home of Brother McKean the evening of November 7. They enjoyed songs, games, and a chili supper. This class is growing in numbers. Not long ago it was assigned the choir loft for a meeting place during the church school hour, but last Sunday the platform was more than crowded. The students are responding to the lessons contained in Brother R. A. Cheville's quarterly, "What It Means to Be a Latter-day Saint."

Englewood Church

From the nursery to the old people's class the branch is going forward. The Sunday evening Religio, the newest "help" organization of the local, is the young people's project. The age limits of this group are from twelve to thirty, and these have chosen as their executive staff the following leaders: President, Ralph Dunlap; vice president, Inez Tousley; secretary, La Vern Morrison, and sponsor, Sister Florence Moore. The group has chosen dramatics for its special work and has invited the older people and the children under twelve to attend its meetings. A class of older people is studying "Parliamentary Law and Practices."

Sister Winifred Gould has been chosen supervisor of the children's division.

On last Wednesday at the regular meeting of the women's department, the members were given an agreeable surprise when their hostess, Sister Pauline Clow Seymour, led them to her spacious, well-lighted and well-ventilated basement where two quilts were in frames and marked ready for quilting. She announced that if it was agreeable to the department, this could be its future, permanent headquarters. Her gracious offer was unanimously accepted. There is still room for another quilt, and one will be put in frames next week if the number of workers justify.

At the recent election of branch officers Sister Gladys Closson Welch was chosen supervisor of the women's department. She is the wife of Brother Arthur Welch, the mother of three little children, and although she is new in the work of supervision, the women are sure that her ability coupled with her devotion to the church will make her a good leader. The women of Englewood are mostly members of the "younger set," yet many who are older are working, too. The spirit of the women's work is contagious. The children have it, too. A church school class of little girls is asking Sister Seymour, their teacher, to help them plan a quilt.

The women's department had its first business meeting under the new leadership last Wednesday, and the following were chosen to assist Sister Welch: Assistant supervisor, Florence Moore; secretary-treasurer, Ruth Crum Donaldson; leader Group 35 East, Edna Long; leader Group 35 West, and chairman of Commodity Shop work, Pauline Seymour; leader of Group 36 West, Ina McCaulla; leader of Group 36 East, Maria Hiles; chairman for Englewood of the women's exchange shop also Harvest Home chairman of Group 36 East, Grace Koehler Moore; chairman of Harvest Home for 35 East, Myra Clow; for 35 West, Goldie Bassett, and for 36 West, Vera Crees Hood.

The women are working on plans for a chicken dinner and bazaar to be had December 9.

Elder Perry Hiles was continued as pastor at the recent branch business meeting. Other leaders are: Assistant pastor, A. G. Hougas; superintendent church school, Elder Roy Howerly; assistant, Arthur Welch; bishop's agent and custodian of church properties, Deacon Robert Clow.

Guest speakers since last report from Englewood have been Elder Ward A. Hougas, Patriarch U. W. Greene, Patriarch Albert Carmichael whose subject was "Brother Joseph as I knew Him," and last Sunday night Bishop M. H. Siegfried addressed the congregation.

Gudgell Park Church

The local women's group is studying "Church Objectives," and the students are delighted with their teacher, Sister Hallie Gould.

Sister Mary M. Lowry died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. A. Atwell, in Independence, November 2. She was born in Carroll County, Missouri, March 3, 1850, and was the wife of Richard Lowry, a Civil War veteran. They were married August 19, 1866, and to them were born eight children. Six survive her, two daughters and four sons. Sister Lowry was baptized into the church in 1893, at Rich Hill, Missouri, and was faithful to the end. The funeral sermon was by E. A. Davis, assisted by Elder J. M. Baker, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Wednesday night, November 2, this church had no prayer meeting because of the holding of its business meeting. Elder S. A. Thiel came as a representative from the Pastor in Zion. Officers for the new year are: Pastor, Walter Chapman; assistant, P. A. Sherman; church school in charge of C. E. Martin; recreation, Roy Sherman; secretary, Kenneth Sherman; chorister, Sister John Hook; leader of women, Sister Nina Tucker; Harvest Home chairman, Sister Roy Sherman. This group looks forward to a year prosperous in spiritual things.

Brother and Sister Alma Atwell are the happy parents of an eight-pound daughter born November 2. They have named her Caroline Lucille.

Sunday morning, November 6, at eight o'clock, Walter Chapman, jr., and Rose Marie Barnhard were baptized in the Walnut Park font, and confirmed at the Gudgell Park sacrament service, Elders T. C. Kelley, P. A. Sherman, Walter Chapman, sr., and R. O. Self officiating.

A peaceful communion hour encouraged the members, and the church was full to the doors.

Elder H. G. Barto preached that evening.

Of late this group has been visited by several of its former members as well as by new friends. These are always welcome.

Some highly spiritual prayer meetings have been enjoyed in recent weeks.

Spring Branch Church

In his opening remarks for the Sunday morning prayer meeting Alma Tankard sketched the history of the hymn, "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus." Assisting him in this service was Henry Badder.

There were talks at the church school hour by D. S. McNarama, head of the Religious Education Department in Independence, and George Bilquist. Sister Brown, of the children's division of Lees Summit Branch, was present.

Elder C. B. Woodstock was the morning speaker Sunday. The service was in charge of Robert Fish and John Bozarth, and the choir sang "Jesus Lover of My Soul." There was a special number by Winogene Boyce, Irene Roberts, and Gladys Smith.

J. S. Andes, the evening speaker, gave his attention to a discussion of the Restoration of the gospel. Preceding the sermon a trio composed of Alma, Imogene, and Gladys Dixon sang "I'll Exchange My Cross for a Starry Crown." Jesse Smith and Delbert McClain presided over the service.

The local women's group is active. On last Thursday besides regular work of piecing quilt blocks, they elected officers for the new year. They are stressing efforts which will make money for the church.

The more we study the life, mission, and work of Jesus Christ, the Savior of men, the more we realize that the very aim, the very heart of his teachings had as its purpose the development among men of that type of life that should be expressed not in individualism alone, but should be gathered up in the grouping together of people to serve Him in the highest type of life known among men. There is no other way, no other means of working with Him.—E. Y. Hunker, in a sermon preached at the Stone Church Church, Independence, Missouri.

To work; to help and be helped; to learn sympathy through suffering; to learn faith by perplexity; to reach truth through wonder—behold, this is what it is to prosper, this is what it is to live.—Phillips Brooks.

Run-Over Department

the prophets in which the ministry shall be educated in a way pleasing to God, so that from them to the members may also go this intellectual quickening. We see the temple to which the ministry may come for their spiritual endowment of power and in which the members may receive their blessing and make their consecrations. We see the large storehouse to which shall flow the surplus of the strong and successful and from which that surplus shall again flow to the unfortunate and needy, so that there shall be neither rich nor poor in that great community.

THE PRINCIPLES INVOLVED

The principles underlying this vision upon which this community will be builded are eternally true and practical. God by right of creation is owner of all things. All that men have and hold, they have and hold as stewards, whether they recognize that stewardship or not. It follows inevitably that when we enter into covenant relationship with God we should recognize and administer that stewardship as we have not previously done. It follows inevitably that when we enter into covenant with him and become his sons and thus brothers, (all entering the covenant) we shall administer that stewardship not for our selfish gain but in ways best calculated to serve all the brethren. These principles are true and no failure that has been made to apply them or work them out in practical detail can in any way alter them and should not in any way diminish our faith.

Men of the world see a vision and cling to it, sometimes working for centuries towards its realization. Hundreds of years ago men had a vision of aviation. Tennyson said that he "saw the heavens filled with commerce." Thousands of men indirectly, perhaps unconsciously, contributed to the realization of this vision who never lived to see its fulfillment. Hundreds of others consciously, definitely made their contribution who passed away before their vision was realized. Even those who first learned to weave cloth and work in metals were making the vision finally possible. Electricity had to be discovered and applied. The internal combustion engine had to be invented. The principles of flight had to be studied. There were thousands of artisans and experimenters whose labor went into these enterprises. There were numbers of men who gave their lives in the dangerous initial steps involved in flight. Shall we who believe that our vision is of God be less tenacious than men of the world are who see a vision and work until it is realized.

ABRAHAM'S VISION

Abraham was promised the Holy Land and was given to behold it, but four hundred years passed away before he entered in. We may imagine that even though they kept the vision alive the Hebrews in their long experience of adversity and slavery may have said, "One hundred years has passed away and nothing done yet. Two hundred years have gone by and nothing accomplished. Three hundred years gone and we are no nearer the goal than we were," but the promises of God stand sure. Eventually they entered the promised land. Jerusalem was built. From it went the law and to it came Christ. Many had contributed to those results who were not permitted to enter in. The promise is equally sure that the New Jerusalem shall be built. From it the law shall go. To it Christ shall come.

I am not meaning to infer that we shall be four hundred years or two hundred years in redeeming Zion, but we must remember that we are facing one of the most difficult problems that has ever engaged the attention of man. It involves practically the making over of human nature, the forming of new habits, the setting of new goals, the recording of new incentives, the abandoning of all those selfish habits and motives that yet hold humanity enthralled. Scores of attempts have been made to build communities somewhat resembling that which we have seen in vision. All of them have failed. Only this past week a scientist speaking before the annual gathering of the British Association for the Advancement of Science proposed that a community of a hundred thousand members be organized to work out problems confronting industry, to strive towards equality and prosperity; this community to serve as a model on which the world later should build. He declared that of the two great obstacles the first was a lack of "outlook"; "where there is no vision the people perish." The second obstacle was the tendency for every society to observe the rule, "Every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost."

Only three times in history do we have record of a community that approximated the goal that we have visioned, and then it was worked out under the laws prescribed from heaven with the aid and direction of the spirit of the Lord. There was the City of Enoch, the community of interest in the early Christian church in Jerusalem, and the church in the Book of Mormon days.

THOUGH I MAY NOT ENTER IN

This is a point now that I would impress especially upon your minds. Though the redemption of Zion seems to be delayed, though it shall be delayed even beyond my day, though I may never see it realized, if I can do even one thing now that will help to make the vision come true at some future time, I shall be happy in that work. There can be nothing finer than the consciousness of doing the thing that the Lord wants done. If I can do nothing more than help hold the people together and keep this vision alive until the time is opportune for another and a triumphant drive forward then I shall be happy in that work; and what I say for myself I can say of my brethren, if they, too, shall be spent in this cause and not live to see it victorious, if by so doing they may contribute something to the final realization of this vision I shall be happy in seeing them thus spent. That is the consolation I have sometimes when I see men broken in this work with no immediate, visible benefits. The promise is sure. Zion shall be redeemed. It has been revealed to us often, not only in the written word in the Book of Commandments, but also under the spirit of prophecy in our assemblies, even very recently, the definite, sure promise of God that Zion shall be built.

REMEMBER OLD DECISIONS

In conclusion may I say something that I have often before said, that when one is in a period of trouble and depression it is no time to make new decisions. At a time in the past when our minds were clear, when we were under the greatest light of the divine spirit that we have enjoyed, when we stood upon the heights, we made our decision and we made our covenant in this church. Now if we find ourselves in a period of depression and under the cloud and down in the valley, it is no time to think things over and make a new decision or to attempt to establish new goals. We must remember the vision that we had and the decision that we made when we were at our best and press forward until the clouds shall vanish and the light of heaven break in upon us and our souls be revived again for the task before us.

can enough tomato juice to insure your family of obtaining adequate Vitamin C by being able to serve to each member a half a glass of tomato juice instead of the customary orange juice.

Since heating destroys Vitamin C, pasteurized milk would naturally contain less Vitamin C than unpasteurized milk. Since pasteurization kills pathogenic bacteria, one should in most cases use pasteurized milk. With the feeding of children especially, food should be added to the diet which will insure the adequate supply of the vitamin. Babies, as early as the beginning of the fourth month, should have orange or tomato juice added to the diet.

These discussions on the vitamins have been very brief. One dislikes to see a person who is always analyzing the food which is being eaten, and perhaps unconsciously making those near uncomfortable by talking too much on the subject. It is, however, desirable to have a scientific understanding of food, why certain foods are more nutritive than others and why certain combinations are desirable. If one has this scientific background in judging the nutritive value of food, one does not need to become a prey to fanatical and misleading food information. The field of advertising is crowded with such information.

Vitamins are only one small part of the field of nutrition. They are a very important part and need careful consideration in planning our daily diet.

Hardening of the Arteries

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Hardening arteries or arteriosclerosis is a very serious condition, and deaths from it are rapidly becoming more frequent in this country. Poisons circulating in the blood is the cause of this disease, and the most active of the poisons are lead, syphilis, alcohol, tea, coffee and meat. It is always an indication of premature old age. The most prominent symptom is a high blood pressure, which is seldom noticeable, and causes very little inconvenience in the beginning. Outdoor life is essential together with moderate exercise, warm baths—not hot, and every possible means to suppress the development and absorption of the poisons. It is a progressive disease and those suffering from it must fight with great thoroughness and persistence. The final result is apoplexy, Bright's disease, heart disease, or a combination of all three. It is a life-long struggle which must be kept up if the individual wishes to live for any considerable length of time. The complications are cirrhosis of the liver, Bright's disease and apoplexy.

The diet is of the utmost importance. All red meats should be absolutely forbidden, and much better and quicker results will be obtained if meats are eliminated altogether. Vegetables and dairy foods form a good substitute. Fruits are important in the dietary, and in most cases, should only be eaten between meals without sugar or cream.

Whatever diet may be prescribed for any particular case must be carefully watched. Buttermilk, sour milk, cultured milk may be taken for variety, in place of fruit. Starchy or sweet foods should be taken very sparingly. Fresh vegetables, such as lettuce, celery, toma-

Conference Notices

Southeastern Illinois district conference will convene at Marion, December 10 and 11. Please send all reports to Mrs. Myrtle Choate, Marion, Illinois.—R. L. Fulk, for the district presidency.

Central Illinois district conference will meet at Beardstown, December 17 and 18. Please send all reports to Miss Lena Fusselman, Hull, Illinois.—R. L. Fulk, for the district presidency.

Spring River district conference will convene at Joplin, Missouri, church, corner of Twenty-first and Annie Baxter, November 25 to 27. Apostle John F. Garver expects to meet with us. All reports should be sent at once to Mrs. C. E. Wilson, 2018 South Connor, Joplin, Missouri.—Amos T. Higdon, district president.

Florida district conference will meet with the local branch near Huxford, Alabama, November 26, and 27. The business session will be held at 10 a. m. Saturday, November 26. This is the time for the election of the district officers for the coming year. It is hoped that a large attendance will be present. Elder Jacob G. Halb, of Middletown, Ohio, will be in attendance. Several matters of importance are expected to come before the conference.—A. D. McCall, president Florida district, Bagdad, Florida.

Southwestern Kansas district conference will convene with Wichita Branch, December 3 and 4. Election of officers will occur at this time. Apostle R. S. Budd will be present.—A. E. Stoff, district president; Mrs. L. R. Field, district secretary.

Annual district conference of Spokane District will be held at the church at Spokane, Washington, Third Avenue and Smith Street, November 25, 26, and 27. The first service will be at 7.30 p. m. Friday, November 25. Apostle J. A. Gillen is to be the principal speaker.—Mur-toes, parsnips, corn, etc., should predominate. Water is very important and should be pure and one should drink as much as the system requires. It is beneficial to drink lemon, orange, baked apple, berries or fruit of any kind in water a half hour before breakfast. Use as little salt and seasoning as possible. The food should be chewed well and not eaten unless the individual is really hungry, leaving the table a little hungry.

My advice is for you to keep your mind off your ailment, and discuss it with no one but your doctor; to shun irritating environments; not to brood, but smile; to learn to relax both physically and mentally.

iel Whiting, district secretary, East 2504 Fourth Avenue, Spokane, Washington.

All-day Thanksgiving for Portland

An all-day service of Thanksgiving has been planned by Portland Saints for Thanksgiving Day. There will be a prayer meeting at 10 a. m. with perhaps a sermon to follow. A basket dinner will be held in the basement of the church so that everyone may share in the true spirit of Thanksgiving. Saints hope to have Apostle F. Henry Edwards with them during the day and to preach in the evening. A play will be given by the young people either on Thanksgiving Day or the day following which marks the opening of the district young people's conference. Apostle Edwards will conduct classes for the young people on November 25, 26, and 27, and if the attendance and enthusiasm are as great as they were when the district organized, this will be a fine series of meetings. With the inspiration and vision of a man like Apostle Edwards to lead them, the young people expect to benefit greatly from this year's conference. Elder J. L. Verhei, district president, will be in charge of adult classes during the conference.—Leslie Hunt.

A Correction

In the news letter from Kirtland, Ohio, printed in the Herald for November 9, page 1144, second column, toward the middle of the second paragraph, the name, "Brother Joseph Biggs" should read "Sister Joseph Biggs." This correction would make that clause read: "articles brought from the South Sea Islands by Sister Joseph Biggs, once a missionary there." Sister Biggs, accompanied her first husband, Elder Charles H. Lake, on his mission to the South Sea Islands. The editors regret this error.

Conference Minutes

ROCK ISLAND.—Annual October conference convened at Rock Island, Illinois, church, October 14 to 16, beginning with a program Friday evening. No general church appointee could be secured for special speaker, but with the efficient work of the district presidency and Missionary L. G. Holloway, a fine conference was enjoyed. Weather was ideal, and Saints motored in from branches near and far. Excellent meals were served at a low cost by the women's department, and visitors were welcomed into the homes of local members. The Friday evening program was in charge of Elder L. A. White, and with the cooperation of Tri-City congregations a delightful hour was enjoyed. Instrumental numbers were presented by Leslie Davis, John Stiegel, Warren Hinkle, and Richard Sackfield, Sisters Nellie White, Louise Gunlock, Jennie Cady, Thelma Willy, and Irene Macklin. Brother and Sister A. J. Gray and Brother F. C. Bevan favored the congregation with vocal selections, and two delightful readings were given by Evelyn Ekright, Elder L. G. Holloway and Brother Edward Jones were in charge of a spiritual prayer service Saturday morning, and in the afternoon the regular business session was held. The following officers were elected or approved: District President, E. R. Davis; counselors, Edward Jones, and C. A. Bell; secretary, Winifred Stiegel; treasurer and bishop's agent John C. Stiegel; superintendent of department of music, Nola Epperly; superintendent of Religious Education, John C. Stiegel; N. R. statistician Marjorie Holmes; auditor, Leonard W. Stiegel; appropriation committee: the district presidency, treasurer, and L. A. White; publicity agent, Leonard W. Stiegel; housing committee; branch presidents of Moline and Rock Island and the retiring president of Davenport, O. E. Lindsay. According to the statistical report the present district enrollment is 1,712, a net gain of 50 with 78 baptisms noted for the period. In the district treasury there is a balance of $130.28 in the building and loan fund with $195 in loans receivable. For this period we have received $95.72 into the district treasury with disbursements of $51.42, leaving a total balance of $426.61. For the coming year a budget was adopted which apportions $150 among the branches to be raised for district funds, and $60 to be raised at the two conferences which will be held in 1933 instead of the usual three. For general church funds a total of $2,940.31 was raised by the district from January 1, 1932, to October 14, 1932. Three ordinations were approved by the conference: L. L. Allen, of Muscatine, to the office of elder; Charles Shippy, of Oelwein, to the office of elder, and Hurshall Symmonds, of Muscatine, to the office of deacon. Many arose to speak in commendation of these good men and at the afternoon service on Sunday they were ordained under the hands of E. R. Davis, L. G. Holloway, and F. C. Bevan. The conference granted to Davenport Branch power to disorganize if they so desire, and details are to be left to the district officers and general church authorities to do as they see fit. In appreciation for services rendered, a vote of thanks was tendered to the retiring district officers, namely: Sister Orpha Holmes, R. R. Welday, Thomas Willets, Fritz Stiegel, and Warren Hinkle. At the Saturday evening service E. R. Davis gave a splendid sermon. Sunday morning a large crowd attended the prayer service which was of spiritual nature. The Sunday school hour followed with Brother Bevan addressing the young people and adults on the subject of priesthood. Leonard Holloway spoke at morning and evening preaching hours with a challenge which should cause everyone to "rise up and be done with lesser things." F. C. Bevan gave a stirring sermon at the afternoon session with the song, "Through the Furnace, Through the Heat," as his theme. Leonard Stiegel baptized little Barbara Ann McAdams and David Cox Sunday afternoon in the Rock Island font. They were confirmed Sunday under the hands of George McFarlane and L. W. Stiegel, and E. R. Davis delivered the charge.

DETROIT.—The annual conference of Detroit District convened at Lake Orion, Michigan Saturday, October 29, at 2.30 p. m., District President A. H. DuRose and his associates, Elders John Hall and Carlisle Whitehead, in charge. A business meeting was held and the following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Elder K. H. Green, of Detroit; associates, Elders A. B. Smith, of Detroit, and M. J. Crowley, of Pontiac; treasurer, J. Charles Mottashed, of Detroit; clerk, Myrtle E. Berndt, of Pontiac. Saturday evening Elder J. Charles Mottashed spoke from the theme, "Social Regeneration." Sunday morning at nine, Elders A. H. DuRose and K. H. Green were in charge of the prayer service. At the church school hour Elder M. J. Crowley spoke to the adults on "Education." Miss Mildred Hall and Mrs. Anis McBride, of Lake Orion, were in charge of the primary classes. Music for this service was supplied by musicians of Pontiac Branch. Frank Davis, of Orion, was ordained to the office of elder at this service. At eleven o'clock Elder David Dowker, of Detroit, used for his theme, "Opportunity," and music was rendered by Lake Orion singers. At two thirty Elder R. S. Salyards, of Independence, Missouri, was the speaker, and the choir from the Flint church gave a musical program. The Saturday meetings were held in the Saints' chapel on Broadway, and the Sunday services in the high school auditorium. The ladies of Lake Orion church served a chicken dinner Sunday noon at the church.

ALABAMA.—District conference was held at Lone Star Branch, October 8 and 9, opening with a prayer service at 9 a. m. followed by a business session at 11 a. m. There was recreation in the afternoon, and a contest between Pleasant Hill and Lone Star was very close. A musical recital was given at 6.30 p. m., each performer doing his part well. The violin solo by Morris Minard, accompanied at the piano by Willa Sellers, was repeated by request the next day. B. E. Barlow, the evening speaker, took for his text James 1: 27. On Sunday the program of activities was fittingly opened with a nine o'clock prayer meeting; church school at ten in charge of local officers. The morning speaker, H. H. Wiggins, took for his theme, "Weighed in the Balance and Found Wanting." A basket lunch at noon bountifully supplied everyone with food, and 1.30 p. m. everyone assembled in the church for more music. At two o'clock W. H. Drake was the speaker and his topic was "Keeping Fit." Then came an ordination service, D. E. Sellers offering the ordination prayer, H. H. Wiggins giving the charge to the candidates. E. W. Booker was ordained a priest by W. J. Williamson and D. E. Sellers; C. F. Brown was ordained priest by H. H. Wiggins and J. R. Harper; Mack Salter was ordained a teacher by B. E. Barlow and D. E. Sellers. Then Brother Sellers sang a solo, "Hark, the Voice of Jesus Calling," and the meeting closed with a good feeling. The next conference of Alabama District will be at Pleasant Hill, December 10 and 11. All Saints are invited to attend and especially the priesthood, for at this conference district officers will be elected. Brother J. G. Halb is expected to be present at this conference.

CENTRAL MICHIGAN.—Annual conference convened at Beaverton, Michigan, October 8, at 10 a. m. After the opening hymn, Elder G. W. Burt offered prayer. This was followed by singing "My Faith Looks Up to Thee." A motion unanimously prevailed that the district presidency preside over meeting. Minutes of previous conferences were read and approved. The next item of business was reading of reports. Branch reports and priesthood reports and other officers' reports were read and ordered spread on the minutes. Statistical reports from the following branches were then read and accepted: Tawas City, Bay City, Beaverton, Farwell, West Branch, Whittemore, Midland, Iosco, Gladwin, Bentley, and Houghton Lake. At this juncture the order of the meeting was changed in that further business was deferred until the afternoon session, and the balance of the forenoon was given over to short talks by the following: G. W. Burt, E. S. White, Matthew Umphrey, and Hubert Case. All gave inspirational talks. At 2 p. m., the afternoon session opened; prayer by E. S. White. Minutes of previous session were read and approved. Treasurer's report and auditor's report were then read. Motion prevailed that the reports be approved. The motion unanimously carried that visiting members be given voice and vote. A motion then prevailed that election of officers for the ensuing year be taken up: District President: Motion unanimously carried that we sustain the present incumbent, Elder Hubert Case. Elder Case then nominated two counselors, Elders E. S. White and Matthew Umphrey, and recommended same to conference for ratification. Motion so carried unanimously. Secretary: Motion unanimously carried that the present incumbent, Mrs. Winnie

M. Hulbert, be sustained. Treasurer: Motion carried to sustain the present incumbent, John Armstrong. Director of Religious Education: Several nominations were made for this office, resulting in the election of Lloyd McDonald, of Beaverton, Michigan. It was suggested and finally adopted that this director of Religious Education confer with district president and appoint four local helpers to assist in various parts of District. Superintendent of Department of Women: Nominations were made, resulting in the election of Mrs. Mabel Jordan, of Houghton Lake, Michigan. Musical Director: Motion unanimously carried that the present incumbent, C. M. Lambkin, be sustained. Bishop's agent: Motion prevailed that the present incumbent, Otto Bartlett, be sustained. Some communications were read from the First Presidency, after which the matter of reunion for 1933 was taken up. Motion prevailed that a reunion be held in Central Michigan in 1933. Motion also prevailed that time and place of this reunion be left in hands of a committee to be chosen at this conference, and report at the spring conference. The committee was then chosen as follows: G. W. Burt and Matthew Umphrey. These men to act with the district president, constituting reunion committee. Motion prevailed that this district invite Eastern and Detroit Districts to unite with us in this reunion. Motion carried that no charge be made for meals. Motion carried that the reunion committee be given full power to act, and effect such organization and arrangements as may be necessary. The following resolution was then presented to the conference: Whereas, some of the branches have failed to observe the action of a former conference, said action being that each branch send in last collection of each month for district expenses, and Whereas, such failure has seriously retarded the work of the district by not having sufficient funds on hand to meet current expenses, Therefore, BE IT RESOLVED that this conference recommend that each branch pay $1.00 per month into district treasury for such expenses.—C. M. Lambkin. Resolution moved: Substitute offered that the district president estimate and assess each branch its proportionate share of district expenses. Substitute carried. Motion prevailed that a letter of condolence be sent to the family of Brother Ben Burtch, who recently passed away. Brothers Case and White made some fitting remarks regarding the work for the coming year, after which adjournment was had. At 8 p. m. further items of business were taken up as follows: The name of Arthur Rogers was recommended for ordination to office of teacher. Recommendation approved and ratified by the conference. The names of Calvin Martin, of Saginaw, and Alger Wood, of Bay City, were recommended for ordination to office of deacon. These recommendations were also approved and ratified by the conference. Motion prevailed that we extend a rising vote of thanks to Beaverton Saints for their hospitality. Meeting adjourned.

Our Departed Ones

SCOTT.—Martha J. Scott was born in Penn Township, May 22, 1851. Lived in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, all her life. Was baptized into the church June 1, 1890. Died at her late residence in Pittsburgh October 25, 1932. Her husband preceded her in 1909. To them were born six children, three of whom are now living. Sister Scott was a faithful, Christian woman, beloved by all who knew her. Funeral service was held at her home by Elder E. B. Hull, assisted by the Reverend Luther Horne, of the Methodist Church South. Interment in Homewood Cemetery in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

ARNOLD.—Mary C. Conrad was born June 24, 1879. She married Charles W. Arnold July 10, 1904, and to them were born five children. Arbery, the oldest son, preceded her in death. The remaining children are Mrs. Florence Heishman, of Corydon; Mildard Arnold, Sellersburg; Mrs. Carl McKim, Ramsey, and Robert Arnold, Corydon. She is also survived by her husband, four grand children, other relatives, and many friends. Some months ago she underwent a serious operation from which she never recovered, and after weeks of suffering, death brought relief. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints June 24, 1917, being baptized by Elder L. C. Moore. She was a faithful member, never wavering in her belief, a devoted wife and mother. The funeral was held from the Methodist Episcopal Church in Lanesville, Indiana, October 30. The sermon was by Elder J. O. Dutton, and interment was in Lanesville Cemetery. More than four hundred friends crowded the church to participate in the last rites for Sister Arnold.

SKILLICORN.—Sarah Jane Skillicorn was born in Whithaven, Cumberland, England, January 3, 1857. She was the widow of William Skillicorn, who preceded her in death twenty years ago. To them were born thirteen children four of whom survive her death. They are Jackson, George, Annie, and Lucy. Also there are five grandchildren to mourn her death. The greater part of her life was spent in Douglas, Isle of Man. She came to this country thirteen years ago, and united with the church the following year, being baptized by Apostle G. T. Griffiths at Kirtland, Ohio. She passed peacefully away September 25, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John McNeil, in Cleveland. Her last hours were spent in company with her loved ones, singing her favorite gospel hymns. The funeral was conducted from the Saints' church in Cleveland, by Elder John L. Cooper. Interment was in the Temple Hill Cemetery, Kirtland, Ohio.

Says--

"Every Latter Day Saint family should take the Herald, and every member of the family should read it. It is our major church news organ and information medium, but it is infinitely more than that. It is the best means we have of exchanging greetings, ideas, ideals, and spiritual experiences between members of a larger family, the Church. It carries word of the great doings and great ideals and deep convictions from one Saint to another throughout the world. It is ours in a better sense than any other periodical can be ours. We should read it, write for it, recommend it."

Seeing the Truth

Not long ago I read a story of a woman who had been, during the high-flying days of the nation's greatest prosperity, one of the proudest of New York's wealthiest social set. Pride had made her a snob, and she was known among all her friends as one of the most imperious of women. Following the debacle of the stock market crash, her family found itself stripped of its fortunes and actually facing want. Now she is a cashier in a New York restaurant where formerly she would have disdained to eat. The few of her old friends who see her nowadays say that she is a completely changed woman. She has become human. She is kindly. And she is not bitter about the loss of her fortune. She is quoted as saying: "My trouble was looking at the world through a lorgnette." And the lenses in that lorgnette were made of something more than mere glass; they were pride and arrogance. Fortunate woman that she could give them up. Fortunate woman that she had the intelligence to be human, to resign herself to life and accept her fate gracefully.

Sometimes it takes just such bitter experiences to bring us to an understanding of the real character of life. In times of prosperity we often live for wrong philosophies and wrong ideals. But adversity brings us to understand the truth.

It is not always the person who has a glib explanation for everything, a ready-made philosophy of life, that really knows the truth. One may leave a painted canvas screen depicting a sunset with a perfect verbal description of it; and the same person will turn from a real sunset painted on the screen of the western sky speechless and silent. From great experiences of contact with the truth, men turn away stammering and incoherent, for they know that the truth itself is something far too big for them. It is those who have never perceived the truth that think they know so much about the facts.

If you like gossip, lean over this way, and the Pigeon will spill a little of it in your ear. There is a new serial story planned for the Herald in the near future, entitled, "Riches Untold." The author? —Well, we aren't telling that, just yet. Suffice it to say that she has lived in the good old Center Place long enough to know a Few Things about the way people live and act and get along with each other. And there are a number of rather pretty problems involved in the various chapters of the story. If you take our advice you will see that there is nothing the matter with your Herald subscription.

Somebody's hungry dog is always tipping over the garbage can looking for something to eat. He ought to be discouraged by this time, finding nothing but orange rinds and milk-bottle caps. Wonder who these tender-hearted people are that keep a dog because they love pets and starve him because they are stingy? It is our notion that a real lover of animals would either take care of the dog and make him comfortable, or put him out of his present misery.

This Week We Begin—

This week we begin an educational effort for the people of the church. On the two pages that follow this the reader will find the work of the artist combined with that of the printer to present the cause of the church in vivid form. Each succeeding week the effort will be continued.

The officers of the church solicit the cooperation of the pastors in this great and highly necessary work. It is suggested that those who are preaching on the coming Sunday (November 27) may very well take the picture and the text accompanying it as material for a sermon to the people, using it as a foundation for his remarks. This is suggested only, but it is suggested because of the necessity confronting the church.

It might be well to cut the picture out and display it on the bulletin board at the inside door of the church, or to have a large sign or card made like it to place before the pulpit during the Sunday morning sermon.

A particular point which I think we common people may reasonably require of our world money-credit system and those in expert control of it is that it should work as a restraint upon war. For that, manifestly, it needs a consciousness of itself as a world factor and a common conception of its role in human life. If it had that, it could act as a most powerful brake upon war preparations. That indeed—that want of a consciousness of itself as a world factor—is what I am driving at in all this discourse.

The money-credit organization of the world is the center of power in human affairs and it is no good for bankers to go on pretending and imagining they are a lot of irresponsible, innocent, honorable, trustworthy gentlemen who just want to be let alone to take charge of other people's money and lend it on sound security. . . .

In the application of big business and world finance to the creation of one organized world community lies the possibility of a world philosophy by which a great number of energetic and influential men may direct their lives and work in harmony. But their work has to be done with open eyes. A world philosophy that never gets beyond annual addresses to stockholders, after-dinner talks, vague allusions and private meditations will not stand the strain of this adventure.—H. G. Wells.

Renewed Vitality

A most encouraging thing to observe in the church and its work these days is the evidence of the vitality of faith and the interest in the work that is manifested by the people. Almost crushed for a time by the consciousness of the many difficulties to be faced, the church people found it hard to readjust themselves to the new financial program and the greater sacrifices that the necessities of the church placed upon them.

But the people are rallying. There is a spirit of courage and hope, a resurgence of faith and devotion, that returns one's confidence in the unconquerable spirit of the church. The work of the women recently in their sacrifice is one manifestation of a strong will to free the church of its burdens. This is only one sign. Another is the growing power and church-consciousness of the young people. And there are others.

In spite of the dark times, in spite of the difficulties encountered, we are strong in hope and faith. It has been a time of trial and spiritual cleansing, but our suffering has brought us to our knees and closer to God.

Our Mistakes

What are some of the mistakes that we, as citizens of our country and of the world, are making every day? What are the things of which we ought to repent? Can we take inventory of the operative forces of our lives and see if we have the equipment of sane and well-balanced lives? Yes, we can; and the task is not difficult if we may devote a little time to it.

We should overcome selfishness; we should conquer pride and vanity. We defraud ourselves until we have learned to deal impartially with truth as if we had no personal advantage to gain from it. We must keep our minds out of the gutters of life, and use them as vessels for clean thoughts. Anything that harms us or lessens our powers, physically, mentally or morally, is a sin, and should be abandoned. Anything that brings unhappiness to others, or causes them pain is a sin and should be abandoned. The operation of the principle of repentance will cause us to live for the highest and best for ourselves and for our fellow men.

Remember

REMEMBER the past. Remember its lessons, its opportunities, its blessings, its sacrifices. The brute creation reflects very little; men are supposed to remember. To the animals the past is only a blur, and the future is not even a source of speculation; they live like opportunists—only for the present. Whatever acts they perform in preparation for the future seem to be instinctive, the gift of Providence. Men are not supposed to be like that, but too often they are like that. Men are supposed to be better than the animals—wiser, more provident—they are supposed to have memories. Under the Spirit of God men have arisen, and do arise to heights where they can learn from history and apply its lessons to the present. We believe that this is true of our people.

Remember Palmyra. Remember the great things that were revealed there, the spiritual blessings the men of the church experienced. Remember the courage and the faith of their brave venture. Remember their dedication of life, their consecration of talent, all given in response to the command of a great vision.

Remember Kirtland. Remember the joy and ecstasy of the gathering there. Remember the outpouring of the Spirit they enjoyed, the more than Pentecostal blessings.

Remember Fishing River. Remember their suffering, their prayers rising out of the ashes of burned homes, out of defeat and humiliation. Remember their fortitude and faith surviving disaster.

Remember Haun's Mill. Remember the massacre, and what the people died for who died there. Remember the principles and faith for which they had the courage to die.

Remember Far West. Remember it as the scene of early missionary effort, as the scene of an attempt to build again after the disaster in Zion, as the scene of yet further trials through which faith lived to triumph.

Remember Nauvoo, the flowering of the hope of the early church. Remember its virtues and strength, as well as its weaknesses. Remember its energy, its industry, its consecration to the tasks of its time. Remember the blessings enjoyed in the few short years there.

Remember Carthage, the scene of the martyrdom, and the "dark and cloudy day" that was inaugurated by the injustice and inhumanity of what occurred there. Remember it as a grim and solemn warning of what things human depravity can lead men to do. Remember how the church was scattered and driven by what happened there.

Remember Amboy. Remember the persistence and faithfulness of the little group who met there to call to their leadership "Young Joseph," the son of the founder of the church.

All these memories motivate us to one thing—to "carry on." "The work of the church must go on," has been a slogan on many lips. It is the thought of many hearts. Many a sacrifice and many an offering will be made in order that it might be fulfilled.

Are you one of those who will serve the church today?

NEWS BRIEFS

Busy Season for the Church

Frequently one hears the remark, "This is the busiest season of the year!" And, strictly speaking, it is a very busy season for the church.

During the fall branches near and far have observed Rally Day, Promotion Day, College Day, the Joseph Smith Centennial, and other special occasions. Some have enjoyed one-day and two-day meetings and institutes; others, special missionary services. Graceland had her Home-coming. The Harvest Home Festival movement was widespread. And right now the districts are holding their conferences.

But the church must not forget. Tomorrow opens the special Sacrifice Period which is to continue until the Christmas Holidays. During this time all loyal members are called to remember the needs of the church in personal and group sacrifice, in prayer, and in consecration.

Plymouth Historic in More Than One Respect

Plymouth, Massachusetts, is nationally known as a historic center, but now it is growing historic in a church sense, too. This year marks the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Plymouth Branch. At the business meeting in October a committee was appointed to write the branch's history. The exact date of the anniversary was July 18.

New Hymnals Are Anniversary Gift for Chatham

On its thirtieth anniversary Chatham Branch, Ontario, was presented a gift of sixty new Saints' Hymnals by the local department of women. The presentation of the gift took place during the church school hour, October 23.

Speakers at the special services of the day were Elder R. S. Salyards and Bishop J. C. Dent.

Apostle G. G. Lewis and Family Soon to Arrive in Australia

Apostle G. G. Lewis, his wife, Edith, and little daughter, Alice June, are expected to arrive in Australia early in December, according to a note in The Gospel Standard (paper of the Australasian Mission). Possibly they will conduct classes at the Tiona Reunion, held near Christmas time.

When Apostle and Sister Lewis sailed from the United States, August 31, they planned to spend one month working with the native Saints in Tahiti, a short time in New Zealand, then on to Australia. But a recent cablegram to officials in Australia informed them of a change in the missionaries' plans. They spent two months in Tahiti, and plan to be in New Zealand two weeks, from which they will sail to Sydney, Australia.

Radio Speaker Reads Book of Mormon

Pastor John F. Sheehy, of Independence, the early morning week-day speaker over KMBC, Kansas City, has for the past eleven months been reading and discussing the New Testament. This reading he finished the morning of November 18, and on Monday morning, this week, began reading the Book of Mormon to his radio listeners.

Pastor Sheehy and Brother Paul N. Craig each morning have charge of the fifteen-minute devotional service from the Stone Church studio, beginning at seven o'clock, "John" speaking and "Paul" at the organ. This broadcast is KMBC's "Good-morning" to the radio world.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey Holds Special Series at Tulsa, Oklahoma

Elder J. W. A. Bailey conducted five weeks of special missionary meetings in Tulsa Branch during October and early November. Ample and intensive preparations had been made for this series by local Saints.

For three weeks a congregation averaging one hundred and forty people listened to sermons from the prophets and history of the Bible. At the end of that time they voted for him to continue two more weeks. Then he supplemented his talks on the Book of Mormon and life of Christ with pictures. His closing sermon, November 6, was given to two hundred and fifty people.

In the late summer and early fall Colorado Saints profited from Brother Bailey's liberal use of charts and maps to illustrate his sermons.

Things Are Happening

Among recent general church workers on the Pacific Coast have been President Elbert A. Smith and Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry in and around Los Angeles, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder Arthur Oakman in and near San Francisco.

The branch at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, has lately lost some members. The economic depression has compelled several families to trek north to the homestead region.

Elder William I. Flegg is very busy in his field, New York District. Not long ago he took a helpful part in the district conference at Sherrill, and was the principal speaker at the Buffalo Branch Joseph Smith Centennial services.

◆◆◆ "Like a Father" ◆◆◆

By Evan A. Fry

"For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone."—Psalm 91: 11, 12.

I saw a trivial incident recently which inspired the thoughts of this sermon. I was walking along Kansas City's Main Street at its most thickly crowded portion, during the height of the afternoon shopping rush, and the crush of the crowd was disconcerting enough for even a thoroughly experienced adult. For the little fellow I saw approaching between his father and mother, the crowd must have been little short of appalling. But was he frightened? No, for he had his mother's hand clutched tightly in his own three-year-old one, and his father was within reaching distance on the other side. Just before the party passed me, the little fellow stumbled—I never did see why—and only his grip on his mother's hand saved him from a catastrophe. As it was, his mother's other hand was full of bundles, and for a second or two the young man dangled perilously while he tried to get both feet planted firmly on the pavement again so as to continue his journey.

A peculiar expression crossed his face. He was trying so hard to be a full-fledged man, and to stand on his own feet and make his own way through the crowd. He was half ashamed of himself for being so inexperienced and awkward as to stumble right in the midst of a crowd of spectators. He wasn't just sure how Mother and Dad were going to take it either, for they were both in a hurry, and had little time to wait for small boys who stumbled. But in the fraction of a second during which he dangled from Mother's supporting hand, Father reached out from the other side, grasped the other hand, restored his equilibrium, and set him back on his own two feet. And best of all, as the little man looked around at the source of this unexpected help, he was greeted with a smile on the face of the big man, which promptly found its reflection in the face of the son. The puzzled, half ashamed, and bewildered look disappeared, and wreathed in smiles, the whole party went on towards what must have been a very happy home.

I could not help admiring that father and mother. There was no anger—no impatience because son had stumbled—no arm jerking or face slapping such as is an all too common sight on downtown streets—and this in spite of the quite obvious fact that both parents were in a tremendous hurry, and in no mood to be delayed by clumsy little boys. There was no insulting the child's dignity by forcibly picking him up and carrying him, though he was amply small to have justified such measures. Neither did he have to cry out for help; his father was watching, and as soon as help was needed, he was prompt to give it—freely, willingly, and smilingly, as man to man, not condescendingly or patronizingly, as man to child.

I was reminded again of the oft repeated lesson of Christ for his disciples—that God is our Father, and that as a father pities his children, so the Lord pities them that fear him. I thought, too, that perhaps that little boy was the type of all mankind of all ages. We are all in a tremendous hurry these days to go somewhere—we are not always just sure where. We try so hard to be self-sufficient—to stand on our own feet—to walk alone—to find our way through the crowded mazes of our fast moving existence unaided. We are always bewildered by the rush of the world about us; we are always a little hesitant about which way to take. And every now and then in spite of our best precautions and our most elaborate pains, our feet do stumble, and we fall, sometimes to rise again—sometimes to be crushed by the feet of unheeding brethren.

Sometimes we stumble over a temptation which lies in our way, perhaps an obvious one, perhaps one as imperceptible as the nothingness over which the small boy of my story stumbled. Perhaps we stumble over the misdeeds or the faults or the shortcomings of another whom we have always regarded as a paragon of virtue. Perhaps we stumble over the letter of the law, and neglect to see the clear path that points us to the spirit of the law. Perhaps a devastating sorrow brings us low, or perhaps we merely become tired and worn out with the single-handed struggle of life, and sink down too exhausted to go farther alone.

In any of these situations, God is beside us just as this earthly father was beside his son in his moment of need. We do not even need to cry out; all we need to do is to reach out—to stretch forth our hand. We shall always find that God's hand is extended more than half way to us in love and mercy and pity, and that he is ready to help us all the rest of the way if we will only trust him. He will not scold us or frown upon us because we stumbled once; he is our Father, and we are his well-beloved children upon whom his smiles and his sympathetic understanding will be bestowed so long as we willingly receive them.

◆◆◆ The Evolution of Human Rights ◆◆◆

By A. B. Phillips

The greatest problem that ever confronted the human race is a matter that has never yet been solved to its satisfaction. I refer to the problem of determining and protecting the rights of individuals and society. This problem has been studied for many ages by the world's greatest thinkers—philosophers, lawyers, statesmen, educators, theologians, historians, socialists, industrial workers, and others; but the conclusions of each type of students do not agree with the others. Neither have the convictions of any particular class remained the same from age to age, but with the passage of time and experience a distinct change of opinions in some important respects may be observed.

It is true that certain aspects of this great problem have appeared in much the same light in all ages of which we have adequate history, but others have changed greatly in the concepts of the people from time to time, and in some respects they have come to hold an importance that for many centuries was little recognized. This is particularly true concerning the rights of the individual and of society as related to each other, and the rights of the person as against all others. The most enlightened nations have for some time been trending toward more pronounced views of social supremacy, but the wide difference of opinions existing have overturned governments, confiscated properties, caused the destruction of people and of morals, and produced unrest and disintegration in many places.

FAMOUS DECLARATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

In various critical or revolutionary periods attempts have been made to define the rights of the people in certain respects, because of the great pressure of public opinion which had been aroused. Generally such opinions developed out of periods of injustice and oppression, and could hardly be expected to express themselves very much outside of the sphere which engendered them. Quite naturally, therefore, they gave voice only to the more pressing aspects of the subject confronting them at that time. For this reason history does not record any single pronouncement which attempts to cover all of the rights which mankind possess, neither are they by any means entirely stated.

One of the famous expressions of this nature was the English Declaration and Bill of Rights adopted by Parliament in 1689, which transferred to that body certain powers that it was felt had been abused by the King, by whom they had previously been exercised. This bill affirmed what was termed "true, ancient, and indubitable rights of the people," among them being that it is lawful to petition the sovereign, a right that we of today can hardly believe would have been denied. The free election of Parliament, and freedom of debate were maintained, and the forfeiture of estates before the offender was convicted was prohibited, as were also excessive fines or cruel punishments.

Seventy-six years later, or in 1765, a Declaration of Rights and Liberties was drawn up by an American congress representing nine states, and eleven years afterward our famous Declaration of Independence was adopted. It is evident that this great question was agitating a great portion of the civilized world, and in France it took the form of a declaration of the Rights of Man, a celebrated document that was adopted by the French National Assembly in 1779, only three years after our own Independence was declared. The French declaration affirmed that all men are born and remain equal in rights; that members of the state shall bear public burdens according to ability; and that everyone is free to write or speak, but is responsible for abuse of the right.

ALL RIGHTS INVOLVE RESPONSIBILITIES

Reflection will convince any one that there can be no right existing without a definite responsibility pertaining to it. For instance, a right must be defined. This means that it has specific limitations, and the one possessing it is responsible for violating those limitations, just as surely as others are responsible for doing so. A right that can not be defined has no practical existence; but when defined, responsibility for its abuse arises, as affirmed in the French declaration. Without the fixing of responsibility it would be impossible to protect or maintain any human right. The willful disregard of responsibility has been the chief cause of the world's misery, for those who keep within their rights do not harm anyone. The Roman philosopher Epictetus stated this truth in the first century of the Christian era, when he declared:

"If you take for your own only that which is your own, and view what belongs to others just as it really is, then no one will ever compel you, no one will restrict you, you will find fault with no one; . . . no one will hurt you, you will not have an enemy, nor will you suffer any harm."—World's Best Literature, volume 10, page 5505.

◆◆◆ The Gifts and the Fruits ◆◆◆

By R. S. Budd .

IN HIS SERMON on the Mount Christ in a very clear, definite manner points out that those who are his disciples will be known not by words or phrases used but by a particular type of performance which will produce certain recognizable results in the lives of those claiming discipleship. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." Jesus was willing to apply this same test to himself. In reply to John's question, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" he gave this answer, "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them."

Our failures are many times a result of our becoming satisfied when we receive gifts, not appreciating that these gifts are only to assist us in the development of fruit, which is the goal fixed for us by Christ. It appears that people in Paul's day, as well as in our modern age, were more interested in gifts than fruits. To the Corinthians Saints Paul states: "Concerning spiritual gifts—I would not have you ignorant," but in his letter to the Galatian Saints he describes the fruits of the Spirit quite in detail. There is a great difference in gifts and fruit.

A gift is something given to or bestowed upon an individual. It may or may not represent merit on the part of the one receiving it. Spiritual gifts, like talents, are bestowed upon us by God, not necessarily because of anything we may have done to merit them. They are gifts which God expects us to use in the development of character, the establishment of his kingdom, the producing of fruit individually and collectively which will determine our discipleship.

Fruit implies labor, use, something produced, an effect, the result of experience. God's gifts make possible the development and determine the kind of fruit. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Upon a peach tree is bestowed the gift of producing peaches but the production is determined by the performance of the tree in using the gifts. Upon a Latter Day Saint is bestowed the gifts of producing the fruits of the Spirit, but the product is determined by his performance in the use of the gifts. Men, like trees, are marked by their fruit.

As an example consider a fruit tree laden with delicious fruit and a Christmas tree covered with beautiful presents. The fruit represents labor, the use of powers, bestowed upon it by its creator. It has sent its roots down deep into the earth to gather the substance essential to producing fruit, and has labored against the laws of gravity to lift that substance, in the form of sap to the topmost branches where the fruit is perfected. It must also labor against the elements, insects, etc., and when its fruit is removed it has power to reproduce it. The Christmas tree equal to or surpassing the peach tree in beauty has nothing to boast of but gifts, and its gifts do not determine what kind of a tree it is. It can only support the beauty bestowed upon it by others. When its beauty is removed it has not power to reproduce it, and is soon of no value but for firewood. Those who accept the gifts of the gospel and do not labor to produce the fruit of the Spirit are like the Christmas tree. "Ye shall know them by their fruits."

Since the church is the bride of Christ it is reasonable to expect him to bestow gifts upon it. Such is in keeping with the nature of man and our well-established customs. When a man ceases to bestow gifts upon his bride it is evidence of unfaithfulness on the part of the bride or groom. When Christ ceases to bestow gifts it is evidence of unfaithfulness on the part of the church, his bride.

The gospel, which "is the power of God unto salvation," is a gift of God according to Paul's statement in Ephesians 2: 8. "To as many as believed on him, to them gave he power to become Sons of God." The gift of the gospel to man is like the gift of producing peaches is to the peach tree. It offers an opportunity to labor, using the gift bestowed to produce the fruit desired. Our salvation is not determined by the gift but by our performance and use of the gift in producing the fruit.

A farmer is not only a man who lives in the country and has certain notions or ideals about sowing and reaping, the raising of stock, etc. A farmer is a man who prepares the soil for planting, and plants the seed and cares for the plants in such a way that grain is produced, and that breeds and feeds animals in such a way as to profit from the increase. A lot of men are called farmers that are not farmers at all—they have gifts to farm but have not produced the fruits, and "ye shall know them by their fruits." The same test can be applied to prophets, apostles, evangelists, pastors, teachers, Saints.

The greatest gift that came through the Restoration was the priesthood, the right to represent God to the people and to represent the people to God.

A call to the priesthood is a great honor, a gift bestowed upon men by God, an opportunity to work for God in the preparation of a people to meet Christ at his coming. "Many are called but few are chosen." God does the calling, extends the gift, but each individual does his own choosing. The choosing is determined by performance after the gift is received. The test is the way he uses this most precious gift, first in building his own character and then in assisting others to build character.

Jeremiah was not a prophet because God sanctified him before his birth, but because he functioned in the office for which he was sanctified, neither was Isaiah prophet because he saw the Lord and heard him say, "Whom will I send, and who will go for me?" and answered, "Here am I, send me," but because he went forth in answer to the call and in harmony with his answer acted as the call implied. The thing that caused Jonah to be listed with the prophets was not the request from God that he go or the ride he took with the fish but his going and declaring God's message to the Ninevites. Joseph Smith was a prophet not because he accepted God's call, but because he gave his time and talents to the task of building and establishing the kingdom of God on earth and performing in keeping with God's advice and counsel.

Peter and Andrew were not apostles because Jesus called them from their nets and said, "Come follow me and I will make you fishers of men," but because they went forth and ministered to mankind witnessing for Jesus, doing the works of apostles. Paul was not an apostle because it was spoken, "Separate me Barnabas and Paul for the work whereunto I have called them," but because he heeded the call, went forth and preached the gospel in harmony with Christ's statement in Luke 4: 18: "To preach the gospel to the poor; . . . to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

When John was in prison he sent one of his disciples to Jesus to determine whether he was the Christ. To convince John that he was the Christ Jesus did not trace his lineage showing his right to occupy neither did he attempt to prove that God had called him to that particular office. He simply suggested to the disciples that they tell John what he was doing, what fruit he was bearing, and when John beheld the fruit he knew he was the Christ.

A boy may be called to the football field by the coach but the way he performs will determine his getting on the team. The amount of practicing he has done will determine the skill of his performance. We are all called to be Saints but the manner of our performance will determine our being chosen to occupy. We are really facing the tryout now, as President Smith has put it, "the sifting time." Those on the ball team are required to practice continually to keep themselves fit so that they may produce the fruits of the game. God has said to us in Doctrine and Covenants 46: 9, "Practice virtue and holiness before me continually." Our difficulty is that we do not practice and therefore can not produce the fruit necessary for a demonstration before the world that this is indeed the church of Christ with blessings equal to those when John sent his disciples to inquire.

Sometimes I go into a branch and inquire for those holding priesthood. They are pointed out to me as elder, priest, teacher, deacon. I ask for the evidence and am referred to the call by the Spirit and ordination by the laying on of hands. But I ask where is the fruit of priesthood? Does this elder preach, teach, expound, exhort, baptize? Does he watch over the church and take the lead of meetings? Does this priest preach, teach, expound, exhort? Does he visit the houses of each member exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret? Does this teacher watch over the church always and be with and strengthen them and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting nor evil speaking? "Does he see that the members do their duty?" Does he invite all to come to Christ? Does this deacon act as a standing minister? Does he watch over the church?

A janitor performs certain tasks, such as sweeping floors, building fires, dusting furniture, etc. The performance of these tasks makes him a janitor, and a refusal to perform, although some one may have called upon him to be a janitor, denies him the right to the title. The offices of prophet, apostle, high priest, seventy, bishop, evangelist, elder, priest, teacher and deacon require certain acts or performances and a refusal on the part of any one to function should deny him the privilege of using the title. He who shrinks from the responsibility of priesthood should also be relieved of the honor. "Ye shall know them by their fruits [performance]."

If the shepherds fail to keep watch over the sheep, it is to be expected that the sheep will suffer hunger and be torn by the wolves as well as failing in many ways to develop as the owner might desire and has a right to expect. If the husbandman fails to prune the tree and cultivate the ground about it the owner can not hope to obtain a good quality of fruit. If the priesthood become "overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness and cares (pleasures) of this life," neglecting to care for the souls intrusted to them, failing to use the gifts bestowed upon them, the members can not bear the fruit

◆◆◆ Bread of Life ◆◆◆

By Gladys Mae Smith

HE WAS young and arrogant, and whistled as he worked. He cocked his round, white cap at a jaunty angle and balanced a tray of aromatic concoctions on the wide spread fingers of his left hand.

From her position at the sealer deftly tucking the flaky, brown loaves into their wrappers, Jane Huston smiled quietly at the tuneless melody.

"Everything has always been so easy for him," she thought and sighed. Aloud she said as he came into the room.

"Your bread is lovely this morning, Ferdie."

"Yeah? Thanks. You're looking at the world's champeen baker. What do you think?"

Jane laughed and snapped the electric switch.

"I think you're terribly conceited, Ferd Mason," she replied.

"Conceited?" he asked in exaggerated amazement and thrust his hands into the pockets of his white jacket. "Conceited! Well, why not? Men like me feed the world."

She looked at him thoughtfully. In spite of his egotism he was only an irresistible boy. But there were little puffs around his mocking grey eyes, and his chin was not as firm as Jane might have wished.

"Man can not live by bread alone," she quoted and held his gaze with her serious glance. He smiled suddenly, reached out a long arm to twist her ear where the soft brown hair parted over it.

"Besides being a prune, Jane," he said whimsically, "you should have been born a boy. You'd make an excellent preacher—like my mother."

Jane stacked the freshly wrapped, fragrant loaves in a neat row inside the wide glass case.

"I consider that a real compliment, Ferdie," she laughed up at him and wrinkled her nose. While most girls floundered abashed and tongue-tied in Ferdie Mason's magnetic presence, Jane had dared, since her pinafore days, to wrinkle her small nose in disagreement of his airy views.

"I can't think of a person I'd rather be like than your mother. I suppose you're going home to spend Thanksgiving with her?"

He moved restlessly a pace. His lower lip protruded in a boyish pout.

"Thanksgiving? What is it? Gobble the gobbler, indigest mince meatless pies. Blah! Thanksgiving doesn't mean a thing in my young life. It's just another day to me."

"It shouldn't be," she reproved gently, "It was the day to our ancestors at Plymouth Rock, a day of rejoicing in the mercies and blessings of God. You have so much for which to be grateful, Ferdie Mason—youth, health, ability . . ."

The half smile on his curving lips set, became cynical.

"Don't forget to mention the salary cut I got last week," he remarked bitterly.

"Oh, Ferdie, you still have a job even if Mr. Minden did find it necessary to reduce your wages." He made an impatient gesture.

"Well, you haven't noticed that my work has been reduced."

"Business is bad. Be reasonable," she pleaded, "Think of the vast army of unemployed, many of them married men with dependent families. You're lucky, Ferdie, really lucky." With lightning-like rapidity, his mood changed. He bowed low from the hips with lithe grace.

"Little original Pollyanna, aren't you, Janie?" he teased, swung on his heel and departed as blithely as he had entered.

Jane gazed after his retreating form with vague misgivings. Always, even as a small boy, he had been like that—a contradiction between tempest and sunshine. He was more than versatile; he was as changeless as the wind.

"He's so selfish, so inconsistent," she sighed, "He should be developing some stability of character."

THERE were two reasons why Jane had accepted a position in The Willow Creek Steam Bakery. One was that she needed money to develop a talent that God had given her. Her golden voice that sang the gospel message with such sincerity needed toning, perfecting. Bubs, her youthful brother, was in high school. Aunt Louise, her father's maiden sister, had come to make her home with them. Jane was no longer needed to make the mechanical wheels of home go round. After years of unstinting service to those she loved, she was free at last to live her own life, to plan for her own future.

"That little ole six per won't go far in music, Dad," she talked it over with her father, "But it'll help me to sneak in a few vocal lessons. Oh, Daddy, to think that my chance would come right in this terrible depression . . . Well, I don't believe in Santa Claus, but," she said it reverently in a hushed voice, "I do believe in God."

The other reason, strangely enough, was Ferdie Mason. And back of her concern for the boy himself was a stronger incentive—a humble, little grey-haired mother whose Christ-like character had cast a very definite impression upon the mind of a young girl.

"You might be able to influence him if you work with him, Janie," she urged with pathetic hopefulness, "He'd be more likely to listen to one of his own generation. He isn't a bad boy at heart, but he's weak. There are so many temptations that he can't resist."

And in the weeks since she had taken up her duties in the same establishment where Ferdie Mason was also employed, Jane had been appalled by the boy's gay wanderings down the primrose path of pleasure. His pals, self confident, debonair, loafed around the bake shop in Mr. Minden's absence, and Jane could not help hearing things. Furtive whisperings, ribald insinuations, they were, low voiced murmurings of liquor, road houses, gay night life.

"You can't break the laws of God without breaking yourself, Ferdie," she sought to warn him. But he refused to be serious; turned his trouser pockets inside out.

"What more can a man be after he's broke, Jane?" he laughed.

"Much more," she told him with meaning, "He can be devoid of honor."

"Oh, don't be like that," he scolded, "You've got me wrong. I'm not going too far. I know when to stop."

Jane faced him squarely.

"You're only kidding yourself, Ferdie, when you think that you have anything to do with it. When you tamper with the powers of Satan they drag you down, destroy you."

INDIAN summer broke, and indications of winter set in. The wind blew in a gale for two days followed by gloomy weather and flakes of snow. Mr. Minden was confined to his home several days preceeding Thanksgiving with a severe cold.

Jane, harrassed and conscientious over a business with which she was not familiar, assumed the responsibility with all the courage that had heretofore marked her young life. She was learning most of the tricks of the trade. Mrs. Whitney liked her rye bread without caraway seed; old man Duntley, proprietor of Ye Olde Inn, for strictly business reasons, preferred the smaller buns.

And she was learning more of the caprices of the young baker, Ferdie Mason. As his dissipation increased, he became morose; more frequently inclined to unreasonable fits of pique. He took advantage of Mr. Minden's absence to vent his irritation in detail upon the establishment in general. But for Jane's cajoling, persuasive management, his work in the bake shop would have suffered much.

Then one morning she found him asleep upon the trough; he was still wearing his overcoat and his breath was thick with alcohol. It was nearly eight o'clock, and the bread should have been out of the oven. Jane's growing apprehension turned to alarm.

"Oh, Ferdie, please snap out of it. We've got to take care of the trade. You'll lose your job."

"Just let that old bird try to fire me," he threatened darkly, and Jane said no more.

THE DAY before Thanksgiving, Jane learned that her employer had recuperated to the extent that he would be down that afternoon. A load seemed to roll off her shoulders, and she set to work with a song on her lips to tidy up the shop in anticipation of his return.

When she was dusting the cash register she thought of it—the bag that contained fifty dollars in bills which she had not had a chance to deposit the evening before. She glanced at her wrist watch; it was a quarter past nine. She would have time to run over to the bank before she washed the cases. Then she opened the compartment where she had carefully stowed the money away. The little black bag was gone.

"Why, I know I put it right there," she mused aloud in consternation and begun a vain search of every nook and corner.

"It must be there," she reiterated, "Why, no one knew it was in here except myself and Ferdie."

Through the wide glass doors, she could see Ferdie's white garbed figure moving methodically about his duties. This morning she had been puzzled by his silent furtive glances. As she stood now groping for some explanation of the money's disappearance, he raised his eyes in an oblique glance toward the front shop and moistened his lips in a nervous gesture. There was something in his manner that pierced Jane with a sudden fear.

"Oh, no," she whispered, agonized and put up her hand as though to ward off a blow, "Ferdie wouldn't do that. He wouldn't." But even as she tried to convince herself that he was not guilty, she somehow knew in her heart that he was.

"A thief!" She gasped the words and went white. "Ferdie Mason, a thief!" She sank weakly into the desk chair and put a hand over her eyes.

In rapid succession a series of pictures passed before her mental vision: Ferdie Mason, proud and chubby, in new two strapped boots, a lovable child of seven; Ferdie Mason, tall and handsome in cap and gown on his graduation night; Ferdie Mason in immaculate white, efficient and assured, the trusted employee of one of the best small town bakeries in the state.

In imagination she saw another picture. The same Ferdie Mason it was, but this time in dishonor and stripes, a victim of the wiles of Satan, beaten, remorseful but helpless in the consequences of his own sin. And there quivering in the background of them all was a little grey-haired woman—a mother, who, regardless of cost to self, would walk by the side of her erring boy to the very doors of the prison itself.

Jane put out her hand involuntarily and drew her handbag across the desk. Mechanically, she extracted a small bank book from its depth. There were numerous entries on its pages that represented her frugal living and her desire to serve God. She scanned each one closely, lovingly. Totaled the columns with precise care.

"I won't do it," she said emphatically aloud, "He'll have to take the consequences."

She heard the door at the back open and close quietly. The very silence, the missing whistle note, smote her with pain. Very slowly she arose to her feet still holding the little bank book in her hand. Suddenly she raised it to her lips.

"Good-bye, vocal lessons," she said tremulously, and there were tears in her eyes. Snapping the night lock in place and clutching the book in her palm, she went purposefully across the street to the bank.

Thanksgiving Day dawned upon a world clothed in virgin whiteness.

"How beautiful," exulted Jane, drinking in the fairy beauty of the landscape from her bedroom window, "What a beautiful Thanksgiving Day."

Mr. Minden had asked her to work until noon. After that Karl would call to drive her to her country home where the Thanksgiving dinner was to be spread. Inez would be there and Buck and Buds and Dad. And Karl . . . Jane's spirits soared with pure joy in living.

Ferdie was awaiting her arrival when she came into the shop. He wore his overcoat and fumbled his hat in his hands. It was their first meeting since the unpleasant incident the day before.

"Going somewhere, Ferdie?" she asked quietly to help him over his apparent embarrassment.

"Home, to spend Thanksgiving with my mother."

There was a white line around his young lips; his eyes were grave and very humble.

"Jane," he said and his voice broke, "You're the best pal a fellow ever had." She tried to laugh, to ease the tension.

"Then you do have something for which to be thankful after all?"

He reached out an unsteady hand and thrust a roll of bills into her own.

"Jane," he choked, "I was crazy . . . I didn't know what I was doing. We boys had been gambling, I lost. I had a grudge against Minden for reducing my wages. I thought of the money in the register . . . I must have been nerts . . ."

There was something very touching about his contrite confession. It was so strangely at variance with his usual egotistical manner.

"I coughed up to Mr. Winston at the bank . . . pleaded with him to loan me enough to replace it. Then he told me that you had withdrawn your savings and deposited to Mr. Minden's account. Gee, Janie, what must you think of me . . . what do you think of me?"

"I think, Ferdie Mason, that you are the world's champeerd baker. What do you think?"

"I think," he said humbly, "that there is one recipe with which I mean to familiarize myself. That is the bread of life."

The Grace of God

By James E. Bishop

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."

Continuous with human experience there has been mental sickness or unsoundness of mind. Paul, the master exponent of the grace of God, points the way of deliverance.

In literature, Biblical and classical, medieval and modern, we find descriptions of large numbers of cases of decided unsoundness of mind.

In the Bible we read of Saul's unbalanced condition in which he visited the woman of Endor and from that unlawful source he received certain information. He was driven from the sound methods of inspiration by prophet or by Urim and Thummim. He became crazed for information and proposed to get it at any price. The reason for his condition of mind was his departure from truth. One may read of the mighty Nebuchadnezzar and his reduction to an animal condition. His disintegration of mind came from an insane pride in which he gloated over his accomplishment in building the city of Babylon. In the New Testament there are various descriptions of mental sickness. There is the case of the young man whom the disciples failed to heal, but whom Jesus did heal. It is said that oftentimes he fell in the fire and oftentimes in water. It seems to be a clear description of epilepsy. Much of this phenomena is found among the Greeks and Romans and also in Medieval times.

THE MARKS OF MENTAL INSTABILITY

Today the problem is intensified. Years ago it was said that ten out of every thousand had to be placed and kept in hospitals for the mentally sick. It is reported that Doctor Mayo said: "The world has moved ahead so fast as regards material civilization that man has almost, for the moment, got behind in his power of adaptation. Every other hospital bed in the United States is for mentally afflicted, insane, idiotic, feeble-

Christmas Plays

Twenty-two Non-Royalty Christmas Plays for Amateur Dramatic Groups of All Ages

Prepared by June Whiting Lea

AT A BETHLEHEM INN, by Velma West Sykes. Three men and two women. Interior scene. Biblical costumes. Time, twenty minutes. A beautiful and dramatic story in blank verse of what might have happened at the inn the night of Christ's birth. It is written in a charming literary style and has been very successfully produced on the stage and over the radio. Forty cents.

A CHRISTMAS CHIME, by Margaret Cameron. Two men and two women. Modern costumes. Time, thirty minutes. A sparkling little comedy dealing with the Terrels who have invited Dolly Wakelee and Ted Owen, an engaged couple, to spend Christmas with them. Dolly and Ted have had a disagreement and the way they are brought together is told in a delightful way. Thirty cents.

A DIFFERENT KIND OF CHRISTMAS. Two boys and three girls. Interior scene. Time, thirty minutes. The youngsters in this little play plan an exchange of Christmases, but learn that the most enjoyable Christmas is the one that belongs to you. A tree and presents are introduced in this unusual holiday play. Contained in volume, Merry Little Plays for Children. One dollar.

CHRISTMAS AT FINNEGAN'S FLAT, by Seymour S. Tibbals. Five men, four women and children. One interior. Time, twenty-five minutes. All the neighbors of the tenement contribute something to a Christmas celebration for "them poor Finnegan's" who are most unfortunate. Character parts and humorous lines. Twenty-five cents.

CHRISTMAS HOME-COMING. Three boys and five girls. Interior scene. Modern costumes. Time, thirty minutes. The sentiment of Christmas settles an old quarrel between a brother and a sister when they come back to the family home with their children. Contained in volume, Merry Little Plays for Children, one dollar.

CHRISTMAS MEMORIES, by Esther E. Olson. Three main characters and an offstage chorus. Interior scene. Modern costumes. A semi-musical program recalling the much loved Christmas hymns in a home of today. Thirty cents.

LIGHTING THE WAY, by Esther E. Olson. Two boys, two girls, three adults (a woman and two men), although children may carry all parts, if desirable. Easily produced on a platform with simple properties. A refreshing little play wherein a wealthy woman finds the opportunity to play the role of Santa Claus' assistant to a group of unfortunate children. Twenty-five cents.

MIMI LIGHTS THE CANDLE, by Edith Coulter. One man and eight women. Modern costumes. Interior scene. Time, twenty minutes. A beautiful little play dealing with the coming of the Christ Child. Thirty cents.

NO ROOM AT THE INN, by Esther E. Olson. Four characters, either sex, and extras, if desired. Interior scene. It is a story of a crooked mouthed lamp that lighted the way for the Christ Child. Solos and choruses are introduced. Thirty-five cents.

THE CHRISTMAS ANGEL, by Marjorie Woods. Three men and four women. Exterior scene. Sixteenth century costumes. Time, twenty minutes. A beautiful little Christmas play for children which is laid in Europe before the picturesque background of a winter forest. In volume, Why We Celebrate, one dollar and fifty cents.

THE CHRISTMAS BURGLAR, by Mary H. Flanner. Three men and one woman. Interior scene. Modern costumes. Time, twenty minutes. An effective little sketch for the holidays. Thirty cents.

THE CHRISTMAS PARTY, from story by Zona Gale. Two men and six women. One interior. Time, thirty minutes. Camilla's flippant tongue deals many a heartache, but she does not realize it until Chris, her fiance, rebukes her for a careless speech to her mother. The play contains all the Christmas moods from fun under the mistletoe to the blessing. Thirty-five cents.

THE CHRISTMAS STORY, by Virginia A. Griswold. Any number of people—adults and children can be used. Four scenes, two exteriors and two interiors (suggestive). It can be produced in the simplest manner on a platform or with all the Oriental accessories. Time, one hour. Using Biblical language in so far as possible, the receipt of news of Jesus' birth is shown, as heard by the shepherds, by Herod and his court, and by the people of the market place. The last scene is the "Adoration" at the manger. A very effective production. Thirty-five cents.

THE EMPTY ROOM, by Dorothy Clarke Wilson. Four men and three women. Interior scene in Bethlehem at time of the first Christmas. Mary and Joseph seek refuge in the inn and are refused, though a prophet foretells the birth of Christ. Many tokens occur of the miraculous night, and the play ends with a revelation of the way. Thirty-five cents.

THE LITTLE TOWN OF BETHLEHEM, by Katrina Trask. Four men and four women. One interior and four exterior scenes. Biblical costumes. This play, which has now been published for the first time and made available for amateur players, is a beautiful Nativity play. One dollar and seventy-five cents.

THE MIRACLE, by Goldie Grant Thiel. Eleven characters and chorus which may include the whole Sunday school. Three interior and one exterior scenes, but may be easily produced with curtains. Biblical costumes. It is a delightful story of the Christ Child and the innkeeper's family at Bethlehem. Time, thirty minutes. By adding Christmas music, the play forms a complete evening's program in itself and includes old beloved songs and carols with a Christmas story that is charming and different. No royalty charges if five copies are purchased. Thirty-five cents.

THE NATIVITY, by Rosamund Kimball. A Christmas Festival composed of selections from the Bible story of the birth of Christ. It is accompanied by carols and may easily be produced by children or young people. Thirty-five cents.

THE STAR GLEAMS, by Florence Lewis Spence. Any number of men and women characters. Exterior scene. Biblical costumes. A Community Christmas Choral. The characters grouped at the manger are Mary, Joseph, the Three Wise Men, The Shepherds, Angels, and the Christmas Spirit. There is no dialogue but festal hymns familiar to everyone are rendered by the choir and the people. The book contains description of costumes and properties so that it may be given with brief preparation. Thirty-five cents.

THE SILVER SWAN, by F. F. Kerry. Three women. One interior. Time, twenty minutes. It is a story of the love of a mother and daughter and ends on a Christmas note of peace and joy. Thirty-five cents.

THEY THAT SIT IN DARKNESS, by Dorothy Clarke Wilson. Ten men and eight women, only five long speaking parts. Exterior scene, Well at Bethlehem. It is the story of Miriam, the outcast of Bethlehem, who, after living in spiritual darkness finds light in the coming of the Savior. Thirty-five cents.

THREE WISE MEN, by Dorothy Clarke Allan. Six men, all of whom may be doubled if necessary, making a cast of three men, a man and a woman who appear in tableau, and a choir of angels. Time, forty minutes. The Three Wise Men going to pay their homage to the Christ Child have a vision of the coming generations and the meaning of the Cross. Biblical and modern times are skillfully merged. Thirty-five cents.

TWO CHRISTMAS BOXES. Eleven women. Modern interior scene. Time, forty minutes. The Meadowbrook Ladies' Aid Society is sending a Christmas box of old clothing to a missionary in Montana. The president of the Ladies' Aid Society is shipping a box of beautiful gifts to relatives at the same time. The labels become mixed. Twenty-five cents.

Send orders for these plays to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. Cash with order. We also have a collection of carefully selected Christmas readings. List will be sent free on request.

minded or senile persons. That's worry. It is worry that breaks down the brain, not work as such. The rapid pace leads many to drown their sorrows in drink." The cost of these mentally disqualified persons to the government is immense.

However, the modern insight into the problem is encouraging and, as far as it goes, humanitarian. But strides must be made in many, many directions before the problem is solved. Unwillingness and a certain blindness of thought and lack of sympathy causes people to fail to see the social causes of these conditions and the certain cure that is found only in the gospel of Christ.

Not so long ago the "two block theory was held." A person was either crazy or normal. That is discarded. Degrees of unsoundness is now understood. It is only a matter of degree from the brightest mind to the dullest; from blues to melancholia; from sudden bursts of temper to paranoia. The ideal of life is harmony or integration, but every person without exception, at some time in life, and perhaps many times in life, shows signs of disintegration. There is a tendency for the soundest minds to become neurotic when confronted by problems. "The hardest of all hard things man does in this world is to look a very new and complex situation that is pressing and important squarely in the face, comprehend all its elements, assign each its due weight, and then respond by the right attitude, behavior, or decision."

A few hundred years ago religious leaders would endeavor to beat the devil out of the mentally sick and throw them into dungeons. A man stood out for the theory that there were physical conditions underlying the trouble and that it was the duty of society to treat the mentally afflicted as we treated bodily sickness. Great strides have been made in the treatment of sick and what a king once used to soothe his troubled mind, namely, music, is now used for all in institutions for the welfare of such people. Serious attempts are made to heal and there is more or less success with certain types. Some types are hopeless, it seems. However most of us are slow to learn and we still think with contempt of those mentally afflicted. We should learn from the observation made by Charles Lamb, who said, when he saw a man led to the gallows, "There, for the grace of God, goes Charles Lamb."

THE TREATMENT OF MENTAL SICKNESS

The methods of healing involve confession. The doctor seeks to bring up to consciousness the troubling factor and then, if it be a moral factor, to get the person to look at it in a practical way, with little emotion. If there are any physical conditions that can be discovered these are treated. Obviously these are only half measures and sometimes blinds as to the real needs. It really becomes a case of "spending money for that which is not bread and labor for that which satisfyeth not." The word of the prophet are signified here: "Hearken diligently unto me and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and a commander to the people."

Such partial treatment does little good and does not touch the real needs nor have any influence on the social causes that must in the last analysis be remedied. If they are not, then professional healers are merely standing at the base of a precipice and patching such as fall over and are broken. The thing to do is to get to the top of the precipice and prevent the falling over. One of the modern French psychologists made an investigation of alcoholism and concluded that people took their first steps in that direction because of unnecessary hardships in social life and concluded that the social causes should be remedied and suggested that society should do away with slums, unfair labor conditions. The unfortunate should be helped. Men should be brothers.

DEVELOPING HEALTHY MINDS

What are the factors that make for soundness of mind? First and foremost it is the realization of the grace of God in one's life. DuBois in his treatment of the mentally sick declares that one needs a philosophy of life and if he can get that from religion let him have religion. The awareness of the grace of God can be cultivated. In the ideal way the child should be reared in a religious atmosphere, a Christian atmosphere. The grace of God comes to a person in a full sense by the practice of Christian duties. The practice of Christian duties ushers a person into a new world of power and of love and of a sound mind. The gospel possesses transforming peace and unction. It satisfies our deepest longings and gives access to the greatest of all hygienic programs. The preacher never should take a back seat to the so-called psychoanalyst. To the shame of gospel ministers, Doctor Hall has said, that the psychoanalyst has become the father confessor. And he charges about ten or twenty dollars for his work and only gives "a liberal dose of Christianity" at that. That is what he does if he does any good. But God never authorized a charge for his goodness. If so it would not be grace, it would be commerce. God is not in that business.

As an aspect of the grace of God in one's life there is the admonition of Paul, "Stir up the gift of God which is in thee." Each normal person is born with some talent that when developed makes him different from his fellows in respect to his talent and puts him in a position to contribute to the general welfare and culture of society. Paul and Peter were both Jews and both labored in the same cause, but their individualities differed. A man in a high place in an institution that tries to mould his brother after a single pattern is a dangerous character. It is the business of society to help the person find his talent and give opportunity for its expression. Likewise it is the business of the person to use to his full capacity that talent. In so doing he is assuring himself of soundness of

The Christmas Offering

By C. B. Woodstock

For over forty years at each Christmas season the spirit of sacrifice and giving have been manifest in an annual Christmas Offering made to Christ through the church. It started as an offering from the boys and girls of the Sunday school but it soon included the older ones as well. All wished to have part in the expression of love and service and sacrifice made possible in concrete form in making the gift. From an annual offering of a few hundred dollars collected in the weeks before Christmas, this special type of offering has grown to an annual fund of from thirty thousand to forty thousand dollars.

From a single offering accepted once a year the custom has grown to the building of a continuous fund accumulated throughout the year and totaled at the close of the calendar year. The amount given in this way has varied with immediate needs of the church and with the ability and willingness of the Saints to make a sacrifice offering. In 1930 under a specially organized effort the total was over $100,000. In 1931, in the present depression, the total was $31,267.71.

It is needless to say the present need of funds is acute. But with characteristic zeal and earnestness the Saints, old and young, have shared in the financial burden and we may confidently expect the Lord to especially bless the means provided and the labor given in a willing service and sacrifice. Means thus given, though sometimes small in amount, often represent, in these close times, the abundant love of one who would share in the Lord's work.

The Christmas Offering in the coming weeks may well be considered a part of the general sacrifice offering asked of the church in the period between Thanksgiving and Christmas. Let the Christmas Offering be encouraged through the church school as has been the custom in former years. We are assured the blessing which followed the giving of the "widow's mite" will attend our gift today.

Let us give to the Christmas Offering.

Training for Service in the Teaching Work of the Church

By C. B. Woodstock

There is everywhere in the church an insistent demand for teachers and leaders who have made consistent preparation for their jobs. This does not reflect upon the good work many are doing, for we do have some excellent teachers and leaders, but the supply is not large enough. Continually we must recruit the teaching forces of the church school to supplement the work of the priesthood in the ministry of education.

When one contemplates the task of religious education that shall produce a people ready to engage intelligently, productively, and with faith and consecration in the great missionary work and the building of Zion in the years before us, the necessity is seen for a most intensive and progressive educational program. The work can not be done with mediocre effort. Only our best, under divine guidance and blessing, shall measure up to the task.

Effective teaching and leadership require the following general qualifications:

1. A pleasing, dynamic personality, expressed in willing and earnest service.
2. Spiritual vision and conviction born of a prayerful, studious, active life in the work of the church.
3. A clear and ready knowledge of the subject matter to be taught and the resources to be drawn upon.
4. A personal, sympathetic acquaintance with the members of one's class, and a working knowledge of psychology and of teaching methods.
5. Skill in the processes of teaching and leadership.

These qualifications may not be elaborated upon here, but they seem to indicate the characteristics for which we must seek as we select teachers and leaders for assignment in the church school. These indicate also the types of training and experience necessary if we are to attain and maintain a high standard of efficiency in the teaching work of the church. Teachers are neither wholly born nor wholly made. All have some native ability or readiness of adaptation, all may improve through study and experience under guidance, and all must attain spiritual vigor and growth through diligently living the life to which they would lead their pupils.

It is a part of the necessary program of religious education that we provide opportunities for the education and training of those who are to teach and lead. This is done in a number of ways from which one may choose, the chief essential being that one must be willing to put forth consistent and continual personal effort if one is to grow. There is no easy or royal road to efficiency. Education and training are not something done for us by instructors, but something we do for ourselves usually under encouragement and guidance. Hence our insti-

Prayer and Testimony

We Have the Pearl of Great Price

By John E. Karr

I wish to relate an experience I had some time ago. A man with whom I was talking about God and his ways one day said to me, "I have found something that does not sound altogether right." He quoted Genesis 6: 1, 2: "And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose."

"It seems," he said, "that men came down from God and married the daughters of men." I told him that I did not remember of having read that passage, but that I would look it up when I got home, and would tell him when we saw each other again.

I found the passage referred to, and looked it up in the Inspired Version of the Bible which gives a better explanation. When I met my friend again I was happy because I thought I had something that would do him good. Instead of telling him at once how the Inspired Version read, I quoted John 1: 12: "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

"Why, of course that's right," he agreed. "I never thought of that." Then I told him what the Inspired Version said in Genesis 8: 1, 2: "And Noah and his sons hearkened unto the Lord, and gave heed; and they were called the sons of God. And when these men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, the sons of men saw that their daughters were fair, and they took them wives even as they chose."

"What is your Inspired Version?" he asked, and I informed him that it was the Bible translated and corrected by the hand of God through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

"You should not read that," he declared. "We don't have prophets any more. They were done away at the coming of Christ."

Several passages of Scripture came to my mind just then, such as Matthew 7: 6: "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you."

I believe we as a people have a pearl of great price, and it is my advice to be careful what we say for we may be casting our pearl before swine. Reading 2 Timothy 4: 1-4, in which Paul charges Timothy to preach the word, "for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables," I am caused to think that the things many ministers teach are fables. We hear that God does not speak to man today, that the sick can not be healed, that it matters not to which church one belongs, and many other teachings. Jesus said that men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil, and that they would not come to the light lest their sins be made manifest. This seems to be the trouble with many of us today. We are afraid of light because we know that we shall have to give up the ways of the world.

Let us work while it is yet day, for the night cometh when no man can work.

We Are Latter-Day Disciples

By Diora Lydick

It is indeed a privilege—and how I appreciate it!—to be a disciple in latter days. Do you recall the words of Judas to the Savior: "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world? Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him."

Our Savior spoke many comforting words to his disciples while he tarried with them. He made this promise: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you."

We as his disciples in latter days have this promise, and what are we able to say to those who declare that God does not manifest himself now as he did in former days? Let us see what Jesus' answer is: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." (John 14: 12.)

Do we believe the words of Jesus? The many experiences I have enjoyed and the many manifestations of God's Holy Spirit assure me that we worship the same God who divided the sea and led his people through. His mighty hand and his great love are still the same. Yes, we are Saints of latter-day Israel. May the past blessings of God stimulate us to greater tasks. Let us labor in love. Let us try to help each other in the tasks assigned us.

Spiritual Experience Strengthens Faith

By Mrs. Emma Cothorn

I was a member of the Church of Christ three years and came to New Mexico in 1917. There I heard the Latter Day Saint gospel preached. I began to read and to oppose its teachings, but soon gave up and was baptized by Brother A. J. Layland January 27, 1918.

My people were all opposed to this faith and did everything they could to change me. I knew too little about my new church to defend myself well, and so I went back to the Church of Christ in 1924. However, I felt that I had done wrong, and as time passed this feeling became a conviction. I felt so burdened that I could scarcely endure the awful sadness that dwelt in my breast.

We had planned to move to Ivan, Texas. One morning a very small, still voice said to me: "Don't go to Ivan; go to New Mexico." It was very plain, but aloud I said, "I can't go." Then the Lord caused me to know that he had spoken. For one month this voice said these same words to me in front of me in the day and just above me at night. I prayed almost continuously, but still opposed the instruction. Once when I had prayed and started to go, one foot failed me. I tried the other. It too failed. And then a marvelous power swept over me, and the voice said: "Don't go to Ivan, Texas. Go to New Mexico. If you don't, you will never get right with the Scriptures." "Lord," I cried, falling to my knees, "I know it is you trying to lead me in the right way against my stubborn will. I will go where you want me to go. I will do what you want me to do as long as you will make your will known unto me." Then the burden left my soul.

After I had lived in New Mexico a few months, the Lord showed me in a vision that this church is right. I returned to it in 1925, and have been much stronger in the faith than I was before. It has been my lot to enjoy numerous spiritual manifestations, and I rejoice that the old Jerusalem gospel has been restored in its fullness. If any of you are in doubt whether this church is right, or if the Book of Mormon is a divine book, take it to the Lord in prayer. He will show you and then the whole world can not change your conviction.

For two years I have been sick in bed and have suffered much pain, but the Lord has never left me alone to suffer. He is ever near to bless us if we trust him.

Last August the Saints in Portales spent a day in fasting and prayer for me, and though the heavenly Father did not see fit to heal me, I received a wonderful blessing and felt an uplift in body and soul. I want to ask you to pray for me that I may recover, if it is the Lord's will, and be able to visit the sick and afflicted ones who are weak in the Spirit. Some of these are interested in our work and I would like to lead them in the way of truth and righteousness.

Comforted in Loneliness

By Mrs. C. N. Maymon

About four years ago I was told in my patriarchal blessing, given under the hands of Brother A. E. Stone, that some of the experiences which would come to me would cause me to stand and declare the wonderful goodness, mercies, and blessings of God, to my associates and fellow members of the faith.

I am isolated from my home branch (Byrneville, Indiana) at present, and there are no Saints closer than New Albany, twenty miles away. I want to tell you of an experience given me a short time ago.

August 20 and 21, our district conference convened with the Louisville, Kentucky, Branch. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis and Brother J. O. Dutton were expected to be there. I had planned to attend, but when the time came to go, I found it would be impossible for both my husband and me to make the trip. Since he is an elder, I thought it best for me to sacrifice going though I could hardly bear the thought of giving it up. While in prayer over the matter, I asked the Lord to comfort me in my loneliness. I also asked him to be with the Saints in conference that they should be helped and comforted in a way that would also help me when I heard of it.

The good Lord knew best and gave an answer to my prayer in a way entirely different from what I had expected. Saturday night I slept soundly. Before Sunday morning I awoke full of the Spirit. The Lord seemed to be at my side talking to me. Such encouraging thoughts as I have never had, came into my mind, and I felt that it would be a pleasure to tell the world all that I was enjoying.

When I told my husband this experience, he said, "I prayed also that you might be comforted at home."

I am glad that God remembers us anywhere we are and that he blesses us. I hope always to live worthy his blessings.

Injured One Is Healed

By Mrs. Mentie Page

I want to bear my testimony to a wonderful blessing I received through the administration of Elder O. S. Caldwell.

On August 31, 1932, I was helping my sister can tomatoes. A can of boiling tomatoes burst and scalded my lower limb from the knee to the end of my toes. It looked as though my foot and limb were cooked. We did all that we knew to do, but to little avail. I could get around only by the aid of a crutch. I could scarcely put my foot on the floor.

On September 5, Elder O. S. Caldwell came into the community and began a meeting. After hearing him preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, I approached him at the close of the service and asked to be administered to. After that administration I did not use my crutch any more and all pain and misery left me. At once I began to use my limb again, and on the following day I did my housework and a big washing. By the eleventh of that month, my limb was entirely well. When I was administered to some one asked me if I were still going to doctor my limb, and I told them no that I had turned its care over to the Lord. I am very thankful to the heavenly Father for his blessings to me.

HENRY STATION, TENNESSEE.

Editor's Note: Information comes that a few days after this case of healing, Brother O. S. Caldwell baptized this woman and her husband. They are fine people.

"The Lord Is Mindful of His Own"

By Mrs. Howard Westerman

I have had an experience just recently that shows how our heavenly Father watches over us. We are very thankful to him for his protection.

My baby daughter and I were driving in a sedan when it went into the ditch and turned on its side. Not a window was broken, and we were not injured. I knelt there in the car and thanked God for his care over us. I wish to be able to fulfill the purpose he has in me.

There is a God and he truly watches over his children. Let us be diligent in his service and true to the cause of his church. Let us be kingdom builders. Let us pray for one another.

Gives Efforts to Personal Evangelism

By Mrs. Patsy Peevy

It is good to have all the church papers in one, for there are many like myself who are not able to take all three.

I am glad the Lord is directing our leaders in their work, giving them inspiration and wisdom.

Of late I have been trying to give special effort to missionary work. Circumstances limit me in this, since I have no means of transportation to the services of the Saints and my health is poor, but the Lord has blessed me. I have visited more than a hundred Saints and found some of them alive in the gospel work. Some, on the other hand, have grown cold and indifferent. My prayers are for these and for all others. I pray especially for the missionaries far and wide.

The gospel is very dear to me, and I want to do all I can to acquaint my friends and neighbors with the truth.

QUESTION TIME

Is the Talmud a kind of Jewish Bible, or is it a sacred book?

In one sense of the word it may be considered as sacred to the Jews, because it contains the writings of rabbis in comment on the sacred books. But it is not sacred in the same degree that the Jewish books of the Law are sacred, or even the books of the Prophets, though the Jews hold it in great reverence.

The Talmud is a collection of about twelve volumes of commentaries on Biblical teachings, and embraces the thoughts involving about a thousand years of Jewish life. It was written by various learned rabbis at different times, embracing about three hundred years of time in the compilation. It has two divisions, the Mishna and the Gemarah.

The Mishna includes six sections devoted, 1. to agrarian laws; 2. festivals, sabbaths, and fasts; 3. betrothal, marriage and divorce; 4. damages, and civil and criminal laws; 5. sacred things; 6. purification. According to Jewish reckoning it was completed about the year 3978, or 150 years after the second temple was destroyed. The Gemarah contains commentaries on the Mishna, and was completed about the year 4127, or 150 years after the Mishna. Work was done afterward on the Gemarah until about the year 4253. There are two of these commentaries, and they are commonly called the Talmud of Jerusalem, and the Talmud of Babylon. The latter is considered more important, and of more recent date.

Were the unicorns mentioned in scripture mythical, or are they now extinct?

It is not certain what animal is meant by this term, but the Revised Version and some others render the Hebrew word, which is reem, "wild ox." Isaiah 34:7 indicates that it was an animal that lived in Palestine, but the one-horned unicorn of tradition does not now exist, if it ever did. The Douay Version renders the word "rhinoceros" five times and "unicorn" four times. About 100 B. C. it was described by Cæsar as being in German forests: "Scarcely less than the elephant in size, but in their nature, color, and form are bulls." Assyrian monuments earlier than 800 B. C. picture it in the chase.

Among the other translations of the word are "buffalo" and "roaring animal." But the Inspired Version renders the Isaiah text by the original Hebrew word reem, thus leaving the term according to its original significance.

Were the Samaritans a political or a religious people?

At first, or at least as early as history reveals, the Samaritans included those tribes which came under the rulership of Jeroboam in central Palestine on both sides of the Jordan. They comprised the revolting tribes of Israel who departed from the king of Judah. Jeroboam built various cities in what was called Samaria, and set up idolatrous altars in Bethel and Dan in order to prevent his people from going up to Jerusalem for worship. But in spite of this many were inclined to worship at Jerusalem instead of at the places provided. Some time later Omri, then king of Israel, built the city of Samaria, in which his son later established the worship of Baal.

In the course of time many of various tribes again came under the dominance of the kingdom of Judah. About 721 B. C. the remnant of the ten tribes remaining under Samaritan rule were taken captive by Shalmaneser the Assyrian and carried to Assyria. Thus the cities of Samaria became desolate until Assyrians were sent to repopulate them.

It will be seen that now the Samaritans were no longer Israel, but were at least largely of heathen descent and developed a strange mixture of Jewish and heathen religion. To them came Manasseh, a man of priestly lineage who had been expelled from Jerusalem by Nehemiah for a mixed marriage, and he increased the hatred existing between them and the people of Judah and Jerusalem. The Jews declared that the Samaritan copy of the books of Moses was corrupted, while the Samaritans held it to be more ancient and perfect than that of the Jews. This hatred was increased by Samaritan claims to Jewish blood.

When and where was the Sermon on the Mount preached?

It is generally believed that this remarkable sermon was given on the high plateau country near Capernaum in Galilee. The word mountain (Matthew 5:1) may properly be rendered either "mount" or "hill." It was probably early in Jesus' ministry after his twelve disciples had been chosen, four of whom are specifically mentioned before then. This also seems to accord with the record as given by Luke, if we recognize his account of the Master's teaching as being concerned with the same occasion.

Christ had in mind when he said, "Ye shall know them by their fruits."

Some one has said, "Building a millennium, without building souls that are fit to possess it is the height of folly." In theory we have built a Zion. Those of the priesthood and many of the members have a mental picture of Zion, true or false, and take delight in describing it. We have used up our time having visions, dreaming dreams telling folks about our ideals, rejoicing over our gifts. Visions, dreams, and ideals are highly essential and necessary to the establishment of Zion, but to become effective we must develop some practical folks to put these visions, dreams, and ideals into operation in such a way that fruit will obtain. We have been content to sing, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," and fail to use the prophetic office for the development of character as God intended.

Our task today is similar to that of Isaiah when the Lord charged him to "Go through the gates, prepare ye the way of the people; cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people." We are in need of some one or group who like Christ can say, "Come unto me—and learn of me." The priesthood can not prepare the Saints for Zion until they have first prepared themselves, neither can the church as a whole make much of an impression on the world until we can demonstrate by the fruit we produce the effectiveness of our philosophy. The tree that failed to bear fruit was hewn down and cast out.

The gospel has been restored to earth. We are the custodians of it. The priesthood is in our midst. God has bestowed upon us his choicest gifts. Through his prophets, during the past century, he has revealed his mind and will. We occupy a position of honor. This position of honor places upon us a grave and heavy responsibility. We are ambassadors for Christ. Upon us rests the responsibility of building the kingdom of God on earth, from which will come the fruits of righteousness, to demonstrate to the world that this is God's church.

The words of Brother Joseph in his last address to General Conference in April, 1915, should urge each member of the church, and especially those of the priesthood, on to give unstintingly of their time and talents, in the use of the gifts God has bestowed upon us, through the gospel, to establish Zion. "It seems to me that we ought not to faint, that we ought not to fail; that we ought not to quail. . . . Shall we fail now? In the name of God, No! in the name of Christ, Nay! in the name of the Holy Spirit, which has stood by us from the first to the last, I say, Nay!! And I hope brethren, I say, Nay with you, and that you say Nay with me to this question!"

mind and if used in love for man he secures spiritual development.

MAN'S RELATIONSHIP TO GOD

This grace of God in a person's life makes that person realize the fact of kinship to God established by creation. There is much that disturbs people on that point, for many have been influenced to believe that life is the result of chance. People who teach that are ignorant and unfitted for the task of teaching. It makes no difference how we came to be, the fact remains that the power that started the drama of life was equal, at least, to the effects produced. Nothing short of that is logical to science. And it is certainly unchristian and tends to destroy faith in the greatest of all factors of soundness of mind.

Again, the grace of God issues in the knowledge of my kinship to God by adoption. God calls me to hear and obey the gospel. In so doing I become born again. I am immersed in water and in the Holy Spirit. My disability and sin is washed and burnt away. Faith supplants my fears. Love dislodges my hates. I am strengthened and renewed in the inner man. I am prepared to serve my fellow man.

Another aspect of the grace of God, which makes for soundness of mind, is the sense of brotherhood and participation in a movement that has as its culmination the establishment of the kingdom of God. According to Paul there are two kingdoms in this world, the kingdom of darkness and the kingdom of light. The things of the kingdom of darkness hinder the progress of the kingdom of light, but the kingdom of darkness is doomed to destruction.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again;

The eternal years of God are hers;

But error wounded writhes in pain,

And dies amid her worshippers."

Among the most important factors that influence life is a man's industrial relations. The world at this time is in the throes of a great industrial upheaval. The present system is weighed in the balance and is found wanting. Great wealth on one hand among the few, and poverty among the many is unchristian and will not continue much longer. "It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; otherwise the whole world lieth in sin." Great wealth in the hands of the few is gotten in sinful conditions and promotes ungodliness. There are some men in leadership that have a universal mind, there are others that are sectional, provincial, and narrow, and by that token unfitted for leadership. One man in federal leadership had an income of ten million dollars in one year and refused to help the unemployed of his own state. He would like to lock up the gates of the United States and lose the key. That is bad economics, inhuman and antichristian. No nation lives to itself and the present depression can only be remedied, with any degree of certitude and permanence, when the governments of the world will cooperate in disarmament, and cooperate in sound business policy. They are not likely to do that because the plan of God calls upon his people to gather out of Babylon.

The plan of God calls upon men to repent and believe the gospel and gather on lands which they have purchased on spots designated by God and build up from the foundation that kind of industrial relationship that will be Christian. This will involve stewardship and Christian management of industry. It will mean an equal opportunity to all. Cooperation will supplant competition. Sympathy will take the place of diffidence and cruelty. Fear will be banished. Love will prevail. Soundness of mind and social and individual power in righteousness will overcome mental sickness and the spirit of fear will be banished.

Then "ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." (Isaiah 55: 12.)

When men cooperate with God they bring about new social conditions. God was revealed in Christ. He must also be revealed in his church. Such conditions will then obtain that will destroy fear and make soundness of mind, power and love universal among men."

O God, our heavenly parent, help us to appreciate and love thy righteousness. May thy rich grace dwell in our hearts. May that grace stir up in our hearts a deep love of the beautiful, the true, and the good. And may that well of power and love and soundness of mind that thou shall beget in us be freely given in service to our fellows, for thou, O Lord, hast freely given and taught that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." To this end may thy grace abound to all men. In Jesus name. Amen.

tutes, credit classes, and training courses. These are more fully listed and discussed in The Certification Plan which will be sent on request.

A "credit point" represents an hour's effort in training under specified conditions and following prescribed causes. Credits are won by students and reported in to the general office for approval and record. For purposes of standardizing our achievement and recognizing worthy effort, three grades of certificates in Religious Education and Leadership are granted. Certain specific requirements must be fulfilled in each case, but in general a Second Grade certificate is awarded when one has one hundred and fifty credits, a First Grade when one has three hundred credits, and a Gold Seal when one has five hundred credits.

The receipt of a certificate is no guarantee that one can teach. If fairly won, it does represent an amount of personal effort to qualify, but one must also possess other qualities of personality, spiritual growth and vigor, as well as some skill in the teaching processes. The required training should help a poor teacher to improve, and an unlearned teacher to gain knowledge, vision and inspiration to equip him for his tasks.

Our training program has been in operation for a number of years. We have on file in the general office the credit records of over five thousand members of the church, most of whom are adding to their count as the months go by. In the six years that our present certificates have been granted the awards have been as follows: Second Grade, ninety-six; First Grade, fifty-one; Gold Seal, eighty-five, making a total of two hundred and thirty-two.

A careful check of the various credits awarded in the past seven months shows the following totals:

Enrollment in correspondence courses	68
Correspondence courses completed	27
Quarterly courses completed for credit	20
Attendance at twenty-seven institutes	914

A total of forty-three courses completed with the International Council schools have been transferred to our credit files, each for twenty-four points of credit.

Thus in seven months, credits have been added to our records for one thousand and seventy-two individuals.

Since the first of March, 1932, the following certificates have been awarded:

Second Grade: Mrs. B. F. Dellar, Topeka, Kansas; Mrs. Florence Kennedy, Buffalo, New York; Mrs. Anna Staton, Anaconda, Montana; Margaret T. Kenny, Spokane, Washington.

First Grade: Virginia E. Webbe, Kirtland, Ohio; B. S. Lambkin, Burksville, Illinois; Mrs. Florence Epling, Sacramento, California; Doctor Percy L. Weegar, Buffalo, New York; Mrs. Emma McDole, Seattle; Washington.

Gold Seal: Mrs. Mary Sheets, Topeka, Kansas; Amos T. Higdon, Independence, Missouri; Walter G. Gerow, Vancouver, British Columbia; Miss Hazel L. Minkler, Wellington, Ohio.

The winter months are most advantageous for the holding of institutes and credit classes. Write to the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, for a list of credit study courses.

Mumps

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Mumps, sometimes called epidemic parotiditis, is a specific acute inflammation of the largest of the salivary glands situated below and in front of the ear, weighs one half to one ounce, having a duct two and one half inches long which empties opposite the second molar tooth. This disease is highly contagious and usually occurs at the age of five to fifteen years but may attack men of 21 and 31 years.

From a military viewpoint it is one of the most dreaded diseases on account of it being so debilitating and unmanageable. In 1918 at Camp Wheeler there were 5,756 cases among 18,000 men. It is more prevalent among colored people than white and more frequently attacks native white than foreign born children. It is about equally prevalent among girls as boys but if there is any difference at all it is conceded that males may be more susceptible.

Mumps is a disease very difficult to eradicate. It is contagious before the symptoms occur. It is not air born, being usually spread by direct contact, rarely by indirect contact or by a third person. The maximum period of incubation is from eight to thirty days but most cases develop in eighteen to twenty-one days.

The specific cause of mumps is unknown but most investigators believe it is caused by a filterable virus. In 1918 Martha Wollstein obtained some of the virus from the salivary secretion in mumps and injected it into the parotid glands and testicles of cats and succeeded in producing the disease. Recently investigators have discovered that the virus is most readily obtained the first three days, less frequently on the sixth and not at all on the ninth day. It is not found in the cerebrospinal fluid, but is often present in patients showing marked constitutional symptoms.

The symptoms are that of "a common cold" or "cold in the head" preceded by a sense of lassitude with more or less frontal headache, chilliness, uncomfortable dryness in the nose with a strong inclination to sneeze, followed by a chill and sudden rise of temperature ranging from 101 to 103 F. The pulse is rapid, the urine is scanty, the skin is dry followed in a day or two with stiffness at the angle of the jaw soon followed by swollen, painful parotid gland. After a couple of days the opposite gland may become involved. Difficult swallowing and often earache adds to the distress.

The sexual organs may become involved resulting in sterility. In severe cases or those lacking proper care: brain involvement (meningitis), nephritis (inflammation of the kidneys), arthritis, heart disease, neuritis, etc. Suppuration or gangrene of the gland is rare. Deafness and chronic enlargement of the parotid has been known to occur.

While the prognosis is favorable it is safer to consult the family physician. Even in the very mild cases patients should not be allowed out of doors unless the weather is perfect. In some cases some relief of the symptoms are relieved by heat while in others an ice bag is of service.

Care should be taken to keep the mouth clean. Hydrogen peroxide is a favorite with some for this purpose. The patient should be kept in one room with even temperature isolated from the rest of the family.

Foods should be fluid or semi-fluid and should be of such character as not to demand mastication. Soups, broths, custards, bread and milk, junkets, etc., can be used if given judiciously.

A child who has had mumps should not be allowed to return to school for at least three or four weeks; since the beginning of the symptoms and only then if the swelling has disappeared for at least a week.

Questions and Answers

COLDS—(ILLINOIS)

"I am subject to frequent colds. My wife insists upon having windows and doors open. By having the windows and doors open all the time I am sure this draft is the cause of my having these colds. Every time I object she informs me you advise fresh air. I will appreciate more information on this subject.

Reply: Sleeping rooms should have the windows wide open. A screen should be in the window to keep a strong wind from blowing across your bed. The temperature should be 35 to 45 F. Be sure you have enough bed covers to keep you warm. You must be particular about this. If you "sleep cold," colds, rheumatism, neuralgia or something else may occur. If you are comfortably warm in bed, then it is an indication that there is some other cause of your colds. See that your nose, throat and teeth are in good condition. Crowded cars, breath, and mists from other people, and an office that is either too hot or dry often is a cause of frequent colds.

The Laurel Club Pays Tribute to Sister M. T. Short

She was called the mother of the club, and we all loved her. Her work did not lie in cooking nor in waiting tables; but if she wanted to work she could always find plenty to do. Mrs. Short could always be found doing her bit. At the bazaar she helped in the art booth. If we were to donate $5.00 her donations generally brought $10.00. For the rummage sales she was dependable; for the "fish pond" on the 4th of July, or carnival, she stuck to her post and brought in the money.

As our historian she has served well these many years. The Journal of History has a full account of our work compiled by Sisters M. T. and Eva Short.

She has often given words of wisdom and encouragement in our meetings which has aided us over many rough places and helped us out of difficulties.

Even as late as last General Conference she was given a responsible position, one with a lot of hard work, but she performed the task with credit and dependability.

This statement was of course based upon a general application of the principle, and would not represent an exception in the face of general disregard, but the rule is in agreement with the precepts of Christ concerning human duty. One of the serious mistakes made by the average person is to give more attention to his supposed rights than to responsibilities arising from their limitations. Many people give little or no thought to the fact that life consists more in the performance of deeds than in the asserting of claims.

JESUS PLACED DUTY ABOVE RIGHTS

If we would reverse our philosophy of life, we should all profit by the change. This was what Jesus did when he commanded:

"All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matthew 7: 12.

The problem of determining our rights and how to protect them would be completely solved, if we would first give faithful heed to the performance of duty. By giving equal thought to the rights of others, most of the antagonisms and resentments of life would disappear out of their lives for ever, and in their place would be born the spirit of fraternity. The French moralist, La Rochefoucauld, presents a vital observation when he declares:

"It would be useless to say how necessary society is to man. All desire it, and all seek it; but few make use of the means to render it pleasant and lasting. Every one wishes to find his own pleasure and advantage at the expense of others: we always prefer ourselves to those we propose to live with; and we almost always make them feel this preference: it is this which disturbs and breaks up society."—World's Best Literature, volume 21, pages 12330, 12331.

Life would be marvelously simple, complete, and satisfying to us all if only we would learn this great lesson which Jesus asks us to master. No other way has ever been found that will bring peace, prosperity, and progress to all the world; but still the problem of life remains a muddled complexity, because we are too stupid and too obstinate to learn the way. And so the world must continue to suffer and strive and hate until it is willing to trust in the only way where healing and peace abide. Let us no longer ask, What are my rights? but rather let us ask, What is my duty? Then shall dawn for us a new world, a world where every breath is joy and every heart beats in concord.

RIGHTS ARE DYNAMIC, NOT STATIC

It is a fatal mistake to suppose that our rights are things which were born with us or were created for us. The truth is almost exactly opposite to that notion. If it were true, then rights would be rigid things that admit of no progress or change, and life itself would be dull, tedious, and monotonous. The splendid truth is that it lies within our power to so use our talents that our rights shall constantly increase and enlarge. Rights are therefore dynamic, and not static. From infancy onward they grow as we grow, and as our powers to properly use them grow. The wise mother withholds from her little child the right to choose everything he may desire to eat or drink, for he must first be trained to choose with some measure of discernment and discretion.

This principle applies to all activities of life, and no person acquires a right until he is competent to use it. The individual who would possess any right must learn his duty concerning its use, for the instant he acquires the right he also must assume the duty of seeing that he does not abuse it. This truth is as old as the human race, and the progress of the world depends upon its observance. It is for this reason, as well as others, that the drunkard has no right to drink intoxicating liquor, for he has proved his ability to assume the duty which he owes to himself, his family, and society.

The Apostle Paul referred to this principle when he declared that the gospel is the law of liberty. He had become free, for in accepting the gospel of Christ he had assumed the responsibility of choosing to do right. He was living by a higher law than that which held the penalty of death, hence he said:

"For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."—Romans 8: 2.

It is a most wonderful thought that God has created us with those powers of growth which enable us to become free in the exercise of life's activities. If we attempt to choose the things which are harmful to ourselves or to others, then we are not exercising our rights but are transgressing them, and in doing so we incur the penalty of broken law.

RIGHTS DECREASE WHEN VIOLATED

It is in accordance with this well established principle that those who break the laws must pay the penalty which is provided for them. He who violates the law finds that his rights diminish as rapidly as his violations of law increase. The enforcement of this principle is essential to society and to political government of society. Every great code of laws known to man was founded upon it, including the Babylonian, Mosaic, Roman and English codes. In them all the rights of society must be respected by the individual who constitutes a unit of society. When individuals exceed their own rights and violate those of the social or political group, it becomes necessary to enact laws which will effectively control or restrain them.

The whole system of Remedial Law came into being as a result of acts by those who could not be trusted to properly respect others. They became a nuisance and a menace to the tranquillity of the people. Instances of this are so many that it would be difficult to enumerate them. The right to cross the street against a red light is prohibited for this reason. Citizens are prohibited from carrying concealed weapons, not because the carrying of firearms is dangerous in itself, but because a great number could not be trusted with them. The use of alcoholic liquors was prohibited for similar reasons, and the law governing the matter is fully as reasonable and fully as necessary as the laws governing various other crimes and misdemeanors.

An examination of the various laws enacted will disclose even to the most skeptical that rights are restricted or decreased because some have abused them and become a source of danger to others. For such reasons we have penalties to be paid by those who are guilty of murder, robbery, arson, blackmail, embezzlement, bribery, adultery, rape, theft, assault, drunkenness and a host of other offenses against individuals and society. Some of them, such as fraud, libel, nuisance, intimidation, malfeasance, and similar wrongs, are considered lesser offenses, but nevertheless are strictly prohibited by law. As crimes and other evils increase, the people seek protection through the powers of government.

ANCIENT AND MODERN SCAPEGOATS

Among the ancient Jews a custom was adopted by which certain types of sinners placed their sins theoretically upon the head of a goat, which was then driven out into the wilds. This was a convenient method of appeasing the conscience, perhaps, but to make it effective the offender must repent of the wrongs he had committed. The underlying purpose of the law should also be to effect the repentance of wrongdoers, and not simply retaliation, vengeance, or punishment. Punishment is often necessary, but unless it is required by the stubbornness and viciousness of the culprit, there seems to be no constructive purpose in employing it. The general character of the individual will usually determine this.

The early Roman rulers attempted to make scapegoats of the Christians by charging them with various offenses. They hoped by this means to divert attention from their own flagrant crimes and the corruptions of government which were shocking people of moral decency. The English historian, Froude, in an address given in London, said concerning this:

"The greatest of Roman thinkers, gazing mournfully at the seething mass of moral putrefaction round him, detected and deigned to notice among its elements a certain detestable superstition, so he called it, rising up amidst the offscouring of the Jews, which was named Christianity."—Modern Eloquence, volume 5, page 455.

In a strikingly similar way the Wets have obtained political support in their attempts to make a scapegoat of the Eighteenth Amendment, by falsely charging that it is responsible for the crime conditions existing in our nation. Yet it has been proved by undeniable facts that crimes due to liquor have actually decreased since prohibition was enacted, while other types of crime have in some instances increased. In making this false claim the Wets are resorting to the same evasive strategy used by law-breakers of the past who sought to make the innocent suffer for the crimes of the guilty.

THE RIGHTS OF THE SUPER-AGE

It has often been said that we are living in the super-age of the world, the age of education, enlightenment and progress; of science, invention and art; of business, health and enjoyment. But these are not the most important things necessary to a super-age. The use we are making of our boasted possessions holds far greater meaning for us, for if our age produces crime and disregard for the social good, these things may become a curse and a menace to the integrity, security, and happiness of the whole nation. Statistics show that about 12,000 murders are committed among us every year, many of which are scarcely noticed by officers of the law, who in some instances have actually aided those guilty of crime, and in others have been unable to cope with it. Mechanical knowledge and sordid wealth do not protect a nation, but may endanger it and lead to its downfall.

The evolution of human rights is impossible without individual respect for social justice and morality. The increase of our rights can be obtained only by just and considerate deeds, and not by crime and selfishness. To protect the sacred rights of all the people, rather than to give license to law-breakers, is the only course that can be pursued without bringing disaster upon both ourselves and them.

Bryan's Bequest

Eleventh: I have saved for the last my bequest for religious education. While I have devoted a large part of my time to the study and discussion of political questions and have found an abundant reward in the reforms adopted with my humble aid I feel more interested in religion than in politics because religion is the only influence that can control the heart "out of which are the issues of life." Next to religion I am most interested in education because education can and should increase one's capacity for service. But education will not be a benefit to its possessor and a blessing to society unless it is wisely used. I am very anxious that each intellectual ship shall be equipped with a moral rudder sufficient to control its course on life's stormy sea. My chief interest is, therefore, in Christian education—the entwining of the spiritual with the intellectual. I had hoped to aid in the establishing of an academy that would embody my idea and serve as a model. Fearing that I shall not be able to carry out this plan during the years that remain I am setting aside a fund equal to each child's share in my estate. After taking out the bequest to my wife and other bequests, I desire to divide the remainder in four equal parts. One part, as I have provided above, shall go to each of my three children, the fourth part less fifty thousand dollars, will be set apart for Christian education. As I have recently given our Nebraska home, known as Fairview, to the Methodist Church for a hospital, I feel that its value, conservatively estimated at fifty thousand, should be deducted from the one fourth set apart for Christian education and divided equally between my three children and my wife. If the amount left for this purpose—I estimate it at about fifty thousand—one hundred thousand less the fifty thousand deduction above mentioned—I would like to have it used to establish an academy for boys which shall be under the control of some unit of government of some evangelical church, Presbyterian preferred but not absolutely necessary, so that it can be controlled by a recognized religious organization. I would like to have it cover the junior and senior years of the high school and the freshman and sophomore years of the college—those being the years when the student most needs religious supervision. I would like special attention given to citizenship and applied Christianity so that the graduates may be prepared for leadership in both state and church. It should not be conducted for profit; board should be furnished students at actual cost, tuition should be as low as possible, room rent should be same for all rooms so as to discourage classification according to wealth. Assignments of room should be made on basis of classes, senior, junior, sophomore, and freshman and in classes according to scholarship where possible and by lot until scholarship is tested. I would like the boys to wear a uniform made of blue and gray to symbolize the reunion of the North and South. If it is impossible to establish such an academy, then the trustees of this fund shall distribute it among boys' schools, selecting schools as nearly like the one described above as possible, care being taken to see that the money is given only to schools that are firmly committed to orthodox Christianity, including the making of man by separate act in God's image, the virgin birth and the bodily resurrection of the Savior. I regard supernatural or revealed religion as given in the Bible as the only religion that exerts a controlling influence on our lives. If this money is divided among several colleges, I would like it invested and the income loaned to needy students—not over one half of his annual college expenses so that he will earn the other half—and when collected returned to the revolving fund.

I hereby appoint as trustees of this religious fund my beloved wife, my son, my two daughters, my brother C. W. Bryan, my brother-in-law T. S. Allen, my former partner A. R. Talbot, and the pastors of the First Presbyterian Church of Miami and Grove Temple of Coconut Grove—the pastors to serve while pastors. If any of the life trustees die their places shall be filled by the survivors, preference being given to my personal friends who are also sympathetic in matters of religion.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this fifth day of July (1925) nineteen hundred and twenty-five at Marymont, Coconut Grove, Florida.

Interest yourself in your church. Think about it much. Talk about it. Teach it to others and especially to your own household. Pray over it. If you think more of the church and God than you do of your business or your crops, then talk church. Tell me what a man thinks, and I will tell you what he is! Men think themselves into an attitude of doing either good or bad. Let your thoughts and words be an influence for good.—Ernest E. Crownover, in the Western Oklahoma District Letter.

Deer Isle, Maine

Island Has Two Branches—Stonington and Mountainville

A few facts concerning this island may be of interest to readers of the Herald. It is located off the coast of Maine, about twenty miles from Rockland, in Penobscot Bay, and is an island about twelve miles long by eight miles wide.

Little Deer Isle is connected with Deer Isle at the northwest corner by a bar more than half a mile long which is dry at low tide but covered to a depth of several feet at high tide. Cars can cross from one island to the other whenever the tide is right.

There are two branches on Deer Isle and one on Little Deer Isle, those on the big island being at Stonington and Mountainville. One of the most important branches in Maine is at Stonington. This was for many years the home of U. W. Greene, well known throughout the church as former apostle and patriarch. It has also been the scene of the labors of many churchmen of this and former generations.

The prospects are encouraging for a continuation of faithful work in the branch. Some young men are taking hold of the work in earnest, and there is no limit to the possibilities of accomplishment.

Recently the young people organized as "The Zion Builders," with Brother Cecil Billings, priest, as supervisor, and James Robbins as recreational leader. All meetings including the midweek prayer meeting are well attended, the young people taking active part.

Since last General Conference the branch president, Elder E. F. Robertson, has been absent in other parts of the district much of the time, but the needs of the work have been cared for by Brethren Henry R. Eaton and Cecil Billings. Saints are glad indeed to see Brother Eaton in his place, for he was very seriously sick in the early summer.

Recently Apostle Paul M. Hanson visited Stonington and delivered two interesting illustrated lectures, the first subject, "A Trip Through Palestine," the second "Among the Ancient Cities of Central America." He also preached the funeral sermon of Sister Vina Torrey Hutchinson.

All missionaries and other visiting Saints find a welcome at the hospitable and commodious home of Brother George and Sister Linnie Billings.

Western Main Conference on Little Deer Island

The semiannual conference of Western Maine District convened with the branch at Little Deer Isle Saturday evening and Sunday, October 29 and 30. And as is the custom in Maine, was the occasion for the gathering together of the Saints of both the Eastern and Western Districts. Among the first arrivals was the school bus from Jonesport, Eastern District, bringing Brother and Sister Newman M. Wilson and a crowd of young folks with a sprinkling of older ones.

When arranging for a conference at Little Deer Isle, it is not always easy to find a date when the tide serves exactly right, so the Saturday evening session had to begin at six o'clock and close at six forty-five to allow the crowd from the larger island to get home, and the majority of those coming from other parts accompanied them.

The young people spent a few hours in social get-together in the young people's room of the Stonington Church, and all were to be ready to start for Little Deer Isle by seven thirty Sunday morning. This proved to be a miscalculation, however, as at seven thirty the bar was under water and about fifty of the Saints found themselves too late to get across. Garfield Billings got half way over when the water became so high that it stalled his car, so he and his family had to abandon it and wade to shore, and soon the billows were rolling over it and it could not be seen.

Saints and friends living near the shore soon saw the plight of the crowd who could not get across and in a short time row boats were in action. By nine o'clock the first meeting of the day was under way, being in charge of Apostle Paul M. Hanson, E. F. Robertson, and Henry Eaton, of the district presidency.

This was an interesting and spiritual prayer and testimony meeting, and was followed by an ordination service, when James Robbins, of Mountainville, was ordained to the office of elder, and George Billings, of Stonington, to the office of priest, the two district presidents, E. F. Robertson and Newman M. Wilson officiating. After the ordinations, short speeches were made by William H. Clarke, of Sargentville Branch; Henry R. Eaton, of Stonington; Harlan H. Billings, of Little Deer Isle; James Robbins, of Mountainville; Robert E. Billings, of Rockland; Everett Merrill, of Dixfield, and W. E. Rogers, of Eastern Maine District.

After this service the audience listened to an inspirational sermon from Brother Wilson, which concluded the program of the forenoon.

At two-thirty Apostle P. M. Hanson preached, his sermon being well received by the audience which had been augmented by several arrivals from Stonington, the tide now being off the bar. Brother Garfield Billings had rescued his car, and all were smiling and happy.

After the afternoon session people from Eastern Maine and many from Stonington returned home, but the church was as full as ever in the evening when Brother Hanson delivered the closing sermon of the conference. This was the high point of the conference, to some at least, for the sermon was highly spiritual and encouraging as well as deeply intellectual.

By six o'clock on Monday morning Brother Hanson had left, going as far as Lewiston on his way to Boston with Saints returning to Dixfield.

Elder Robertson spent Sunday, November 6, at Stonington, assisting with the centennial program of Joseph Smith III in the evening.

Saints of Mountainville Branch are preparing a play, to be given in the near future, the proceeds to go to their Christmas Offering.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

Columbus Saints at Second Church were glad to have President Frederick M. Smith as a visitor the first Sunday of October. The morning meeting was of a high spiritual order, and in the evening President F. M. Smith talked on the theme, "The Sacrament."

The morning service the following Sunday was dismissed in order that the Saints might meet with First Church to hear President Smith. On that day the members returned home with a better understanding of the objectives of the church and their duty as Saints. Their faith was increased to accomplish the task before them. "Forward" is the watchword.

On the next Sunday morning District President A. E. Anderton preached a splendid sermon on "Our Spiritual Atmosphere."

The women's department met October 20, with twenty-one members and two visitors present. Sister J. E. Matthews read a paper on "The Church as Organized by Joseph Smith." The program was good, beautiful thoughts being expressed in poetry and short articles.

Elder C. W. Clark preached on the evening of October 23 on the text: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." (John 17: 3.)

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ford was blessed October 30, by G. H. Kirkendall and A. E. Anderton.

Temple Builders, Orioles, and Blue Birds are growing under their respective leaders. Each group is doing something helpful. Other speakers for the month were Elders G. H. Kirkendall, R. E. Madden, A. H. Nieman, Teacher Chester A. Carey, and Bishop H. E. French.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue,
South

Elder Thomas Leitch, seventy years of age, former pastor of Fargo, and active in ministerial work throughout the State of North Dakota, passed away October 18. He had been suffering from ill health for some time. He was a faithful member, always ready to relieve those in need, and he is greatly missed by the Saints. Two sisters survive, Sister Jane Perchie, of Saskatoon, Canada, and Sister Barbara Thompson, of Clifford, North Dakota. Funeral services were held from the Boughler-Hughes Funeral Home. Elder Arthur Bundy, of Duluth, officiated. Interment was at Clifford, North Dakota, the service being conducted by Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe.

The women of the adult division have elected Sister Thomas Hunter superintendent of the ladies' aid, and Sister Fred Wiedling, assistant. The social committee consists of Sisters R. T. Walker, S. M. Brown, and R. H. Freeman. The relief committee, Sisters J. F. Rotzien, and William Shackow.

The branch held a chicken pie supper and bazaar at Brother John Rotzien's home, the proceeds to be used to erect a new chimney in the church and to repair the furnace.

The young people's division enjoyed a wiener roast at Oak Grove Park and a farewell party at the home of Brother Frank Stowell in honor of Roy Weddle who has returned to his home at Lamoni, Iowa.

Halloween was celebrated with games and refreshments by the young people on Halloween evening and by the children's division on Tuesday evening at Brother John Rotzien's.

Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe, always faithful in his office, has preached several interesting sermons. Some of his subjects have been "Be Strong and Courageous Enough to Live What We Believe," and "True Christians Are Reporters," quoted from Apostle Edwards, in Ensign; also "Thrift," "Temperance," and "The Source of Spiritual Power," in honor of the Joseph Smith centennial. The church school also celebrated this occasion with readings and songs.

The younger priesthood members have assisted in preaching. Brother Jerome Stowell gave a good talk, and Brother Courtney Rotzien presented "Assurance" from Elder J. A. Gunsolley's quarterly, "The Belief of the Church for Youth."

A son, Roger Hunt, was born September 27, to Pastor and Sister H. E. Ratcliffe.

Missionary P. T. Andersen called on Fargo Saints on his way to La Moure and Straubsville, North Dakota, to hold services.

The sacrament service was well attended November 6, and a good spirit prevailed. The theme was the Joseph Smith centennial.

Fanning, Kansas

Plan to Help the Needy

There was large attendance at the November sacrament service, in charge of Elders William Marsh and William Twombly. Because of the funeral of Brother Thompson in the afternoon the prayer and testimony service was omitted. William Twombly was the speaker at the evening service.

Informal discussions in the form of a round table have been held preceding the church services on the last two Sunday nights. Some concrete suggestions for the care of the needy in this community have been made and it is hoped that some of these can be carried out.

On Sunday afternoon, November 6, the funeral services for Brother Johnnie Thompson were held from Fanning church. The sermon was preached by Elder Samuel Twombly. Brother Thompson was highly esteemed in this community and this fact was attested to by the presence of between four and five hundred people at the funeral. It was one of the largest funerals ever held from Fanning church.

At the monthly meeting of the young people's class, October 27, Phillip Tilden and Mary Helen Thomas were host and hostess. After playing games around a bonfire near the rock quarry on the Tilden farm, the young folk went to the Thomas home where refreshments were served.

Two of the young people of this branch, Cordie Wiley and Marvin Jes-chke, were united in marriage on Monday night, October 31, at the home of the bride's parents, by Elder James A. Thomas.

Portsmouth, Ohio

West Side Mission

Saints of this mission are enjoying their services: Sunday school at nine thirty each Sunday morning; prayer and praise meeting at 10.45; preaching by the local priesthood in the evening; Bible study each Thursday evening.

Elder John R. Grice, of Columbus, Ohio, the district missionary, was here the latter part of September. His subject for the first week was, "The Kingdom of God and What it Includes." So plain were his sermons that the smallest member could understand, and there was a fair audience at each service. Brother Grice preached on the restored gospel and the Prophet, the second week of his series.

A fine spirit attended the November sacrament meeting, and peace prevailed. The prayer and praise service was held at two thirty in the afternoon in order that members from nearby branches might attend. A number were present from McDermott, Ohio.

Sunday, October 16, was a day long to be remembered. The gift of tongues and interpretation was given. Brother Grice remained here until the nineteenth.

The women's department is active. They meet every two weeks on Wednesday afternoon.

Elder Rexroad, president of this mission, brought a wonderful sermon message to the Saints October 23. He is a fine leader.

Pleasanton, Iowa

Aged Couple Are Baptized

Sunday, October 23, a few members of Pleasanton Branch met at the usual church school hour, ten o'clock, for service. Owing to the condition of the weather and roads not many were there. An aged couple, James N. Estes, eighty-three years of age, and his wife, Rose Bicknell Estes, seventy-five years, had given their names for baptism and had motored down from Leon, Iowa. They arrived that morning just at the church school hour. The school was dismissed in order that the baptismal ceremony might take place early as Brother and Sister Estes wished to return to Ames in the afternoon.

Elder J. Emmett Leeper officiated in the service of baptism, and the pair were confirmed by Elders Leeper and L. W. Moffett.

Years ago Brother Estes's parents were neighbors to John Keown, one of the pioneers of the church. Brother Estes states that his mother never joined the church, but had she joined any church it would have been the organization of the Saints. He has lived in the vicinity of Pleasanton, Iowa, since the first church people settled here eighty years ago. Mrs. Estes's mother was a member of the church and also all her sisters. She is the last daughter of the Bicknell family to join the church. She was reared and has lived all her life in Pleasanton.

Independence

Tomorrow is Thanksgiving Day, and the Saints of Independence will observe it with a service of worship, thanksgiving, and praise. Ten o'clock is the hour set for Thanksgiving services in the various congregations.

At the Stone Church Pastor John F. Sheehy will speak. There will be appropriate hymns by the congregation, "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," and "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow." The choir will sing, directed by Paul N. Craig, and there will be solo numbers both vocal and violin. The call to worship will be given by the pastor who will read the President's Thanksgiving Proclamation. Elder H. G. Barto will offer the invocation. During this hour a special Thanksgiving offering will be taken up.

The women of Independence raised a sum of approximately nine hundred and fifty dollars in their first three weeks of special personal sacrifice. The money was collected in envelopes distributed to the women in all the groups once each week, and counted following the women's mass meeting held every Monday afternoon at two o'clock.

At the meeting last Monday the needs of the Commodity Shop were stressed, and the operation of the new "Women's Exchange" was explained. Various measures of household economy are being discussed and initiated by the women who not only are thinking of their own special endeavor to help the general church, but also of other ways to sacrifice as the church begins its Thanksgiving-to-Christmas Sacrifice Period.

Not long ago the Young People's Council of Independence announced the opening of a Sunday afternoon meeting for young men and women of the city in the young people's room at the Auditorium. The first meeting of this group occurred last Sunday afternoon at two-thirty, and Pastor John F. Sheehy was the speaker. He chose to discuss an important theme, "Choose You This Day Whom Ye Will Serve," the words of Joshua.

All observations of the Joseph Smith Centennial held in Independence during the month of November will be fittingly climaxed next Sunday night with a union meeting of all congregations in the basement of the Auditorium. The pageant, "Milestones in the Life of Joseph Smith III," written by Elder and Sister S. A. Burgess and produced under the direction of the White Masque Players, will be presented.

Stone Church

In his sermon to the Stone Church congregation Sunday morning Apostle J. F. Curtis, commemorating the Joseph Smith Centennial, established on a sound basis of law the office of the First Presidency in the church and also the right of Joseph Smith, son of the first President of the church, to occupy in that office. For a Scripture lesson Brother Curtis read Joshua 1: 1-9.

It has been some months since Brother Curtis appeared in the Stone Church pulpit where he is a welcome speaker. He plans to remain in Independence for a time, and will enter the Independence Sanitarium this week for an operation and treatment.

The choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang "Prayer of Thanksgiving," a Welsh melody; "More Love to Thee, O Christ," and "Holy Art Thou," Handel's "Largo." Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley, soprano soloist, of Kansas City, Missouri, sang "Whither Shall I Go From Thy Spirit?" Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder Calvin H. Rich.

The evening service was designed to present a more personal aspect of the late President of the church, and Pastor John F. Sheehy spoke on "Joseph Smith as I Knew Him." The remainder of the program was furnished by the Wahdemna Choral Club, directed by Paul N. Craig. They sang "Hear, Lord, Our God," and "Hymn of Praise," both by Tschaiakowsky, and Miss Fern Griggs, soprano, sang "Alone With Thee," by Bailey. Gomer Cool, violinist, played a selection from Schumann, and Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee, rendered organ selections. Miss Olive Curtis, a member of the choral club, gave the oration, "Joseph Smith."

Walnut Park Church

Sunday morning the new church school superintendent, Albert Chapman, presented nominations for his corps of helpers for the coming year. The following names were presented and approved by the school: Assistant superintendent, C. G. Closson; superintendent of young people's department, Ruth Bryant; assistant superintendent of young people, Kenneth Morford; superintendent of children's division, Sister Irwin Moorman; secretary, Audrey Horn. The superintendent of the adult department is yet to be selected.

Lois Jean Williams, daughter of Assistant Pastor and Sister M. T. Williams, gave two entertaining Thanksgiving readings during the program period of the church school, and Joe Countryman played a cornet solo.

The young people's chorus, under the direction of Maurine Nace, sang at the morning preaching service Sunday. The message of the hour was delivered by Elder C. B. Woodstock. Elder R. S. Salyards was the speaker Sunday evening, and the anthem was by the senior choir, Minnie Scott Dobson directing.

The success of the Religio, which is held at six o'clock each Sunday evening, is surpassing the fondest hopes of its sponsors. From a start of about one hundred at its initial meeting two months ago, it has increased each succeeding Sunday until last Sunday two hundred and six were present at the class period. A large number of early comers for the evening preaching services always drop in for the assembly hour and enjoy the program. Sunday evening the program consisted of a Thanksgiving reading by Glenna Dean Jacobs, five years old, and a spelling match in which the members of the young people's classes participated.

The Galilean Class of the church school is sponsoring a missionary effort in the vicinity of the Rock Creek School, just west of Independence, meetings being held once each week at the home of Mr. Babbitt, a nonmember. Tuesday evening Elder I. E. Burke, teacher of the class, was the speaker, his subject being, "The Message of the Book of Mormon." A very good interest is reported in these meetings.

A group of girls of the congregation recently met at the home of Violet Chase, and organized a sewing club, under the direction of Sister Mansel Williams. The following officers were elected: President, Violet Chase; vice president, Helen Moorman; and secretary, Ina Lutz. A committee consisting of Mary Belle Sanders, Kathryn Price and Audrey Horn was appointed by the president to choose a name for the club, and from the names suggested the Dorcas Club was selected. The purpose of the club is to sew for the needy, thus emulating the example of the Bible character for whom the club is named. Meetings are held each Friday.

The young people's class taught by Elder W. T. Gard, in conjunction with the Galilean Class, held a covered-dish supper at 6:30 Monday evening in the basement of the church. In addition to a covered dish, each person attending brought a pound of some nonperishable food, to be used in making up Thanksgiving baskets for the needy. Meat for the baskets will be purchased with money from the class treasuries.

Spring Branch Church

Last Wednesday night two prayer services were held in this district, one at the church and one at the home of A. L. Murdock. At the church Morris Jacobsen and George Bilquist were in charge, and the theme was "Prayer." At eight fifteen the branch had silent prayer for Brother Murdock who was administered to at that time. At the home of the sick man, J. S. Andes and Robert Fish were in charge. Both services were well attended, and Brother Murdock is much improved.

Elder Robert Fish, the morning speaker Sunday, chose as his theme words from Luke 17, "Remember Lot's Wife." Pastor G. W. Eastwood was in charge of this service, assisted by Jesse Smith. Oral McClain sang, "Beautiful Garden of Prayer," and the prelude was played by Gladys Smith.

The program for the church school hour consisted of two piano numbers by Harold Buseth, and Pastor Eastwood told two stories on sacrifice and work.

Another local minister, Morris Jacobsen, was the evening speaker. For a text he chose Hebrews 11: 6. Fern Belk, Gladys and Othelia Dixon, and Francis Tankard sang, "All the Way."

A farewell party was held for the George Bilquist family Monday night, at the church. They are moving to Atherton and in so doing take from this congregation eleven active members.

Friday night, "The Spinsters' Convention," a play, will be given at the church. Proceeds from this event will go to the women's sacrifice fund to pay back missionary allowances.

Utah District Observes Joseph Smith Centennial

Special Meetings of Ogden, Provo, and Salt Lake City Branches

The centennial anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith III was very satisfactorily observed through the Utah district. On account of the distance from Salt Lake City, Malad, Idaho, celebrated the day as a local. Ogden and Provo joined with Salt Lake in an all-day meeting, November 6, all three places being very well represented.

The day begun with the church school at ten o'clock in the morning. The primaries marched to their class room, and the other classes remaining in assembly room, were taught by Elder A. M. Chase, who gave them the lesson from the life of the late Prophet. An excellent spirit prevailed at the sacrament service which followed at eleven o'clock. A basket dinner was served at twelve thirty, and at two thirty Elder R. R. Robertson gave an instructive and interesting sermon on "Sources of Spiritual Power." This was followed by a talk by Sister A. M. Chase on "Women's Work and Part in the Sacrifice Period." From three thirty to four thirty Elder Chase conducted a round table. Following this a basket luncheon was served.

From seven to seven thirty the time was occupied in a general songfest, interspersed with reminiscences and instrumental numbers. Beginning at seven thirty the play, "Milestones in the Life of Joseph Smith III," was given by Salt Lake and Ogden Branches, Ogden furnishing the musical numbers between the scenes. This was done from their position in the gallery, giving a very fine effect. This enterprise necessitated considerable planning and energy for the small branch here, but all entered diligently into the undertaking with an excellent spirit. The house was comparatively full, and workers were happy to know that the message was "put across" in a creditable manner.

Between scenes they were favored with two musical numbers by the two daughters and son of Brother and Sister Allen Wardel, using piano, violin, and saxophone, and Miss Louise Kinghorn gave us a beautiful piano solo. These were all from Salt Lake City Branch.

It was a privilege to present to this people these highlights from the life of this wonderful man who so ably succeeded his father as Prophet of the church. The Saints wish this message could be given in every city and ward of this Mormon community.

A few weeks ago they witnessed a pageant in the big tabernacle here, "Genealogy of Joseph the Seer." The pageantry was well done, but the effort to glorify the man not so creditable. This tracing of his ancestry through regal and prophetic families back to Adam seemed to be misdirected zeal to glorify the man, rather than his message. And the alleged object of this pageant, to show the importance of the Temple work—searching out genealogies and sealing the families in one—seemed to Reorganized Church members to come very short of the mark. When one considers the ramifications and interlocking of these genealogies he is led into a maze from which there can be no deliverance. The close of this pageant shows Joseph Smith I blessing Joseph the Seer, bestowing upon him the blessings of Abraham, etc. From the seat next to them Brother and Sister Chase heard, "Oh, is this all? Does it end this way?" And from another: "Did Joseph the Seer have no posterity?"

Surely Brother and Sister S. A. Burgess must have been inspired to write their wonderful play for special use in Utah! The Saints wish they could have presented it before thousands of people who witnessed the pageant in the tabernacle. It would have been a fitting climax, and would have answered their questions, bringing the Lord's work down to date.

The next district enterprise is to put over the program of the Sacrifice Period.

An honest man is the noblest work of God. I don't expect to find perfection in the church, because I am a part of it, but this should not discourage me from trying for perfection.—James F. Keir, in a sermon to the branch at Omaha, Nebraska.

Lowbanks, Ontario

Priesthood Speak at Rally Day Services

This branch had rally day October 23, and in the morning after the Sunday school Elder D. Clatworthy gave a fine sermon. The choir of fourteen young people sang hymns. Dinner was spread in the basement, and two hours of interesting speeches were enjoyed in the afternoon. There were seven of the priesthood present besides the one in charge. They came from Welland, Niagara Falls, Humberstone, and Fort Erie. Six of these were called upon for five-minute sermonets, Hiram MacDonald, the oldest member in the branch; Elder F. C. Baldwin, of Welland, Austin MacDonald, Niagara Falls; Percy Baldwin, Ernest Willmott, and Edward Barwick, the pastor. Sister Roy Clatworthy, of Fort Erie, sang a solo.

Two young men were baptized early in October by Elder Clatworthy, Willbert Minnor and Russell Chalmers.

Study class attendance on Sunday morning is good. To begin the month of October, Elder Clatworthy introduced a contest which he called "Crossing the Continent by Auto." Four captains were chosen from the young people, and names of places and cars were given. The two cars to arrive first at their destinations will be declared winners, and are entitled to a treat from the losers.

The Saints were pleased with the reunion of the past season. Study classes were especially instructive.

San Francisco, California

Danver Street Branch

Saints of this group are earnestly engaged in spreading the gospel message. On October 9, six souls were inducted into the kingdom by baptism. Five were from Redwood City and one from San Francisco. The five were brought into the church through the efforts of Brother and Sister E. E. Hartsough, of Redwood City. All joined the Danver Street Branch.

The financial condition through which the world is passing, has brought misfortune and lack of employment to some, but most of the wage earners are still working and doing what they can for the church in a financial way.

This branch is proud of its women's department. Through the untiring efforts of the women much has been accomplished. The things done by the constantly active women's department, are always well done. They responded generously in taking care of the building of the social hall.

Sometime ago at a lovely wedding ceremony Miss Grace Newbrough became the bride of Louis Fitzgerald, Elder Edward B. Hinton officiating. The wedding took place at the home of the bride in Millbrae Highlands, and about fifty were present. Sister Grace is a niece of Elder P. R. Burton, a missionary for many years.

The hearts of this branch were saddened September 12, by the death of a noble sister, Hattie Putney, known to all traveling missionaries. Her passing leaves a vacancy that can never be filled.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer is here, giving some wonderful sermons and counsel. The Saints also enjoy the services of Elder Arthur Oakman who is doing a good work. The desire of local workers is to help make the Lord's work grow and accomplish its purpose.

Tulsa, Oklahoma

Elder J. W. A. Bailey Conducts Five Weeks of Meetings

November 12.—During July and August the Saints of Tulsa met on Sunday evenings in a union service of all city churches at Skelly Stadium. Then for the first three weeks of September they met in group prayer services. These services were a part of the program arranged by branch officers as preparation for a series of meetings planned for the full month of October.

September 25, rally day, was therefore like a home-coming as well as the beginning of an intensive fall program. The day opened with a prayer service at eight thirty, followed by church school. At eleven o'clock the hour was taken for the installation of the officers of the branch, who had been elected for the fiscal year on the Thursday evening before. Each department leader pledged the cooperation of his department as called upon, and the congregation at the conclusion stood and, in turn, pledged its support. The department of women had charge of the serving of a basket dinner, and it was a most enjoyable feast served to some two hundred Saints. In the evening the choir presented a sacred concert which was enjoyed by a large congregation.

On Sunday, October 3, Elder J. W. A. Bailey met with the congregation in communion service, and was introduced as the speaker for the coming month. Brother Bailey made a short and interesting introductory talk concerning his subjects for the services, and quickly won his way into the confidence of the people. That evening the audience, who are accustomed to hearing a missionary begin on the six principles of the gospel, were surprised to hear a splendid presentation of our social program, "Government by God," or "Zion."

Not only had our people been prepared for these services by three weeks of prayer meetings, but considerable advertising had been done. There was a special advertisement in the daily paper and a news article, as well as the regular information on the church page. Some of the members of our congregation volunteered to distribute two thousand five hundred cards, giving the purpose of the meeting and some of the subjects to be presented. Nine-foot banners on sign cloth were placed on two sides of the church building, and a string of colored lights was placed over the entrance to call attention of those passing. Besides these methods of endeavoring to reach those outside, the membership promised to invite their neighbors. Help and cooperation were manifested in every department for the entire five weeks.

For three weeks Brother Bailey held his audience with sermons from the prophets and the history of the Bible. At the end of the third week, the audience with an average attendance of one hundred and forty voted that he continue two more weeks. The last two weeks he supplemented his talks on the Book of Mormon and the life of Christ with pictures. His last lecture, Sunday evening, November 6, was on Solomon's Temple and was given to a crowd of two hundred and fifty.

Brother Bailey had a number of friends in this part of the country, having held a six months' meeting in Wagoner, Oklahoma, some years ago. His friends came from a number of the surrounding branches, and one family drove ninety miles round trip and attended as many as half the services. We were glad to welcome Saints from Oklahoma City, Terilton, Drumright, Skiatook, and Sperry.

During the period of missionary effort, eight were baptized and confirmed members of the church. Circumstances hindered three others from being baptized who had confessed they were ready for church membership. Officers have no way of measuring the good done to those outside the church, other than the words of appreciation they have heard from some of them, nor is it likely they will ever know the good that came to our Tulsa members. Many church members of years' standing confessed deeper conception of the beauty and magnitude of the gospel and a greater love for the church. According to the testimony of some of the young people, there has been laid a foundation for their belief that will not be erased by the years to come.

The creeds of 1830 bottled up Jesus. They made him a man of yesterday, a character of the past only. The Restoration is a call to bring the influences of a living Christ through a living church into this century of the world's history. It is the task of this church to finish the portrait of Jesus not as a man of yesterday, but as the divine Son living today, not Jesus who was, but Jesus who is and who goes on before.—F. M. McDowell, in "The Unfinished Portrait," a sermon preached at the Stone Church.

Omaha, Nebraska

Omaha Branch was pleased to have Apostle J. F. Garver in attendance at the annual business meeting September 23, at which time the following officers were chosen: Elder Ray Whiting, pastor, with Elders Marion Cooper and R. W. Scott as counselors; Elder Merl Grover, church school director; Elder C. T. Self, secretary; Elder Fred Lang, adult supervisor; Mindred Keairnes, young people's supervisor; Mrs. Cecil Stark, children's supervisor, and Mrs. Dorothy Stoff, chorister.

Following a rally on September 25, a series of missionary services was held with Pastor Ray Whiting as the speaker. The theme for this series was, "The Kingdom of God," with special emphasis on the fact that "We should be kingdom of God builders, and not just church members."

Roscoe Davey, visiting elder from Chicago, occupied the pulpit October 9, and in his sermon dwelt on transformations and qualities in individual lives which are essential to kingdom of God building.

A priesthood class beginning October 10, meets every Monday evening to study the new Priesthood Manual, under the direction of Pastor Whiting.

The choir, directed by Dorothy Stoff, has organized for the coming year, and rendered its first anthem at the Sunday evening service October 16. The morning sermon on that day was given by Bishop James F. Keir, of Independence. A touching solo, "Thanks be to God," rendered by Harry Greenway, completed this excellent service.

A short program was given by the Graceland alumni on Graceland Day, October 23, and was followed by a sermonet by Pastor Whiting, also a former Graceland student.

The young people were quite active during October. About thirty-five hikers enjoyed an evening around a large bonfire, roasting wieners and playing games. And again, a Halloween party provided a good time for about twenty-five young folks.

The Wednesday evening prayer services are swelling in attendance and a peaceful spirit seems to be felt by all. Especially did this spirit prevail at the last sacrament service at which time God spoke to the Saints through one of the elders.

Omaha Saints have established a branch storehouse to help meet the needs of the poor families in their midst this winter. A large number of contributions have been made, and much credit is due the women's group for their untiring efforts in canning and preserving perishable foods, donated for this purpose. At present the storehouse contains about four hundred quarts of fruit and vegetables, a quantity of flour, potatoes, and other nonperishable foods. The storehouse also includes clothing, shoes, and bedding. Workers hope to be able to provide for their poor this winter without the necessity of raising funds for this purpose.

The branch treasury was swelled about eleven dollars Monday, November 7, when forty-five women attended an electrical demonstration given by the Nebraska Power Company. The church received twenty-five cents for each woman who attended.

Two weddings have taken place during the recent past. Miss Alta Royer, formerly of Shenandoah, Iowa, became the bride of John Topham, of Omaha. Both are former Graceland students, and are rapidly finding work to do. Mrs. Topham has been given full charge of all dramatic productions, and is also a talented pianist. Miss Lura Louise Kinney and Mr. Marvin Jones were quietly married November 4. Both these young people are active in church school work. Best wishes are extended to both young couples.

Los Angeles, California

Central Church, Thirty-ninth and Grand Avenue

The inexorable march of time goes on, and in its passing, brings all the joys, hopes, and disappointments that go to make up life. Of recent date the Saints were made sad by the death of Sister Fern McConley. And, while they will and do miss her, they feel sure she has entered into a far more glorious experience than she ever had in this life. They are also happy, knowing that her days of usefulness have not been ended, as she has entered into a new life.

Elder Lawrence O. Brockway and Miss Hazel M. Klein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Klein, were married in Los Angeles, California, September 30, by Apostle M. A. McConley. The bridal pair were attended by Miss Stella Brockway, sister of the bridegroom, and Mr. Sidney Omohundro.

Friday, October 21, the Los Angeles Central Choir gave a musical concert which was enjoyed by all present.

Elder Mark Yeoman and wife, of Portland, Oregon, were visitors of Central Los Angeles Branch Sunday, October 23.

Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry paid this branch a visit some time past, and gave two good talks along financial lines. His talks were well received, and his frank and pleasing personality made him many friends in Los Angeles.

President Elbert A. Smith has been here for some little time. He preached in different parts of the Southern California District with good crowds attending. He preached again in Los Angeles Central Sunday, October 30, morning and evening. The evening service was particularly for the young people, and a large crowd was present; quite a number from some of the other branches. Church attendance is about normal.

Brentwood (Missouri) Branch

Marshall and Berry Avenues

The new church school plan has been put into operation in the branch. Various officers were elected, and all is going splendidly. The junior services, a part of the plan, have been well attended by the children of the church school. Heretofore they had gone home after the usual Sunday school hour.

A girls' quartet, composed of Mildred Fath, Selma Oliver, Pauline Gillespie, and Lucille Demargel, has been assisting in recent services.

A Halloween party was sponsored by the "Goodfellows" at the church the Thursday evening before the usual date.

Sister Hazel Nelson while on her trip to Kansas City, had to undergo an operation. She is expected home soon, well and strong.

The young men's club gave another spaghetti supper the evening of November 3, which was most successful.

"Where Wilt Thou Put Thy Trust?" was the theme of Ira S. Day, who spoke the morning of October 30.

Saints of this branch have been assisting Priest J. P. Carson, colored, in his preaching services at Webster Groves. A hall was rented for the occasion, and a room was secured for Brother Carson and his wife. Brentwood Saints are grateful for the services of Brother and Sister Carson in this nearby town. Several are interested in the restored gospel and are to be baptized upon his return next summer.

Delta, Colorado

Local Harvest Festival an Attraction

It is encouraging to note the continued interest displayed in different church services in Delta. All seem to have a "work together" spirit that is indeed commendable.

October 1 and 2, a local harvest home festival was held in the upper church rooms. Very fine selections consisting of fruits and vegetables (canned and fresh) and grains as well as flowers, quilts and needlework were among the artistically arranged displays. A few of the more nonperishable samples and some canned fruits were shipped to Independence for entrance into the big Harvest Home Festival there. The young people and different departments put on the programs to help furnish entertainment both amusing and helpful during the festival.

Glen Rose, son of Brother and Sister Arthur Rose, of Montrose, was baptized October 9, an impressive service having been specially prepared for the occasion.

Brother and Sister Clarence Wallis are proud of a fine, wee daughter born the latter part of September. She was named Carla Jean.

The young people are active. A Halloween party was enjoyed at the Truman Vest ranch home, and on November 2, a box social was held west of Delta. A splendid time was had and something over eight dollars was collected on the sale of the boxes. The proceeds are to be applied as sacrifice offering for the group.

The Joseph Smith centennial was observed with an appropriate program and Brother Seph Hubbard preached a splendid sermon in accord with the theme of the day.

Manchester, England

Beresford Road Church

On October 12, the Girl Guides held a tea party to commemorate the seventh anniversary of their existence, and under the supervision of Captain Marie Walker a very enjoyable evening was had. The school director, Elder Abel Hall, received an invitation to be present, and although the business session of the branch took place that same evening, he spent one hour with them before leaving for the business meeting. Each of the girls brought along some part of the food. The decorations for the table were also made by the hands of the Guides. During the evening Brother Hall was requested to present two gifts, one to Guide Joan Nield, and one to Guide Winifred Ollier. The day of the party happened to be also the day of Miss Nield's fourteenth birthday, and as two days following was the birthday of Miss Ollier, both were the recipients of gifts purchased by the captain.

After the tea, they entered into a social evening. On these occasions the girls always remember the anniversary of the death of High Priest Joseph Dew-snap, for it happened during the very week of the inauguration of the Guide movement in the branch, and the Guides always see to it that his grave receives a gift of flowers.

Two weeks prior to this they also gave a concert in the schoolroom of Beresford Road, for the purpose of raising funds to enable them to meet their expenses. The following gave recitations: Misses Ena Gillatt, Joan Smith, Ivy Stevenson, Joan Nield and Winnie Rawson. Piano-forte solos were rendered by Miss May Crowe. An amusing "backward drill" was given by the Brownies, Miss Joan Nield gave a splendid exhibition of club swinging, and Miss Winnie Rawson, a child about eight years of age, gave a beautiful exhibition of dancing.

Two little playlets were also given during the evening, one by the Guides entitled "Cornish Cream," and one by the Brownies, entitled "Brownies' Baby." Elder Abel Hall was the chairman of the evening.

October 16 the branch held its harvest festival, and under the direction of the school director, the pupils again gave the program of music, etc. For the afternoon and evening services special efforts were made. Elder James Baty, a worthy son of a worthy father, the late patriarch of the British Isles Mission, was the chairman of the afternoon service, and Elder Fred Tapping, of the James Street Branch, was the speaker. He gave an interesting talk on the beauties of harvest-time. The school, under the direction of its director, rendered the following musical numbers, "Look for the Beautiful," and "Consecration." Sister Marie Walker sang "Lord of the Harvest," and Master Eric King recited a Psalm.

The evening session was in charge of the pastor, W. R. Armstrong, and the speaker was Elder Abel Hall, who took for his subject the words of Christ, "I am he that is in all things."

During the evening the singing was of a high order, indeed, and was undoubtedly directed by the Spirit of the Master himself. It influenced the meeting considerably, and made all feel that they were entering into the presence of the Holy One.

William Hall sang "List to the Evening Song," and the choir immediately followed with the chorus, "Neath the Palms." Both of these were taken from the oratorio, "Under the Palms," and were feelingly sung by Brother Hall and the choir. A beautiful duet was sung by Elder S. F. Mather and William Hall, "Breathe On Me, Breath of God," to the tune, "Trentham," and the choir sang as a chorus, "O Father Almighty."

Several of the old-time members expressed their joy at the tone of the services, and, like Oliver Twist, asked for more.

Buffalo, New York

Hold Uplifting Joseph Smith Centennial Services

So enlightening and educational was their program celebrating the centennial of the birth of the Prophet, Joseph Smith, the third, that Buffalo, New York, Saints now count him a personal friend.

The first meeting was held on Friday night, several readings being given to introduce Brother Smith, and a quartet rendering one of his beautiful compositions, "Tenderly, Tenderly, Lead Thou Me On." Elder William I. Fligg, district missionary, spoke on "The Prophetic Leadership of Joseph Smith," and brought the Saints in closer touch with the part he played in the gospel plan.

Elder Fligg had charge of a round table discussion of priesthood problems Saturday afternoon.

That night a beautiful program was presented. There were several musical selections, and Brother Fligg's subject was "The Prophetic Office."

The most outstanding meeting of the centennial celebration was the Sunday morning sacrament service which was characterized by peace and reverence. The combined choirs of Niagara Falls and Buffalo Branches sang "Send Forth the Sowers Lord," by Joseph Smith, and "Let Us Shake Off the Coals From Our Garments," by David Smith. The subject of Brother Fligg's sermon was "Joseph Smith and the Reorganization." At the close of this service a gift of two pictures, brought from England several years ago by Sister Lloyd, was presented to the branch.

Sunday afternoon papers were read with reference to Joseph Smith's work in the community, in his home, and in the church. Then came tributes to his memory. One sister read from her autograph book verses written by the Prophet when once he visited in England.

The final service of the celebration was the evening preaching service, Brother Fligg's topic being "Sources of Spiritual Power."

So uplifting were these services that the Saints not only were made better acquainted with the second Prophet of Latter Days, but also were given a greater desire to aid in the completion of his work.

Individualistic tendencies that men have permitted to ripen in their lives have composed one of the greatest curses that has ever come to the human race. . . . And no greater error has ever been made in the work of God, with its aim to build up a people socially minded to save themselves and others from the sins of the world, than the idea that the teachings of Jesus are individualistic.—E. Y. Hunker, in a sermon preached at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

New York Fall Conference at Sherrill

Instructive Program Carried Out

The weather man favored the semi-annual conference of New York District, October 22 and 23, and Saints came to Sherrill from Niagara Falls, Johnson City, Fulton, Syracuse, Buffalo, and Red Creek. District President P. L. Weegar was in charge.

Due to circumstances the early conference crowd is almost always small, and on this occasion this condition was particularly regrettable. The Saturday afternoon session was an important one.

The district chorister, Catharine Lambert, who brought her mother, Sister Tillie Lambert, and Sister Maurine Weegar, was on time, and helped in her office. Special numbers were given by Sister Maurine and Sister Ada Davidson.

During the course of the afternoon, "Branch Problems," and "Factors Producing Growth," were considered by Brothers F. C. Mesle and M. Whitehead. "Attractive Features of the Church" were catalogued by Elder James Bishop, and "What Constitutes a Falling Away From the Church and Reasons," was discussed by Brother Floyd Rathbun. "The Place of Youth in the Church," was the subject of talks by Dorothy Mesle and Vernon Whitehead. District Missionary William I. Fligg, spoke on "Identifying Christ With His Church."

Brother Fligg had spent two weeks in Sherrill previous to the conference, giving splendid sermons on his chart each night except Tuesdays and Saturdays. On Tuesday evenings Saints met in the homes and enjoyed pleasant services.

On conference Sunday morning at nine thirty the prayer service was well attended, and so good was the response that the church school session was omitted in order that more time might be given to prayer and testimony. The Spirit was evidenced by the many testimonies.

At eleven o'clock the district missionary presented a convincing sermon. The dinner at twelve thirty was served in the basement as were also supper on Saturday evening, and other meals on Sunday.

District Saints were pleased to have present from Rensselaer, Sister A. H. Sutton and family. They came from near Albany and returned the same day on account of Brother Sutton's work.

A short priesthood meeting convened at two o'clock in the afternoon, Doctor Weegar in charge until the hour for him to leave arrived. Then others of the priesthood spoke.

By the time of the evening service, the crowd began to assume proportions of the local congregation, but there were present some friends who seldom come. James E. Bishop preached a fine sermon.

Elder and Sister Bishop visited Sherrill about three weeks before the conference. He was district missionary here thirteen years ago, and was extended a hearty welcome. They were homeward bound after a trip East which included stops at Scranton and Philadelphia.

The Saints enjoyed the lecture and pictures on Kirtland Temple the first Sunday night Brother Bishop was here. Leaving the morning after the conference, Brother Bishop planned to take Brother and Sister Ernest Davies, of Scranton, who had favored New York Saints with their presence at the conference, as well as Brother Lot Bishop and wife on a trip to Hill Cumorah before returning to Johnson City and Scranton.

The second morning Elder Fligg left intending to spend a week at Rochester on his way to Buffalo and Niagara Falls, where he was scheduled to conduct special services. Sherrill members will be glad to see him again. He is ambitious to do good and to help bring souls into the kingdom.

People are not flocking to hear the gospel as we might wish. In good times they are engrossed in pleasure; in depressing times they are too engrossed in their troubles and problems to think of their souls.

Sherrill Branch has suffered the loss of Sister Dunn and her husband who are now in Michigan.

The local women's departments meets every week on Wednesday afternoon. One evening they had a shower in honor of Stewart Burke and bride who make their home in Munnsville.

Brother and Sister Archibald Angus visited this branch as they were returning home from the Kirtland reunion. Their son, Arnold, and his wife are in Sherrill part of the time. He has had no regular position for some time. They are welcome here for they are very helpful among the young people.

The Sunday school superintendent, Carl Mesle, is now attending Graceland College, and his sister, Dorothy, elected to take his place, is away getting further schooling at Syracuse, where she is able to meet with Saints.

Sherrill members are aware of the serious needs of the church and hope soon to do something to assist. They like the new Herald and hope it will be more widely circulated than ever before.

The branch postponed the Joseph Smith centennial program from the sixth to the thirteenth of November in order that they may celebrate it with Syracuse Saints.

Ionia, Michigan, Church Is Dedicated

District President A. C. Barmore
Principal Speaker

October 30 was a happy day for Saints of Ionia, Michigan, for it was the date set aside by District President A. C. Barmore for the dedication of their church building. Saints came from Lansing, Grand Rapids, and Belding, and the church was full.

The day's services began with a nine thirty prayer meeting in charge of Elders J. D. Aelick and E. B. Blett. The dedicatory service occurred at eleven o'clock, and the sermon by Elder Barmore, emphasized the purposes for which the church was built. It was a clear, thoughtful, and instructive discourse. The opening prayer was offered by Elder S. A. Barss, pastor of Lansing Branch, and consisted in part of the gift of tongues.

Five years ago Saints of Ionia built a house of worship. In this work Elder C. E. Harrington, then district president, took active part. The church has been occupied ever since its completion, but could not be dedicated because of the indebtedness on it. Elder J. D. Aelick was the branch president when the building was erected. He lives in Belding, sixteen miles away, and has repeatedly traveled that distance to work with Ionia Saints. Brother Aelick and his family have been good help and have received the loyal support of local workers.

In the afternoon, beginning at two thirty, Elder Archie Whitehead, of Muskegon, delivered an excellent discourse, and at three forty-five a brief but edifying address was given by Bishop Elmer C. Evans, of Grand Rapids. Sister Louise Evans, also of Grand Rapids, had charge of the music.

The Pigeonhole

"With the Jawbone of an Ass"

"That," said the Pigeon, as he strutted on our window ledge a few days ago, "is Scripture. Maybe you remember reading that a fellow named Samson was angered at his neighbors who lived over by the sea-coast. And finding nothing handy but that poor weapon he slew ten thousand of them."

We had never expected to find a modern instance. But the other day the Independence Examiner carried a story of a man in a neighboring town who became enraged at his daughter-in-law. So violent was his wrath that he sought something to throw at her. Nothing else being handy, he drew out his false teeth and threw them.

Samson found his weapon on the hillside, but our neighbor had only to reach in his own mouth!

All this goes to show the folly of trifling with a violent temper. The man who has one is unfortunate, and the person who vexes him is also unfortunate in lacking judgment. Somebody is bound to get hurt.

Violent passions, whether of individual or of nations, lead men to bad ends. Samson's whole life brought nothing but an amazing exhibition of physical power. No great good resulted from his having lived—nothing comparable with the lives of the prophets, nothing at all like the life of the Master.

Anger and passion, whether exhibited by factions in our own political warfare, by the Reds in attempting to discredit and break down government, or by the Nazis in Germany, are equally futile and destructive. They accomplish nothing.

Suffragettes Still Unhappy

They Can't Pick on the Men Now, So They Pick on the Women

"Professional women have for the most part no sense of loyalty to the women pioneers. They treat their privileges of education and training as if they had dropped like manna from heaven. They pride themselves frequently on not thinking very much of women or women's achievements, on not being feminists. They have their fair share of sex snobbery—that is, a desire to stand in with and to stand well with the "stronger sex."—Lady Rhondda.

"If you want to improve the world start with yourself."

This advice is often given by one who should start with himself.

Death

Death is a dialogue between
The spirit and the dust.

"Dissolve," says Death; the spirit, "Sir,
I have another trust."

Death doubts it, argues from the ground.

The spirit turns away,
Just laying off, for evidence,
An overcoat of clay.

—Emily Dickinson.

To Finish the Task

From Palmyra (1830) to Independence (1933) is a continuous road along which the Church has traveled towards the goals always more or less clearly in view, though mayhaps at times veiled in the mists of misunderstandings and forensic combat, and at times seen through the eyes of hope somewhat clouded by discouragement. The distant next objective along any road is never clearly seen when in the vale between the hills. There faith keeps one moving.

Our road has been up hill and down vale, but through faith the journey has been directioned and hope burnishes the distant mark towards which we travel.

Periods of prosperity have followed those of adversity, and the ups and downs have influenced the spirit and elan of the advancing army. It has been in the periods of adversity when the spirit of the church has shown to best advantage, and revealed the deep-seated emotional content of our faith. In dark places we feel our way, and in periods of depression we fall back upon the basis of faith. It is well we do, for progress such as Deity wills we shall make is made only by those who "walk by faith." But they must have the will to walk. The Saints in the past in crises and periods of despair have placed their hands in the hand of God and moved forward.

And their progress has been marked by monuments of achievement. These monuments have been the completed tasks with which they have been confronted. Each stretch of the road traversed has had a group of tasks which center around a definite nucleus or objective, the achievement of which has demanded devotion, sacrifice, application of effort, and extraordinary faith. And these the Saints have had and displayed at such points.

From Palmyra with the organization of the church and the publication of one of the three standard books the Saints led on to Kirtland, where the priesthood schools and the Kirtland Temple called out the best of efforts and faith. The stalwart spirit of the pioneer dominated and so they passed on from one to another task.

From Kirtland to Fishing River the spirit of the pioneer still carried them, and the spirit which carried them called out the spiritual direction which marks Fishing River as a milestone of progress. And the sacrifices carried them to Independence and the efforts at community building there demanded. It was the same spirit of the pioneer which bravely faces the adversities of unfavorable conditions which prompted the Saints to tenderly gather up and inter the mutilated bodies of their brethren at Haun's Mill, and with the collected remnants of their scattered properties pass on their way to build up their community at Far West, erect their homes and schoolhouses, and lay the foundations of a temple.

Undaunted though dismayed and depressed by the persecution and expulsion from Far West, the rough road to Nauvoo was traversed by feet guided by zeal and the work of hands stimulated by the love of the institution and faith in God.

So Nauvoo rose like magic though the storm clouds of persecution were slowly but surely gathering again. Even from the prostration by the shock of murdered prophet and patriarch the Saints arose eventually, men of sorrow and acquainted with grief, and at Amboy began the negotiation of still another section of the road as yet untraversed. From Amboy to Plano, from Plano to Lamoni, and finally from Lamoni to Independence with the headquarters, every achievement was bought at the price of faith, devotion, and sacrifice. One goal after another set and reached: printing plant, college, church buildings, sanitarium, stone church, stakes, expanding districts and branches. With forces fluctuating by force of circumstances the vanguard has pressed on from task to task, gaining ground, consolidating, advancing, diversifying, integrating, adapting, and meeting the inevitable with poise and faith.

And so we come to the period when changing conditions have forced us into another crisis. To meet it a definite task has been set for us. The debt of the church must be paid. We have started the job. Will we finish it?

Sure, we'll finish the job!

To keep our record of past achievement clear, we must. And in the light of the sacrifices at Palmyra, Kirtland, Fishing River, Independence, Liberty, Haun's Mill, Far West, Nauvoo, Plano, Lamoni, and Independence, there is only one answer—We will.

How Shall We Build on Our Foundations?

I.—Missionary Endeavor

"Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness."—Matthew 6. Inspired Translation.

Recently we discussed at some length the topic, "The Foundations of Our Faith." The foundations were laid for us in divine wisdom. As Paul says: "Our gospel was not taught us by men, neither did we receive it of men." The doctrines of the church were given to us from on high. The organization of the church was planned in the divine mind. The gifts and blessings of the gospel come from the heavenly Father. Christ himself, who is described as the "chief corner stone," came not of our volition but was sent because the Father so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son. Paul declares that "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus," and continues with the admonition, "Let every man take heed how he shall build on that foundation." Christ gives us the commandment in the Inspired Version, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God." The King James Version has it, "Seek first the kingdom of God," but Christ was speaking to a people who had found the kingdom, and his word as properly rendered in the Inspired Version is "Seek we first to build up the kingdom." The church is the Kingdom—not all of the Kingdom, but that part with which we have to do. How shall we build it up?

The foundations are laid. How shall we build upon them, not only individually but as a church? How shall we build the church up numerically and spiritually?

CHRIST AS A MISSIONARY

In building the church up numerically, the first great endeavor has always been along missionary lines. Christ himself first of all was a missionary. He came from his temptation in the wilderness and from his spiritual preparation "in the power of the Spirit," (Luke 4: 14), and went about "preaching the gospel of the kingdom in every synagogue." He had no converts. He was alone. He had no organization. His first endeavor therefore was missionary, to go out and make new openings, to find converts, to gather together a following out of which he could build the church. To his disciples he said, "The works that I do shall ye do also."

The first work of this church for many years was missionary. Joseph Smith received the angelic visitation and at once told it to his father. That night, according to family tradition, his father gathered the family together and by candlelight related to them the story of the angel's visit. Subsequently they invited in the neighbors and gave them the message. The church had not been organized one year when the first mission was appointed. Four young men went west from New York State, stopping en route to build up Kirtland, and finally ending their mission at Independence. Their first mission thus unwittingly led to Zion, and we may yet find our way to Zion through missionary endeavor.

OUR GAINS OVER A PERIOD OF YEARS

It is interesting to compare the growth of the church over a period of years. We have recently celebrated the centennial of the birth of President Joseph Smith, that man who more nearly than any other man any of us have ever known approximated the character and spiritual attitude of Christ. When he came to the Presidency of the church in 1860 there were 179 members; today there are 112,000. Then there were eight branches; today there are 745. He had with him approximately 30 members of the priesthood; now we have 6,935. Much of this gain is the result of missionary endeavor.

Personally I have been interested in making more recent comparisons. My first mission under Conference appointment was to Southern California in 1900. A recent visit to that district prompted me to make comparisons of the gains over a period of thirty years. In 1900 we had a membership of 45,361; thirty years later we had 108,500. That year we had 2,316 baptisms; in 1930 there were 4,208 baptisms. The tithes and offerings per capita in 1902 amounted to $1.77 for the entire church; thirty years later (approximately) they amounted to $4.50. The total tithes and offerings in 1902 amounted to $86,383; in 1929 they were $477,761. We had then in Independence and the stakes a comparatively small membership; today we have 16,204. These figures represent a steady and continuous gain over a period of years. Shall we continue that gain? That depends a great deal on our missionary zeal.

MISSIONARY BRANCHES

In 1930 we put on a special missionary effort throughout the entire church, beginning in the spring; and consistently, month after month, we broke all previous records for baptisms; 1930 thus became a record year for baptisms. That shows what can be done when we give our attention, as we should, to the great missionary commission. The depression has crippled our general missionary endeavor. It becomes therefore more necessary that the local branches and districts and local men should give their attention with redoubled zeal to missionary work. Every branch should be a missionary center, having missionary sermons Sunday evening when convenient (and making it convenient so to do); holding periodic missionary series, and with available local men opening up new missions in the immediate neighborhood.

Some years ago I visited a local branch that was at the time without any missionary or pastor under conference appointment. The local priesthood of that branch were maintaining eight pulpits on Sunday, the central church and seven missions. By contrast I visited another branch where they had a beautiful little church in a fine section of the city surrounded by thousands of middle-class families of the better type. The district president, standing on the steps of the church, swung his arm about to indicate the neighborhood surrounding the church, and said, "Those people do not know that we exist. We have never visited them, never given them tracts, never gone to them and invited them to come to our services." The local branches should awake to their opportunities to do missionary work.

MISSIONARY FAMILIES

So far as possible every family should be a missionary family, not crowding their belief upon others who do not wish to hear it, not engaging in heated arguments that, as some one has said, enable us to "win the argument but lose the convert," but wherever possible interesting others, speaking to them words favorable to the church and its message. They must not be like the family of which Bishop Carmichael relates the following story. He visited this family, having been invited to dinner, but immediately was told that the daughter of the house was expecting her young man friend to be at the dinner and Bishop Carmichael was enjoined to say nothing about the church because the family did not wish the young man to know they were "Mormons." Readers of the Herald can imagine with what mischievous pleasure Bishop Carmichael, during the dinner hour, led the conversation time and again to the very threshold of the church; then, when every member of the family was squirming uneasily, he would change the subject. After the dinner he got the young man (who seemed to be a fine fellow) to one side and talked with him, and in response to some questions discovered that he came from the vicinity of a well-known branch and that many of his people were members of the church—but he did not wish this family to know it.

An old hymn says, "We want no cowards in our ranks who will our colors fly. We call for valiant-hearted men who're not afraid to die." This little verse is more than poetry. Three of the six men who organized the church one hundred years ago gave their lives as an offering in the cause. Two of them were shot to death, and one died subsequently as a result of exposure and exhaustion endured while fleeing from the mob. Fifty per cent of the charter members made the ultimate sacrifice. Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." Every member of the church should feel that way. A real Latter Day Saint has no need to be ashamed. Christ says, "If any man is ashamed of me now, of him will I be ashamed in the day of judgment." Latter Day Saints need to remember the admonition that Isaiah voiced, "Remember the quarry [pit] from which you were digged and the rock from which you were hewn." The church has lifted us up, given us our ideals, given many of us our education, given us about all that we know about God and things that are really worth while. Shall we now be ashamed of its message?

REBUILDING OUR MISSIONARY FORCE

Our first endeavor in building the church should be along missionary lines, and it should be the systematic purpose of all the membership to liberate the church from its present debt as quickly as possible, that we may rehabilitate our missionary force, return worthy men who have been released, add to its numbers young men as God may indicate, and go about the first great commission to preach the gospel in all the world.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NEWS BRIEFS

No Christmas Vacation at Graceland

Graceland College student body voted November 14, to have no Christmas vacation this year. Ninety-seven voted in favor of foregoing the vacation to fifty-one against it, according to the Graceland Tower.

Several advantages will accrue to the students and the administration through this measure. Students will save around $2,000 which would otherwise be spent on trips home, and the college will save from $500 to $1,000 which would otherwise be required for maintenance of college buildings. Besides this saving, the school will close two weeks earlier in the spring, allowing the students a greater opportunity for securing work.

Although it is a sacrifice, the students are showing a commendable attitude, and because of the cheerful cooperation of everyone the Christmas season will be an enjoyable one on the hill. Once before, in the winter of 1917-18, the students sacrificed the vacation period.

District Endeavors to Raise Budget Quota

Seattle and British Columbia District is exerting every effort to raise its part of the church budget. Of the Saints' efforts Apostle J. A. Gillen writes in a letter to the First Presidency: "I am quite sure that if the spirit prevailing in this district is representative of the spirit of sacrifice and devotion throughout the church, the budget will be raised and the church will be made happy. I rejoice to be identified with the good people of Seattle and British Columbia District."

Missionary Notes From Australia

Elders W. J. Haworth and A. J. Corbett devoted about a month's labors to Victoria District a short time ago, according to the Gospel Standard. They attended and assisted in the district conference there.

Elder E. H. Davies, pastor of Subiaco Branch, is busy in Perth and Fremantle. He has been conducting a missionary series in a Fremantle Hall.

Evangelist J. H. N. Jones combines the duties of missionary with those of his patriarchal office, and is doing a good work in Victoria District.

Elder A. V. Robinson is in a busy center in the Newcastle District. There the church has four preaching points.

Notwithstanding a spell of illness, Elder C. A. Davies works steadily at Adelaide, South Australia.

Elder W. J. Vaughan finds more than he can do in the Northern New South Wales field. Recently he had some assistance from Elder J. R. Taylor, and Elder Parker, the district president, is a zealous helper.

Elder H. Peisker is hard at work in Auckland where his multitude of duties range from those of pastor to missionary and relief worker among the poor of the church and of the vicinity.

These missionaries are enjoying the blessings of the Spirit of God in their work. "If God be with us," they say, "who can avail against us?"

San Bernardino's Storehouse Is Full

San Bernardino Branch, California, has almost one thousand jars of fruit in its storehouse besides other foodstuffs. These gifts for the needy were on exhibit at the local harvest home festival November 4, 5, and 6. These three days composed a gala occasion for the Saints, there being special services, dramatic, musical, social, and worship. Included in the week-end program was a memorial ceremony in honor of the Joseph Smith Centennial. President Elbert A. Smith was San Bernardino's harvest home guest.

Sister Earl D. Bailey Killed in Accident

Sister Earl D. Bailey, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, was killed in an automobile accident at Wichita, Kansas, Sunday afternoon, November 27. Her husband, Elder Earl D. Bailey, was also injured. Sister Bailey was sixty-eight years old. Details of this event will be found in the News under "Independence."

Rich Experiences for Elder L. O. Wildermuth

Rich and reassuring experiences have been Elder Lester O. Wildermuth's in his travels among Saints in Wyoming, Montana, and North Dakota during the late summer and fall. An event of this nature was his baptizing of four people November 22, after a few cottage meetings at Williston, North Dakota.

These additions, according to Brother Wildermuth, are chiefly due to the efforts of faithful Saints living in that vicinity. And though it was necessary to cut the ice for the ceremony of baptism, none seemed to notice the cold.

Elder P. T. Anderson, missionary to North Dakota, also held meetings at Williston in the summer and baptized several.

Author Is Dramatic Director

Sister Jessie Ward, author of the book The Call at Evening, and numerous short stories and articles, is directing the dramatic club in her home branch, Centralia, Washington. In past months this club has given several plays.

Tithing

By L. F. P. Curry

IV.

It is perfectly natural for us to seek in the Scriptures the basis for tithing, for there, in the record of God's dealings with man, should be found abundant testimony of this divine law. Yet we may approach the Word in the wrong attitude, seeking for means to sustain a personal opinion, rather than for light as to the way of life. A young friend was once asked to describe the method of study pursued by a Doctrine and Covenants class. He replied, "First they read a paragraph, and then they argue." Division and strife are the usual fruits of argument; unity and peace are found when truth is humbly sought. The humble seeker will find the Scriptures to be an inexhaustible mine, for however much is taken, as much remains.

There are two broad scriptural grounds for the law of tithing. The first exists in the acknowledged ownership of God of all things; the second, in the commands of God which have never been abrogated.

This ownership of God is comprehensive. The gold and silver and other precious things of the earth; the beasts of the forest and field, the cattle which roam the hills and plains; the very world, God claims. Notwithstanding, these have been prepared for the creatures of God whose purpose it is to provide for His saints. (Haggai 2: 8; Psalm 50: 10-12, Inspired Version; Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.)

Even we ourselves, who have been bought with the terrible price of Calvary, are God's as the Prophet Ezekiel and the great missionary, Apostle Paul, have pointed out (Ezekiel 18: 4; 1 Corinthians 6: 20, Inspired Version).

It will be recognized that the first ground for tithing is also the foundation of the principle of stewardship. The ownership of God is the basis for both. Our stewardship is inherent in the relation we bear to God, and whether we have publicly acknowledged the responsibility by being set apart as a steward, or not, tithing is one of the means of expressing the material results of our management of that with which we have been blessed.

The second scriptural basis for tithing was stated to exist in the commands of God which continue in force. It is important to note that there are some aspects of God's teachings which may never be abandoned, in whatever age those teachings are imparted to mankind. The Mosaic law was fulfilled in Christ, and whether or not those who had been trained under the law grasped its spiritual intent, the law as such ceased to be binding. Some aspects of the law, however, having to do with the broad relations of human society, were picked up and re-enunciated by Christ in his personal ministry, and restated in the latter-day revelations to our church. One example is the requirements of the decalogue (Mark 10: 17-20, Inspired Version; Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6, 7); and another is the law of tithing (Leviticus 27: 30-33; Deuteronomy 14: 22-25; Malachi 3: 8-10; Matthew 23: 23; Nephi 11: 2, 3, Thirty-third edition, 1907, Book of Mormon; Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5; 106). Tithing is thus a link in the chain of method for propagating the everlasting truths of God among the children of men.

As has been true of the offering, the tithe has been devoted to the purposes of God's work. In Israelitish and Judaic times, the poor, the fatherless and dependent widow, the Levites and the priests were supported from the tithe. The Levites received the tenth, and they in turn gave one tenth of their receipts to the priests. Today, in the support of the poor, the widow and orphan, for the sustenance of the ministry, and general work of the church, the tithe, together with the offerings made, is absorbed. From this source also comes the means for the specific upbuilding of Zion. The simplicity and directness of the tithing plan as a way to finance the costs of the kingdom of God is characteristic of all of the works of God. For whether it be one of the least of the flowers of the field, or the lowest form of animal existence, the particular thing is designed to meet effectively the conditions of its life.

The use of the title in the general work of the church enables it to play an important role at the present hour in meeting the debts which confront us. Many plans for the discharge of the debts have been suggested, and these have been appreciated deeply, witnessing as they do to the deep interest of the members in their church. But the principle of tithing is and always has been the backbone of the plan God gave us, and supplement it as fully as we may and should by offerings born of sacrifices, tithing will so remain. The cards which are being distributed to members during this present Sacrifice Period of November and December, do not seek to commit one to the payment of a specific sum as tithing, but to the payment of the tenth of the increase, whatever it may be; and ask for the contribution of as large an offering as possible. The method of approach is the same which is expected to be used in the continuance of our efforts to pay every debt of the church. A more spectacular plan might result in greater temporary interest, but after all, God has clung to the plan of tithing in every age, therefore why should we think of giving it up now?

God's purpose in using the tithe in the work of the church shows how intimately the principle of tithing is bound up with the financial policy to which the church is now committed, especially that portion relating to hereafter first providing the cash before engaging in some new enterprise of church work. If we tithe the surplus as well as the increase, adding thereto such offerings as may be given, our needs in their due order will be provided for if the Saints will more and more fully embrace God's way of having men share the burdens of the cause. For the church to proceed in this fashion, first providing the cost of beginning the new work, whatever it may be, and also providing reasonably the operating or continuing cost thereof, should beget a sense of security and confidence, and nurture faith and courage.

Finally there is a practical aspect of the use of tithes to which, ordinarily, little attention has been paid, namely the implied responsibility of the church to devote a portion of the tithes to the creation of reserves. This also is a vital part of the financial policy under which we are working. Joseph in Egypt grasped the principle of reserves in building up surpluses in the seven years of plenty upon which the people drew during the seven years of famine. The church today embraces many activities very vital to the work as a whole, the discontinuance of which even in part works a hardship upon those who have been engaged therein, and deprives the church and the world of something which may be sorely needed. The missionary work is a specific example. There rests upon us the necessity of providing during years of prosperity for the requirements of the leaner years, so that the work of Christ shall not be halted. Moreover, if the people are asked to consecrate their surplus and to pay the tithe and offering, is not the church bound to so use these means that in the hour of need of the people who have contributed that need commensurately may be met? As full compliance with the financial law occurs, there must go forward at the same time, in proper relation to the degree of compliance, the creation of reserves. The obligation is specific and may not be evaded. Thus will the change take place without shock from a society engaged in economic activities for profit to a society engaged in economic activities for the satisfaction of the just needs of men.

Out of the ownership of the things of this world by our heavenly Father arises His command, never changed, to tender to Him the tenth of the increase. He has ever directed the use of the proceeds in financing the costs of the kingdom. The plan He has given us, simple and direct as it is, ties into and is a part of the entire financial law, and of the gospel as a whole. And the plan is intimately related to this crisis through which we are passing. May God richly bless everyone who will bear a part of the burden with Him.

Note: Bishop Curry has promised to write additional articles touching the following subject matter:

Significance of the Requirement of Tithing.

Ascertaining of the Amount of the Tithe.

When the Tithe Shall be Paid.

The Reward for Obedience.

Our readers will find these articles to be of both interest and importance, coming as they do from a high officer in the church.

Life Rather Than Preaching

But above all, let the spread of the spirit of Christ be rather by mode of life than preaching. I am weary unto death with this incessant preaching. It deadens all thought, confuses all issues, it is producing in our Chinese church a horde of hypocrites and in our theological seminaries a body of Chinese ministers which makes one despair for the future. Let us cease our talk for a time and cut off our talkers, and try to express our religion in terms of living service, so that we may show others and see for ourselves if our religion is worth anything or not.—Pearl S. Buck, in The Christian Century for November 23, 1932.

Power in Books

Printer's ink has been running a race against gunpowder these many, many years. Ink is handicapped, in a way, because you can blow a man up with gunpowder in half a second, while it may take twenty years to blow him up with a book. But the gunpowder destroys itself along with its victim, while a book can keep on exploding for centuries. There's Hardy's Dynasts for example. When you read that book you can feel it blowing up your mind. It leaves you gasping, ill, nauseated—oh, it's not pleasant to feel some really pure intellect filtered into one's brain! It hurts! There's enough T. N. T. in that book to blast war from the face of the globe. But there's a slow fuse attached to it. It hasn't really exploded yet. Maybe it won't for another fifty years.—Roger Mifflin, in The Haunted Bookshop, by Christopher Morley.

The truth and rapture of man are holy things, not lightly to be scorned. A carelessness of life and beauty marks the glutton, the idler, and the fool in their deadly path across history.—John Masefield.

◆◆◆ Missionary Objectives and Procedure ◆◆◆

By Paul M. Hanson

Missionary work is a vastly different thing from a mere verbal bombardment of the ears of auditors with the facts of the gospel of Christ. Jesus was engaged in missionary work when removing racial and religious prejudices, voicing prayers, stirring the divine in man to respond to the divinity of their Creator, attracting children to himself, teaching by means of parables, disclosing the nature of heaven and hell, associating others with himself in profound spiritual experiences, preaching repentance, unfolding various aspects of the kingdom of God, emphasizing the weighty character of judgment, mercy, and faith, making known man's responsibility to God for the right use of gifts and talents and material possessions, announcing heavenly promises, working miracles, bringing hope to the dismayed, cheer to the disconsolate, and creating within hearts having an open door a consciousness of God.

There can be no higher missionary objective than is set forth in the words read from the Scriptures by Jesus in the synagogue in Nazareth:

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." (Luke 4: 18, 19.)

What is more needed today than the power of the gospel to save, and the spiritual forces of the kingdom of heaven to buoy up mankind in life's conflicts, discouragements, and lonely hours?

We must be concerned about the things that troubled Christ and be moved by his mind and Spirit. Then the church will fill its mission at home and abroad to the glory of God and the salvation of man.

The following procedure to assist in the prosecution of missionary work is divinely authorized:

"Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.)

World wide is our missionary objective. It was lucidly set forth by Christ to his apostles soon after his resurrection:

"And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Matthew 28: 18-20.)

Such is the encompassing and adventurous mission of the church, to be prosecuted collectively and individually by those who have named the name of Christ, the prosecution to be attended by a fulfillment of the glorious promises of God.

The above commission, re-stated to the church in latter-day revelation, remains to be carried to completion. When the church whole-heartedly engages in this task, many souls in all lands will see in the church as it authoritatively interprets the word of God, an institution "clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." Then through it will the waters of everlasting life overflow the souls of others.

It is given to the church to be a "light to the world."

Who is not impressed by the proselyting value of branches functioning in their respective communities as healthy and efficient members of the "body of Christ"? Here is a field which with intensive work and expansion provides unlimited possibilities.

Jesus said to the Apostle Peter: "When thou art converted, strengthen the brethren." There will ever remain much room for the forces of conversion to operate within the church.

Missionary work is going forward as the light of Christ enters the souls of men, inside or outside the church.

Appropriate tracts, Christian influences in association with others, prayer meetings, preaching services, Scripture class studies, musical talents, prayers in faith for the sick, and ministering practically to the demands of the kingdom of God, are mighty and available forces for the extension of the work of God.

Decision Day, Mother's Day, Rally Day, and others of similar character are for congregations important missionary aids.

At least one of our women readers feels that the members of her sex are underprivileged and not accorded the full rights to which a civilized and moral state of society should entitle them. The Editor is not conscious that he has been a party to any plot to keep the women in subjection; but he thinks the women ought to have a right to state their feelings on the matter, so long as that statement is reasonable. We think the article here presented meets the qualification.

We wonder what other women think about it. Would they be willing to write their opinions to us?

The Bible

on the

"Woman Question"

By Ruth M. Kirby

There are different ways in which people view the teachings of the Bible. Some are frankly skeptical of history, prophecy and doctrine alike. Some accept history, attempt to understand prophecy, but reject doctrine. Others, particularly the people of our own church, pride themselves in their understanding of doctrine and prophecy, and, in so doing, sometimes lose the particular significance of history. In other words, in our enthusiastic support of eternal doctrine and of the fulfillment of prophecy, unconsciously, we include in our belief the customs of Bible people, which, unlike doctrine, are not eternal.

It is alarming to some to see changes in custom, because they still confuse custom, which comes under the heading of history, with doctrine, which is entirely a different thing; and in seeing a departure from custom they infer that this necessarily means a departure from doctrine. It is important in arriving at an intelligent conception of the value of the Bible to us, to separate customs and traditions of the peoples of the Bible from the teachings of the Bible itself.

It is somewhat puzzling on first thought to understand that while statements concerning doctrine and prophecy are eternal verities, other statements regarding traditions and customs are only references to transient conditions, and while the statements were true under the conditions in which they were made they are not applicable under other conditions.

This, no doubt, is responsible for much of the confusion regarding the status of women as gleaned from the Bible. It is no wonder that pious people look askance on the subject of equality of sexes when they think that in so doing they are breaking away from the doctrine of Christ and the will of the Almighty. But are they? Impressive arguments have been made, pro and con, but let us look to the Bible itself for our answer,

To begin at the beginning there is the so-called "curse." Is the curse inevitable? Or is it not the natural result of man's sin? If so, through the redemption of the race it will automatically be eliminated. But if the curse were inevitable, is there any support for the idea that it is more inevitable for the woman than for the man? Let us open our Bibles and read carefully Genesis 3: 22-25 (Inspired Translation) and see if one curse is any more eternal than the other. God told Adam: "By the sweat of thy face thou shalt eat bread," yet man has not hesitated to invent labor-saving machinery, with the result that if our machinery were properly used today this part of the curse would have its fulfillment and be a thing of the past. He also said to Adam, "Cursed shall be the ground for thy sake," and "Thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee," yet man has done all within his power to exterminate harmful weeds and has brought about wonderful improvements on nature. He also told Adam, "For thou shalt surely die," and if any of this so-called curse applies to other than those to whom it was spoken, this does also, and, if so, there have been notable exceptions from this curse, the greatest of them all, namely John the Beloved and the three Nephites. We must conclude, then, that the curse placed upon man is not inevitable.

Now if this curse is not inevitable for man it follows it is not inevitable for woman. Or, in plainer language, if women are predestined to be overburdened with children, if they are intended to suffer with no attempt to reduce suffering and pain to a minimum, if they are expected to look to their husbands as superiors to be obeyed rather than as companions and equals, then man is supposed to earn

The Old West Door

A Talk on Graceland College

By James B. Moses

"Oh, Graceland, whose portals fling wide for the brave
And whose halls are abode of the true,
Though thy walls they be simple and plain 'neath the sun,
Yet we give for thy old gold and blue.

"Oh, Graceland, dear land, we are all coming back
To the sun-burnished days that we knew.
Up the old winding path to thy wide-open door,
And we're bringing clean lives great and true."

THE OLD WEST DOOR of Graceland's Administration Building has come to be one of the symbols of life on the college hill. Its steps are known as a meeting place for those fellows who want to talk and those who want to listen during the noon hour. At Graceland the Old West Door takes the place of a college quadrangle. It is the campus synagogue. Moreover, every student who has graduated is referred to as having passed out of the Old West Door of Graceland into his or her life's work, or on to higher institutions of learning. The Old West Door is a symbol of accomplishment.

When a boy or girl enters college, he or she enters a new world. There are new conquests to be made, new chances to be taken. It is a time of transition and of growing pains. If one has a true concept of life before he enters college, he will have the task of finding reasons for his convictions. If he has a false concept of life, his will be the task of losing those false ideals and perhaps floundering in a sea of doubt for awhile before finally finding the correct course. The problem of a college man or woman is to find as nearly as possible what life really is and his or her place in it. This is not easy, but conquest is sweet. To have reasons for being what one is and believing what one does is success in the task. With it goes the ability to see another's view as clearly as one's own.

The other evening as I sat in the library thinking over what I might say this evening, my eye was attracted by a picture on the wall. In the foreground was a stretch of the ocean with the waves rolling fierce and high. Above the waves floated a mass of dark and foreboding clouds. Towards the top the clouds lost part of their gloom and the sun's rays played upon them, and there, almost above all the clouds, was an airplane. That picture partly illustrates what I have been endeavoring to say. The problem of a college man or woman is to rise above the doubts and misgivings of a false ideal of life and emerge in the clear blue sky above with faith well-grounded and a firm and secure foundation upon which the rest of life may be built.

Such an emergence does not come from the classroom alone. Life is a fourfold proposition and all parts must be coordinated and integrated if a harmonious whole is to become manifest. The classroom cares for the mental side; intercollegiate and intramural sports care for the physical side; social clubs, societies, dorm life and informal gatherings care for the social side; but in far too many colleges the religious side of life goes untouched except insofar as ill-founded convictions are broken down in the classroom with no adequate substitute provided. Graceland from its very beginning actively entered into the task of caring for the spiritual needs of the students.

The Wednesday evening fellowship service at Graceland is often referred to as the hub of Graceland life. The term "hub," when used in this sense, refers to that portion of college life about which all else revolves. This is a service for young people and so planned that it appeals to the age and maturity levels of college students. The themes are of a simple and homely nature. I might list a few topics which were used in my experience as a student: "Am I Religious?" "Youth's Adventures in Religion," "What Has Happened Yesterday and Today That Has Been Hope-inspiring and Faith-inspiring?" Those present pour out from the innermost recesses of their hearts their own personal ambitions, desires, and dreams. Things which are usually kept hidden and only disclosed to view in our secret closets are uncovered to the view of friends that others might help and be helped. It is these services which make the college chapel mean so much to old Gracelanders. It is not a place that attracts great builders and art lovers because of its wonders. But it is a place that grips the hearts and souls of those who have met beneath its roof, and a feeling of reverence and nearness to divinity seems to settle on one as a cloud as he or she enters the door. It is here that students have dreamed dreams and seen visions of a higher and nobler life. It is here that God has met with them and blessed them and guided them onward and upward.

However, it must not be understood that all of Graceland's spiritual life takes place in the chapel.

Young People in Action

Under this heading at frequent intervals we shall publish matters concerning the work of young people in the church. In a very definite way the hope of the church is in its young people. They are to make and be the church of the future. They cherish the teachings, the example, and the lives of those who have preceded them and who today are carrying the burden of the church and its work, but they realize that they, too, already have a share in the responsibility and the privilege of demonstrating in their lives the truth and success of the latter-day Restoration.

Youth have much in common and it is natural that they should enjoy doing things together. The program of the church provides for organization of young people's groups in classes, departments, and divisions of the church school. Such organization under helpful adult supervision in local and district work makes a splendid opportunity for growth in initiative and responsibility on the part of the coming leaders in the church, and the groups themselves contribute much to the total work of the church.

We shall be glad to keep the young people of the church informed of the activities of other groups. Write up your activities for publication. Address the Young People's Division, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Perry Hunt, 475 Gibb Street, Portland, Oregon, was recently elected president of the young people's division of his home branch and of the district young people. An active program includes a convention at Portland, November 25-27, Apostle F. Henry Edwards, speaker.

The young people of Western Montana are organized under the leadership of Kenneth Eliason, Race Track, Montana. Their plans call for a convention before the middle of December. The erection of a pavilion is well under way and materials are being gathered for interesting program work. Apostle F. Henry Edwards is to be the speaker.

Miss Gladys Beebe, Atherton, Missouri, is president of the Holden Stake young people. Their executive committee is meeting with the stake presidency and with the stake bishopric to discover ways in which the young people may enter most helpfully into the program of the church. Their present plans include dramatic production, a "Stake Music Day," classes in recreational leadership, and an intensive study of the faith and program of our own church. Plans for an institute in March are under way.

Young people of the Spring River, Kansas, District have been active for some time. Albert Cobb, 2325 Porter Street, Joplin, Missouri, is president; T. W. Bath, 519 West Forest Street, Pittsburg, Kansas, is district activity leader. On November 22 was celebrated the Joseph Smith Centennial at Webb City, with President Elbert A. Smith as speaker. A Christmas program will be had at Joplin, Missouri, on December 13 when the Christmas Offering of the young people of the district will be placed at the foot of the district Christmas tree.

Good will tours are to occupy the Sundays of January and February, each of the branches being visited in turn. In March a young people's convention and institute is to be held.

In the Far West Stake, Wayne Simmons, of Cameron, is president, Helen Beadnall, of Saint Joseph, is secretary, and Leonard Ehlers, of Stewartsville, is young people's leader. This executive committee keeps things going and the young folks may be depended upon at all times to carry their share of the church program of the stake. They are organized with the stake presidency to provide four stake-wide events each year. One of these was held at Stewartsville Saturday and Sunday, November 12 and 13, Elders Leonard Lea and Roy Cheville being guest speakers. From each of the branches specially prepared numbers were presented, plays, solos, quartets, choruses, readings, with lectures, sermons, a songfest, and a dedication service most profitably filled the time.

In the Kansas City Stake the O. B. K.'s have been organized for some years and have been an outstanding feature of the stake organization. Elder George Mesley of the stake presidency is chairman of the Young People's Council and Lloyd Seibert is president of the young people. Under the direction of the Council eight groups are participating in a One-act Drama Contest to be held November 28-30. Once each month a stake young people's prayer meeting is held with young men in charge. The eight groups or branches in Kansas City are all within a radius of a few miles, so it is comparatively easy for all the young people to meet frequently. There is a church membership of nine hundred be-

Short Talks for Home Missionaries

The Call to Baptism

By Leonard Lea

"Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and, lo, a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Matthew 3: 13-17.

Thus did Jesus fulfill the requirements for entrance into that holy Kingdom whose gospel he had come to preach to the children of earth. He held himself to be no exception to the rules that he gave for others. The example of Jesus was a salutary one, and those men and women who have long regarded the church and its work from afar, without actually identifying themselves with it, would do well to consider this example together with all its implications.

There are many thousands of good men and women, exemplary citizens, who will say to you, "The church is doing a fine work." But for some reasons, known and unknown, they do not join with the church to help in that good work. One soldier is worth a hundred spectators in any battle, and very little that the spectators say to each other, whether good or bad, helps to determine the result of the contest.

The church which has espoused the name of Christ, and which is trying desperately, against heavy odds, to carry on His work today, is suffering from a lack of helpers and a surfeit of spectators. One of our prominent men has declared that "America today is suffering from a bad case of spectatoritis." Great moral battles are being fought, and great moral victories are sometimes won, by mere handfuls of determined and devoted men and women. But sometimes, for sheer lack of numbers, they lose. And meanwhile thousands who could help and should help, but won't help, are standing idly by and watching the results of the contest with interest but without active concern.

The great need of the church today is not money, or wealth, or political power; its great need is for men and women who will share in its tasks and responsibilities. Its moral battles can only be won by men and women who give themselves to the cause and its spiritual ministry to the world can not be carried out unless they help.

THIS CONCERNS YOU

You may grant, in the abstract, that the church does need men and women. Has it ever occurred to you that the church need you—specifically you? You can imagine a picture of the Savior calling all men through the opened doors of his kingdom. Can you imagine Him, lifting his hand and beckoning to you? The Savior is calling you, personally. The church does need you individually. There is work for you to do, and though others may have to make shift to carry it on until you come, it will be waiting for you when you come.

Have you joined the church? Have you taken out your citizenship papers in the kingdom of God? Have you enlisted in this work which you have always admired, so that you may contribute your share to its success? Are you a soldier, or are you merely another spectator?

This matter of membership in the church is an important one. It is as important as our citizenship in the country in which we live. Too many people think that it does not matter whether they belong to the church or not. They are alarmed when they see the weakening of our social fabric, they protest when they observe the weakening of our political integrity, but they do not see that they are contributing to this decadence by the fact that they do nothing to aid the church which has been a source of moral and spiritual strength to the nation, indeed the greatest source.

THINGS THAT MATTER

Americans suffer as much as any nation on earth from illusions; and one of these most frequently repeated illusions is this: "It does not matter." They say, "It does not matter whether I join the church or not." It does matter, and it matters tremendously. They say, "It does not matter how I vote." It does matter how you vote—you and many thousands of others like you. It is important. And the country is in the political situation that it is today simply because too many people have said, "It does not matter." Put it down in your mind, the next time that some one says to you that "It does not matter" that he is speaking foolishly and without reflection.

Our citizenship in the church is a very important thing. Our indifference to the church bespeaks our indifference to moral and spiritual standards. That indifference is reflected in our indifference to government. And indifference will come nearer to ruining us than any one other fault.

A few years ago, when it was easy to gain entrance into this country, and everywhere one could meet foreigners who had come here to enjoy our freedom and our greater opportunities, I remember that some of my foreign friends said to me, "It does not matter whether I become a citizen or not. I would just as soon not. I see no reason why I should." I blushed for shame for them, for I felt that it was a discourteous answer to the hospitality which my country had so freely given them. In the recent years, however, foreigners have found it hard to get in and hard to stay. And most of my foreign friends have hastened to obtain the citizenship which they once disdained. They have found that citizenship is important. It does matter whether they "belong."

ONE WHO OBEYED

The story is told in the sixteenth chapter of Acts that an earthquake shook the walls of a certain prison, so that the doors flew open. The frightened keeper of the prison, cried to Paul and Silas, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" And they answered, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." And it is recorded there that the keeper of the prison "took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway." Thus did he complete his obedience at the moment salvation was offered to him by joining the church.

Everywhere we meet people who say, "It does not matter whether I belong to the church," and after a while death comes to members of their families, and they are without comfort. And toward the end, when they themselves face that great adventure into the dark and the unknown, they begin to wonder whether they have made a mistake. In hours of sadness and trial they find that the church is important.

JESUS GAVE THE EXAMPLE

The slightest consideration of the text which we have used as a scripture lesson will reveal that Jesus insisted on complying in an exact manner with the requirements for his formal entrance into the church, and the dedication of his life to its service. Of his great spiritual experience we may have more to say at another time. But Jesus was quite evidently immersed in baptism, and emerged from the water to receive the spiritual witness of one of the great experiences in his career. And if we study the other texts relating to how people were brought into the kingdom by Jesus and his disciples who came after him, this same fact is evident as to the manner of their entrance into the kingdom.

When my foreign friends became citizens, they did not write the oath of allegiance that they were to take, nor did they select the kind of papers they were to sign. These things were conditions already laid down. The price of obtaining that citizenship which they desired was strict compliance. And they found it worth while to follow the rules.

THE MANNER OF ENTRANCE

So it is with the kingdom of God. The manner of our entrance is prescribed. We can not stand outside and help with the work of the church. We can not stand aloof and benefit by the spiritual life of the kingdom, nor see its glories. There is no such thing as a half in, half out fellowship with Christ.

The pastor of your favorite church may mark you down as a visitor for ten years. But you do not obtain the benefits of membership until you have joined, and have shared in the responsibilities as well as the advantages which come to all members. You may enjoy the spectacle of seeing the church in action and going about its work, but you only know half of it until you have joined in its work.

In every organization for civic good, there are those who are always on hand when work is to be done. And there are the others who come only when honors are to be distributed and benefits to be obtained.

The working members quickly learn to recognize the drones, and to know them for what they are. The drones may never realize it, but they never come to know the inner spirit of that fellowship of those who come to grips with the problems and realities at the heart of their work.

JESUS CALLS YOU

Jesus calls you. He invites you to membership in the church, and in his kingdom in a very particular sort of way. You are greatly needed, and there is a place that is waiting for you in it until the time comes that you make ready to accept it.

Know this, that a fuller and richer life, a happier and more beautiful life awaits you when you accept your call to service. No one is happiest when working for himself alone. Men and women are constituted that they are best and happiest when serving others. Then they learn that there are rewards from the fullness of living which are not counted in dollars and cents. If we pursue happiness for ourselves we lose it; if we try to make happiness for others we find it for ourselves. Men and women arrive at the greatest possibilities of their lives in striving to serve others, and especially in striving to help them in the work of that kingdom which has been made for us, the kingdom of God.

QUESTION TIME

Did Martin Luther begin the Reformation, or what was the cause of it?

No one thing caused the Reformation, nor did it begin in any one place to which it may certainly be traced. The sale of indulgences by John Tetzel precipitated matters in Germany under Luther's leadership about 1518, but Maximilian, the German emperor, had declared his intention of becoming free from the pope about eight years before that time. The rival claims of the papal church to the right of taxation had been opposed by both German and English authorities before this time, and this was a powerful factor in the civil support given the Reformation afterward.

In 1518 Bernardin Samson, a Franciscan monk, was sent to Switzerland to sell indulgences there, but his attempt caused him to be excluded from Zurich by a priest, Ulrich Zwingli, who wrote sixty-seven theses for discussion and was strongly supported by the people. Zwingli attempted to use civil power to enforce his cause, but was not very successful in this respect. John Calvin effected a change in the doctrines of the Swiss reformers, but the Lutheran reformers did not agree with them in some things, and the two movements were distinct, though sympathetic on many points, such as penance, marriage, extreme unction, celibacy of the clergy, and priesthood authority.

The English Reformation did not support the Lutheran movement, which was denounced by religious leaders there. Henry VIII, the king of England, replied to Luther, and was given the title of "Defender of the Faith" by the pope in 1521. But some years later he proclaimed England free from the pope, who opposed his unjustified divorce from his wife and marriage to Anne Boleyn, and forced recognition of his reformation upon the people. Doctrinally the movement was not so important as the German or Swiss reformation, though its political significance was far-reaching.

In what language was the Bible first printed, and when was it issued?

At the close of the 4th century, Jerome, a Christian writer of great learning, made a translation of the Old Testament from the Hebrew and Chaldaic languages, and also revised an old Latin version of the New Testament. This became known as the Latin Vulgate, the latter word being derived from the Latin vulgatus, meaning common or general.

It was the Latin Vulgate that was first put in print, being issued from the famous press of Gutenberg in 1456, after four years in preparation. It is known as the Mazarin Bible, a name which was derived from the fact that an excellent copy was in the possession of Cardinal Mazarin during the seventeenth century. The first complete English Bible was printed at Zurich in 1535, and is known as the Coverdale version, though Tyndale's version of the New Testament was issued at Antwerp in 1534.

Please explain the four "beasts" of Revelation the first chapter.

The first chapter of Revelation does not mention four beasts. You probably refer to a later chapter, the first reference to this symbol being in Chapter 4, and followed by references in six other chapters. However, the word beasts appears to be an erroneous translation of the Greek text, which is zoon, meaning "living creatures," according to the Douay, Moffatt, and Revised versions. The Emphatic Diaglott renders it "living ones."

It is believed to be a symbol having prophetic meaning, of which various opinions exist. Evidently the "living creatures" represent the power of life and intelligence, being given prominence near the divine throne. Their eyes "before and behind" may indicate knowledge, wisdom, and observation of things past and future, as well as of the present, indicated by "eyes within." The "six wings" suggest their speed and omnipresent power as servants of the Lord, and perhaps their dependability and scope of service. They appear as revealers of eras of time as the Lamb opened the first four seals, but what periods are meant is a matter of considerable speculation and difference of opinions.

Is the "rose of Sharon" mentioned in the Bible? If so, what was it?

Only in the Song of Solomon 2: 1 is the rose of Sharon mentioned. The rose is mentioned in one other place, Isaiah 35: 1, but both are from the same Hebrew term, and probably refer to the narcissus, which grows fragrantly in the plain of Sharon, or to the crocus, the root of the word meaning a bulb. Translators differ as to its precise identity, and some think it may be the rose of Jericho, known as the resurrection plant. The term is rendered "lily" in the Septuagint, Leeser, and Douay versions; but "meadow saffron or narcissus" by Young, and "autumn crocus" in the Revised Version margin.

Prayer and Testimony

Have You Given Your Testimony?

The Editors invite all who read and appreciate the letters that appear regularly on these pages, to write and send in their own testimonies.

The circle of people who read these pages are like a large prayer meeting. All listen; most receive comfort and help; a few arise and do their part which brings the blessing of the Good Spirit to all present. Some must be urged to bear the testimonies that fill their hearts. The meeting is waiting now. Perhaps it is waiting on you.

Have you given your testimony yet?

Tells Gospel Story to Passersby

By Herman D. Smith

I used to think if ever I had the chance to instruct people, I would commence with the story of the redemption of Zion and all stories leading up to how we can obtain an entrance to Zion, telling about the Book of Mormon and how we got it and the part it has to do with the Restoration of the everlasting gospel, the gospel Jesus gave his church. I studied so that I might prove all these truths by the Bible and also tell why I am a Latter Day Saint.

And now as I tend my filling station I am realizing my opportunity to tell people these things. I watch every car to see where it comes from, and also when I see people walking, I wonder if I can approach them about my favorite theme—Zion.

For several years I have been trying this system, and it works splendidly. If I don't have the opportunity to talk about these things once each day, I am disappointed. I ask the Father each night to give me the opportunity to instruct some one. You would be surprised to see the people who come back, some after several months. "Do you remember me?" they ask. "I want to hear more about Zion. It's the finest thing I ever heard."

I keep all three of the standard books of the church on my desk, also a copy of April, 1930, Vision which has several photographs to help me explain. Many grasp my story more quickly and clearly if they can see all three Presidents, also Hill Cumorah where the plates were found. One preacher asked me where the plates were now, or what Joseph Smith did with them, and I told him.

I have yet to have anyone speak sarcastically or angrily, and have tried this method for several years. Some have asked an address so they can send for a Book of Mormon. Hardly a day passes but I have several chances to tell this beautiful story. I use the KMBC Blue Book Map to show where Zion will be and all its possibilities to be self-supporting and get along without the rest of the world. It will extend south far enough to include cotton and the oil fields. In Zion, I believe, we shall have everything for the necessities of life.

Once a man from Missouri stopped here. I asked him if the country was any good out one hundred and fifty miles each way from Kansas City. "Put a big barbwire fence like the ones they had in the war around it," he said, "and they will live without the rest of the world if no one can get in or out." I didn't have time to tell him about Zion; he seemed to be in a hurry, but he had confidence in that area to make a living.

For the past fifty years I have been gathering information, and now it is proving very helpful.

Yesterday a man walking through said to me as he was resting, "What does L. D. S. mean on your sign?" Of course I told him all I could before he had to go. Those letters have given me a good many visits. Some passing in cars have stopped to find out what they mean, and, you see, I have the opportunity to explain Zion.

On the corner across the street is a sign of Tiger Tail pointing west to Indian Town twenty-three miles; that also gives me a good opening to ask people if they know where his ancestors came from. An Indian stopped one day. I told him all I could for the time he was here. He said that he would come again to hear more.

A few days ago two Mormon elders were here and could stay only a short time. They saw the letters on my sign. We had a fine visit. They said that they would stop again as they were going to Miami soon. I showed them our Doctrine and Covenants, also the Inspired Translation, the first they ever saw. I called their attention to the revelation given through our Prophet April 14, 1932. I had cut it out of the Daily Herald and pasted it on a fly leaf on the Doctrine and Covenants; also called their attention to revelations given to the Reorganized Church since 1860. I do not talk about authority the first visit. I asked them where Zion was to be. "Missouri," they replied, "Independence the center."

It is a pleasure to tell people our beautiful gospel. It is not fear of what will become of me that impels me to tell my story. It is not enough to sit down and say: "I have been baptized and had hands laid on me for the reception of the Holy Ghost." As I understand it, we are to be judged by our works. We must keep all the law, if we expect to redeem Zion.

If every Saint would try each day to tell some one else about Zion, and would try to pay off the church debt, the Bishop would soon be able to cancel the last note and then the plans for Zion and the gathering would go forward. When that time comes, the people of Zion will have storehouses and there will be no hungry, no one looking for a job. If everyone in the church were busy and sincerely trying to live the gospel, we would have the best of everything, our just wants and needs. There would be no sick because we would obey the Word of Wisdom. All would be happy, studying to perfect themselves and preparing to meet the Savior.

Are we going to do this work, or will we let some other people do it? It is ours only if we come forward and obey all the law. Let each member do his duty and not leave it all to the priesthood. We must have our lamps trimmed and burning, or the door will be closed upon us. First the debt of the church must be paid, then running expenses; then land for homes must be secured. Some will say: "We do not understand all this. We do not live in a branch." I do not think that excuse will stand the test. What are our church books and papers for? The Herald should be in every home.

STUART, FLORIDA, Box 962.

Sister Bertha Vaughn, of Prairie View, Kansas, is raising rabbits especially to be able to pay a little money into the church's treasury. She wants to help all she can, but money is scarce and they have little to sell. She hopes soon to see the day when the church can have more missionaries in the field so that all isolated Saints can be reached and helped, and she desires the prayers of the church that she and her family may be faithful.

Prayer and Testimony

Believer Is Divinely Healed

By Mrs. M. Whitehead

I feel that I should bear my testimony to the goodness of the Lord, knowing that it will strengthen the faith of others. For about twenty-five years I suffered with epileptic fits. I suffered severely with these, and was constantly under the care of doctors. They said I could not be cured and thought that the time would come when I would have to be sent to an asylum. About that time I met some Saints, became interested in their beliefs, and was baptized. After several administrations I noted that I was being cured. The spells were not cured suddenly, but gradually ceased. For several years now I have not been afflicted, and I am very grateful to the Lord.

I am isolated from Saints and all church privileges, and sometimes I grow very discouraged. I wish that I might hear the gospel taught. Of course I have papers and books, but a study of these is not the same as hearing these truths taught. My family and friends do not believe in the Saints or in faith healing. They do not believe the Lord healed me, but I have been given assurance that he has. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be true. I should like to hear from any who wish to write to me.

Convert the Members

By Helen Smith Logan

When our missionaries go out to preach to the people, they seem to have uppermost in their minds the desire to convince the people that they represent the true church of Christ, the one he set up when here on earth. And they launch out with the three books of the church, trying to prove by the Scriptures the authenticity of its divine origin. They do prove that it is of divine authority with all gifts and blessings which anciently belonged to the church and were promised to all who believe and keep His commandments.

The people are convinced that the proof is all right and are baptized into the church, happy and rejoicing at being in a divinely appointed organization in which peace and security are felt and to which so many wonderful blessings are promised. Then they rest and wait for the Temple to be built and Zion to be established. They talk about these things every day. They are happy and contented, thinking there is nothing more to be done. They go to church or some other place just as they feel inclined, and are not in the least bit concerned as to who keeps things looking nice and orderly at the church, or that any money is needed to conduct the affairs of the Lord here on earth. This is the true church to them. Why worry?

Recently I heard a statement from the pulpit, that only a small per cent of the church members were converted. If this statement be true, why not try to persuade the people to turn away from a selfish, sinful life and seek a life of righteousness, instead of our spending so much time and energy trying to convince them of the divine authority of the church. Can any people obey rules and regulations they do not understand, or know anything of their existence? Can this people keep God's commandments when they do not even know there are any to keep save only to be honest and virtuous? Will people repent when they don't know of what they are guilty?

The members of this church are from nearly every nationality in the world. There are many different kinds of faith in God and of God, different standards of right and wrong, habits inherited and those formed by new environments. And the only leveling influence equalizing these conditions is conversion to the gospel of Jesus Christ. The instruction given the disciples was for them to go into all the world and preach the gospel.

In our church school are two classes of Religious Education taught by two humble, godly men. The elderly people are instructed by Elder J. L. Lancaster, while the younger ones are taught by Elder Oliver McDowell who has the gift of teaching. If you could hear some of the questions asked by both of these classes and also the answers made to some of the questions asked by their teachers, you would conclude that much converting is needed to the living of the God-given way.

Is preaching to convince people that the Latter Day Saint church is true, more worth while than trying to convert them that Jesus is the Christ and will save them from their selfishness and sin if they will keep his commandments?

Knowing this is the true church will not save anyone, but knowing that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and keeping his law strictly, will give eternal life to all who believe and obey, for Jesus himself said it would.

Then let us convert the members by all means, and see what will happen to this church. May God wake us up to our present needs.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA.

God Is Good

I have many things for which to Thank God. He is very good to me, and it is my aim to go on to perfection, for I feel that there is a crown at the end of my pilgrimage. I hope to be able to say as did Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day."

I am praying that others shall see this is the true church of God and his Son. We are told in Holy Writ that we have come unto Mount Zion, the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem. May the blessings of God ever abide with the true in heart.

Request for Prayers

Sister R. W. Butterworth asks the Saints to observe Sunday, December 4, with fasting and prayers in behalf of her husband who is ill. Brother Butterworth has been afflicted for several years and at times his mind seems to leave him entirely. Other members of the family have been healed through prayer, and now they unite in this desire for a special blessing.

Run-Over Department

All holding priesthood should magnify their calling. Not only apostles and seventies as special witnesses for Christ, but also all others holding ministerial position should express what was intended in their call to the ministry.

Included in the procedure leading to missionary qualifications, is a profound spiritual experience, indulgence in prayer until ones words of supplication become the answering voice of God, speedy correction of wrongs, an enthusiasm born of conviction causing the voice to vibrate, and a complete consecration to that which deep in the heart is felt to be from heaven.

THE BIBLE ON THE "WOMAN QUESTION"

his living unaided by the help of machinery, and because the ground is cursed he should esteem it sin to exterminate harmful weeds. The curse is not inevitable. It is a thing to be overcome.

Turning to the New Testament we shall first look at Christ's teachings. Nowhere in them do we find anything limiting the position of women except his reference to the church as a bride, and he, its head, as the bridegroom. Yet even here we must remember that Christ gave his parables in terms of the customs of the people to whom he spoke. But granting that the husband is the head of the wife, just what does this mean? Is it not possible that we give it the wrong interpretation? God in his all-seeing wisdom could not but see that woman, in her hours of suffering, in the giving of her all to her little ones, in the long years of worry and trial for her children would need to be shielded and protected, would need a support on which to lean, not because she is inferior or weaker in character, but because she already has a full role of her own. The very nature of her life, the bringing forth and rearing of little children, calls for protection. In dividing the responsibility of the family thus between the mother and the father, God only shows the perfection of his plans.

But it is in the writings of Paul that we find the most references to woman and her place. However, let us first read 1 Peter, beginning at the eleventh verse of chapter two and continuing on down into chapter three to the fifth verse. Peter says: "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake."

This is the topic sentence of his discussion. He continues by telling the servants to be subject to their masters with all fear, because it was an ordinance of man. "Likewise," he says, or for a like reason, "ye wives be in subjection to your own husbands." Why? Because it was an ordinance of man. It is only logical to conclude, then, that if wives must be subject to their husbands even though it is no longer an ordinance of man, the slaves freed by Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation should continue to serve their masters with all fear even though they are no longer slaves by the ordinance of man. One is as logical as the other.

Turning to Paul now can we not see that his comments on women were applicable in ordinance of man, but they are not applicable in our day because women are now free-born citizens?

Again, if we believe our church to be the same church as the one organized and established by Jesus during his ministry on earth then we must claim equal inspiration for our apostles. Yet we know that our apostles today are not absolutely infallible along every line. Why must we, then, believe the apostles of old to be absolutely infallible? For instance Paul contradicts the statement of God himself as recorded in Genesis, "It is not good for man to be alone" when he expresses his views against marriage. Both can not be right.

In 1 Corinthians 14 Paul says: "Let your women keep silence in the churches." We can not help but notice that he is speaking of prayer meetings at the time, he was not referring to preaching, as this passage is interpreted by many. Yet in modern revelation Emma Smith was ordained even to expound Scriptures and to exhort the Saints.

The gospel of Christ is promised to make us free, free of the Mosaic law, free of sin and its consequences, free to bring about a perfect social order, wherein each individual has the right and the opportunity to express his own innate qualities, to develop his own peculiar possibilities, regardless of sin, race, or position. A manifested expression of perfect love, an unprecedented height of civilization, all this is promised us through obedience to the gospel of Christ. Is our attitude toward our women, then, of such small importance?

We can not afford to worship the past, it is too full of mistakes. If we must allow for human fallibility in the present then surely we must allow for it in the past. It is for us, rather, to take the truth which they have given to us and build upon it, and thereby bring about the perfect society of which philosophers so long have dreamed—Zion.

The chapel may be the hub, but as in all wheels the spokes radiate out. On the campus spirituality loses its abstraction and becomes a concrete reality. Too often we believe spirituality to be but an abstract quality, and forget that it can become real in the lives of earnest and consecrated individuals. Students go from the fellowship services imbued with the spirit of doing. They see consecrated faculty members living their daily lives in such a way as to prove a spiritual example to others. They see fellow classmates striving to live according to the Golden Rule. In this fact we are face to face with Graceland's spiritual realities. To offset the undesirable elements which might be found at Graceland there is that one thing which can not be overlooked. In the lives of Graceland faculty members spirituality becomes a reality and this reality is carried over into the lives of the students and bigger and better men and women emerge to take up the tasks which await them.

I like the words of John Ruskin when he wrote: "Let every dawn of morning be to you as the beginning of life and every setting sun be to you as its close; then let every one of these short lives leave its sure record of some kindly thing done for others, some goodly strength or knowledge gained for yourselves." That is the philosophy taught at Graceland. Graceland is not a miniature heaven on earth, but neither is Zion. But the Spirit of Christ is permeating all of Graceland's activities and our civilization can survive only as it is permeated with that Spirit of Christ and is made free and happy by the practices which spring out of that Spirit.

Only thus can discontent be driven out and the shadows lifted from the road ahead. If we could bring into the relationships of humanity, among ourselves and among the nations of the earth, the brotherhood that was taught by Christ we would have a restored world.

A ship lost at sea for many days suddenly sighted a friendly vessel. From the mast of the unfortunate vessel was seen a signal, "Water, water, we die of thirst!" The answer from the friendly vessel at once came back, "Cast down your bucket where you are." A second time the signal, "Water, water, send us water," ran up from the distressed vessel and was answered, "Cast down your bucket where you are." And a third and a fourth signal were answered in the same way. The captain of the distressed vessel, at last heeding the injunction, cast down his bucket and it came up full of fresh, sparkling water from the mouth of the Amazon River. The faculty at Graceland, in answer to signals of distress from students, send back the answer, "Cast down your bucket where you are," and the spiritual atmosphere of the school is such that the buckets always come up full of the water of life.

Thus does the Old West Door become a symbol of accomplishment. A well-rounded life emerges through the old door to take up the work of life and of the church.

"These things I have seen:

A red tower against a cloudless sky,
A group of buildings on a sun-kissed hill,

An open door.

"Here I have found

Students from many places seeking earnestly

A deeper understanding of life,
Guided by skillful hands unto the goal

They came to seek.

"Devoted men and women

Have dedicated themselves to service,

Not as instructors using books,

But as companions sharing life with students

And helping them to choose the wisest ways.

"Learning to share and help and give

Is a part of life and therefrom spring

Rich comradeships.

"Each Wednesday night is set apart

That students who desire to seek their God

May gather reverently in prayer,

And be inspired to seek a more abundant life.

"And in ages hence

I yet shall see a tower beckoning against the sky,

A group of buildings on a sun-kissed hill,

An open door."

Young People in Action

tween the ages of fifteen and thirty.

During the month of December the young people are entering an intensive campaign to support the general church sacrifice effort. Each year is closed with a special service in which the young people render their accounting as stewards and file their inventories or tithing reports.

The young people of Zion also have been organized under a Young People's Council for a number of years. At present Elder D. S. McNamara, an associate pastor in Zion, is young people's supervisor, Roy Settles is president of the Council. Each branch or group also is organized and has representatives on the Council.

During the summer at intervals of two weeks out-of-town trips were planned. Three all-day trips were made, one each to Marshall, Missouri, Stewartville reunion, and a trip to places of historic interest in and about old Far West. On four Sunday evenings, groups of young people visited outlying branches and assisted in the church services.

At present a literary play contest is on to terminate in December, the aim being to stimulate the production of Bible, Book of Mormon, and church history plays. In the spring an annual play contest is held in which players from the several branches participate.

For the winter season a Young People's Room in the Auditorium is open each Sunday afternoon for a program of lectures, music, and social gatherings. Open to all the young people of Zion, the project is sponsored and supervised by the young people's council.

A young people's Rally Day is scheduled early in April, next. There are two thousand Latter Day Saint young people in Independence.

President McDowell left Independence, November 3, for an extended series of conventions and institutes in the East, Ontario and Michigan. His itinerary included Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Boston, Toronto, London, Chatham, Windsor, Detroit, Flint, Lansing, and Hammond, Indiana. He will be joined by Apostles Hanson and Williams in their respective fields.

TITHING

By L. F. P. Curry

1. What are the scriptural grounds for the law of tithing?
2. How comprehensive is the law of God's ownership? What are the moral implications of the law?
3. On what grounds do we base the necessity of stewardship? What responsibility does this law place on men?
4. Why do we cling to the law of tithing as a solution for the financial problems of the church? What must be our attitude towards any "get-money-quick" scheme of raising church funds?
5. Tithing is a principle of social conduct for human life. So also is stewardship. God, who does not change, will not change these laws.

MISSIONARY OBJECTIVES AND PROCEDURE

By Paul M. Hanson

1. What kinds of missionary work did Jesus engage in? What scope of missionary work does this indicate? Is missionary work, then, only preaching?
2. State in your own words the missionary objective stated by Jesus.
3. Discuss the branches of missionary work set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.
4. Discuss the full meaning of the Great Commission in Matthew 28: 18-20.
5. What missionary methods does the author discuss? How may they be used and applied in your branch?

"Whither Goest Thou?"

By D. S. McDole

"Whither goest Thou?" said one Angel to another, according to Zachariah, and "Whither goest Thou?" we say to America, not only in the price and experience of agriculture but in industry, commerce, employment, morals, wealth creation, property values, and a thousand and one other "whys" come from a hundred million voices.

Perhaps never in the experience of America has there been more theorizing and less understanding with respect to sound economics. As the ravages of depression have engulfed, or at least largely paralyzed, one after another of our cherished forts of economic strength and security, there has come a paralyzing apprehension that the foundation upon which this "land of the free," this "home of the brave," which subscribes to a government "of the people, by the people and for the people" rests, would be entirely swept away.

We pause to inquire—do we really appreciate there are many staunch Gibraltars that remain which attest to remarkable recuperative powers and to the fact that again we shall have in America unexampled prosperity, peace and contentment. The potential powers of the young giant "America" among the nations of the world are attested in the fact that while an earthquake has gone through forty European countries, sweeping them from the gold standard, there has, during these past three years, come to these United States an increase in savings bank deposits of 1,233 million dollars, an increase in stock ownership of 102 leading industrial and business organizations, of 40% in stock ownership increasing the individual stockholders from 5,539,036 in 1929 to 7,675,143 at the beginning of this year. . . .

More than 25,800,000 automobiles are owned by Americans—almost one for every family. Our total is almost three times more than owned by the rest of the world.

Shall we ignore, even in the face of almost intolerable low prices and paralyzing unemployment that these features do not testify in thunder tones that we still have mighty recuperative powers, and that one day our "sleeping giant" shall yet again go into full action?

Agriculture has suffered violently in this period of adjustment. All commodity prices show shrinkages in correspondence to a more or less degree of shrinkage of national income. . . .

According to the Department of Agriculture, at the high point of 1929 farmers were receiving about 33.3% more for all products from the farm on a commodity price basis than they were in 1914, however, by March of 1932 had descended to a point where they were receiving but 55% of the prices of 1914. At the same time at the high point of 1929 agriculture was paying 53½% more for all commodities she purchased than she did in 1914, and by March of this year was still paying 11% more for the things she buys than did in 1914. In other words, the items the farmer buys were still 11% above 1914 prices while farmers' prices were 45% below the 1914 level. Farm prices, based upon food products, show a high point of 43.8% above 1914 levels for 1929 and 35.2% below 1914 for March of this year. Retail food prices reached a level of 64% above 1914 and were in March still 7½% above 1914. An almost indefinite number of similar calculations would only tend to confirm the fact that Agriculture in the future must receive a larger proportion of the National income dollar. If peace and contentment are to be the portion of farm folks they must be placed in the "buyer class" by receiving for agricultural products a commensurate proportion of the National income. The farmer, after all, constitutes the world's largest market—his needs; the plows, tractors, harrows, harvesting machinery, milking machines, lumber, hardware, electrical appliances, such as radios, etc., in every way make agriculture a preferred purchaser and it is in the economic security of this great group of honest citizenry that the hope of America in the future must lie.

We, therefore, feel we should not be accused of heresy in saying that 80% of our National wealth is in the hands of 4% of our people which definitely points out the need of avoiding the National calamities that in their turn overtook Egypt, Babylon, Greece and Rome. In the days of their ascendancy they were virile, ingenious, powerful nations which during the period of ascendancy created stupendous surplus wealth and which surplus gradually worked into the hands of a few until only a minor part of society was reaping the benefits of National wealth created. Intense individualism made the few bow down to their gods of gold and silver, of brass and of stone, spend their time in luxurious and riotous living while the many were slaves and were fed "free corn" from the national commissaries, and in this condition "Mene Mene Tekel Upharsin" was written over the headstone of these nations. They went into national eclipse and the stars of none of them have ever arisen to shine again. Beyond question, we are faced with the need of recognizing that society as a whole must be permitted to receive and to enjoy economic security and that we must be Christian not only in the statement that our Government is "of the people, by the people and for the people" but that business is "of the people, by the people and for all the people." Upon this confessional let us admit that we have been Pagan in our viewpoint that while Government is "for the people" every man's hand has been against his neighbor in making "business of the individual, by the individual, and for the individual." Through cooperation we are exercising that iconoclasm that is helping to smash these Pagan idols and we are coming gradually but surely to the realization that the security of the individual lies in the security of the group and that the cooperative group endeavors, honestly founded and managed and efficiently directed, are the Gibralters that will be standing when the barometer of better times indicates the returning tide of prosperity. . . . Ye Shall Receive

By E. Leola Nice

I found myself on my knees in my bedroom closet one day, praying as I had not prayed for many days. Somehow I seemed very alone and forlorn in my trouble, and sought for some thought which would make my heavenly Father seem nearer to me and less coldly distant and impersonal. At last I sank down on the floor and remained there long in quiet meditation.

I began to think of a mother—the sort of mother who is perhaps the ideal type as our fancy pictures her. Above all, she is a mother who loves much, and forgives more. She is self-denying, gentle, devoted. Her family of boys and girls she raises in the knowledge and fear (or shall I say, rather, love!) of God. She teaches them kindly, patiently, wisely, yet as her children grow into maturity, they are like the other children of the world—they must find for themselves the truth of the things they have been taught. They must test sin, try bits of forbidden life here and there, to know for themselves. They are unheeding—not with the desire to be vicious or unruly, but with the urge to express their inherited instincts to know for themselves. Just as a pilot who is about to make a long flight and knows his plane has been tuned up and tested, yet he himself must go and touch this strut and test that wing before he dares climb in and begin his journey.

And so the children of the Perfect Mother go their way, and incidentally the way of all kind, seeking, they know not always what. But lying in wait for unwary feet, just as the mother has warned them, are pitfalls and snares that destroy. And then the children, bleeding, wounded, and oh! so contrite and bewildered, come home to Mother, to lay their heads on her lap, to be caressed and soothed and healed by her never-failing and administering love.

And that mother—ah, how clearly I can see into the great heart of that mother who loves much and has lived only to be needed—folds her children into her warm arms to croon them to rest there on her bosom. In her eyes are tears, yet her heart sings for joy—joy, not because of the misfortunes that have come upon these, her children; but joy that at last her children whom she has loved and wanted all these years, over whom she has yearned and ached in her apprehensive fears at their unheeding progress, have come at last to need her! And that is the greatest desire in the heart of a mother, to be needed.

So now, now she is happy, for her children in their trials have come to her arms for comfort and guidance. Here, at last, is something she can do.

And is not then the heavenly Father such a parent as the Perfect Mother? He loves much and forgives more. He has given us laws and taught us in no uncertain terms the plan of salvation. He brought us into being, yet gave us the privilege of going forth into life to learn for ourselves. And we have gone, unheeding, forgetful of his teachings and promises. We have failed to learn his commands, and are we not then bound sooner or later to come to the pitfalls which destroy us?

Then, weak and broken in our misery, we come back to the source of our being to lay our heads on his lap, to be soothed and healed and comforted. And no doubt his heart, too, sings for joy—not because of our misfortunes, but because at last we have found our need of him and his help. For he loves us much, and wants us near him, and wants, above all, to be needed!

The path is always ready that leads us back to the comfort and peace, the healing power and forgiveness that is divine. That path is prayer; and if we would find comfort and surcease from misery, find courage to go on down the way we know to be thorny, all that is required is that we pray; for he has said, "Ask, and ye shall receive."

I Must Go On

By Mrs. J. D. Proffit

I must go on! I can not falter,
I must be brave, I must be true,
The crimson foot-prints of my Leader,
Have marked the path I must pursue.

I must go on! I can not fail Him,
Turn back and follow Him no more,
Though steep the road and rough the climbing
I set my face toward things before.

I must go on! His voice is calling,
On yon far heights His form I see,
A cloud of witnesses is watching,
No earthly clog shall hinder me.

I must go on! The goal allures me,
And win the everlasting prize,
A crown of righteousness awaits me,
A glorious life that never dies.

I must go on! Christ's love constrains me,
His dying I remember still,
Whatever comes I must be loyal
I will, God helping me, I will!

San Bernardino, California

Harvest Home Festival and Centennial Services Combined; President E. A. Smith Present

On the evening of September 2, a branch party was held at the home of Sister Hattie Tait, the occasion being the birthday of Pastor W. A. Teagarden. This was arranged as a surprise for Brother Teagarden, and a good crowd was in attendance. Outdoor games were played after which a watermelon feed was enjoyed.

This branch has been blessed with the help and presence of Brother Will Boren and his family from Centralia, Washington. They are planning on making San Bernardino their home, and Brother Boren's assistance in the work will be greatly appreciated. Brother Boren has occupied the pulpit whenever Brother Teagarden has been called away on district work and has assisted in visiting and administering to the sick.

General attendance has been increasing this fall, and there are two more baptisms to report.

October 2, was Promotion Day in the children's division, and after a short program, diplomas were presented to the children by their leader, Wilma Dexter.

November 4, 5, and 6, the local harvest home festival was held. The Saints were very glad to have President Elbert A. Smith at this time. On the evening of November 4, a dinner was served in the junior auditorium at 5.30, followed by a program by the orchestra and choir, after which displays for the storehouse were viewed and a bazaar was held in charge of the Temple Builders and the O. B. K.'s. The Oriole girls, also, sold home-made candy and books as souvenirs of the festival. The women's division during the summer months canned six hundred quarts of fruit, donated by members and nonmembers who had more fruit than they could take care of. All this was on display besides individual donations of fruit and other food stuffs that could be used during the winter for the needy of our branch. Each woman of the branch had been asked early in the spring to set aside one jar of fruit out of every ten canned for household use, to be a donation to the storehouse. In this manner, nine hundred and twenty-five jars of fruit were put into the storehouse besides all other foodstuffs donated. This amount is remarkable for a branch of this size. Ribbons were given for the best individual exhibit as to quality, quantity, and artistic arrangement of the display.

On the evening of November 5, the pageant, "Timbers for the Temple," was given by the dramatic class under the direction of Sister E. Leola Nice, and this was given again on Sunday evening, November 6. This pageant was written by Sister Nice and portrays the situation today of the church in her efforts toward the accomplishments of zionic ideals, and her attitude toward stewardship and tithing. It pictures as well the struggle of the youth of the church in their desire to qualify for service, coming in contact with Scorn, Indifference, Unbelief, and the World, all of whom must in time be overcome before Zion can become a beautiful reality. Members from the other branches in the district were in attendance as well as members of the other churches in the city, and both auditoriums were crowded each evening.

During the worship period of the church school at nine thirty on Sunday morning, November 6, a program was given by the children's division under the supervision of their leader, Sister Wilma Dexter. At this time, the Kinderband made their first public appearance in their little red and white suits. This was followed by a play, "Unto the Least of These," by the primary classes and another short play, "Searching for Happiness," by the intermediate classes. At 10.30 a. m. memorial services for Brother Joseph Smith were held, first a floral tribute by the children's division; song tribute, "Send Forth the Sowers," by the choir, followed by a tribute by President Elbert Smith, and the congregational tribute, singing, "Tenderly, Tenderly Lead Thou Me On."

Sacrament service at eleven o'clock was in charge of Brother Teagarden and President Elbert A. Smith, assisted by local and the visiting priesthood and at eleven thirty President Smith delivered a sermon which was very inspiring after which a vocal solo was given by Sister Stella Hodges, district chorister.

Dinner was served by the women's division, and at 2.30 p. m. a musical program was arranged by Sister Hodges.

This branch was greatly blessed by the efforts that were put forth to have this harvest home festival as it was a great help during the summer months to keep activities from lagging.

Many of the teachers in the church school are attending the extension course in Religious Education given at the junior college in San Bernardino.

The junior choir, senior choir, and orchestra, are now working on special music for the Christmas season.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Young People's Convention—Institute Joseph Smith Centennial

Autumn with its wealth of golden days was ushered in by a rally day program in the main auditorium of the church. Diplomas were issued to children from the various departments.

During the Halloween season the Research Class, Clover Club, junior department, Sand Tray Class, beginner and primary departments gave masquerade parties.

On November 5 and 6, the Joseph Smith centennial celebration and young people's convention were held. Members from other branches in the district attended in great numbers. Meals were served to all visitors in the dining hall.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson talked on Saturday afternoon, and in the evening President F. M. McDowell addressed the young people of the district. Then a social hour was enjoyed and an entertaining program was furnished by Brooklyn Branch. Refreshments were served by the K. U. Club, of Philadelphia.

The Sunday services included a prayer meeting at eight in the morning, and the church school program which celebrated the birthday anniversary of the school as well as the centennial of Joseph Smith. Elder A. H. Parsons, of Elk Mills, gave a talk as founder of the church school in Philadelphia and President McDowell spoke in memory of the late Prophet who left behind a record inspiring to every Latter Day Saint.

A quiet and peaceful sacrament service followed, a gentle and hallowed spirit being felt by all met to worship.

President McDowell conducted a round table discussion in the afternoon after which the young people met and elected Norman Preusch, of Philadelphia Branch, president of the district young people.

That evening, President McDowell spoke with great power concerning the character and life of Joseph Smith. The church was beautifully decorated for this occasion.

Throughout the following week, the program with musical numbers enhanced the reverential feeling. From Monday to Sunday inclusive, an institute was conducted by President F. M. McDowell and Apostle Paul M. Hanson. All classes were well attended and this was one of the largest institutes ever conducted in an outlying branch. The speakers made the members see that they can not conceive the power that will come to their aid when they shall have reached that higher plane of living, working wholeheartedly, humbly doing their best to enrich their minds and live as Christ would have his people live, abundantly, happily, thoughtfully.

Sunday morning at eight fifteen a young people's prayer meeting was held at the church by Brother McDowell. The Spirit was felt by the worshipers. Surely God was reaching out at this meeting to his people. Words can not express what it means to those who are attempting to serve him to place their hands in his. May all who were there long remember the power that was present.

Philadelphia young people met on Sunday afternoon and elected a council to carry on the work. This council met the following Saturday evening to elect officers and work out ways and means of keeping the young together.

Saints of the branch are thankful for the rich love recently experienced and for the lives of such men as Brothers McDowell and Hanson. Their help in Philadelphia brought many inspiring and uplifting experiences.

Centralia, Washington

Sketch of Branch Organization and Growth

The first mission in Centralia was opened in the spring of 1907, the first preaching being done by Elder S. P. Cox who also performed the first baptismal ceremony. Blanche and Mima Kerstetter were baptized April 23, 1907. The opening missionary services were held in the Kerstetter home.

In 1907, Brothers William Johnson and George Thorburn, general appointees, held a series of meetings in the old McNitt Hall.

The branch was organized February 5, 1911. The church was built in 1913, and dedicated by Elder T. C. Kelley August 17, 1913.

Brother S. P. Cox was the first pastor, and since that time they have had Leonard S. Rhodes, C. N. Heading, Carl Crum, O. L. Oppelt, and the present pastor, C. E. Schmid.

A number of reunions and conferences have been held there.

Since the organization of the church at Centralia the Saints have worked to make the latter-day cause go forward. Although the congregation is not large, and times have been very hard, the Saints show good interest and a willingness to cooperate with one another and their pastor. All services are fairly well attended, and good interest is shown. The young people take an active part in the prayer and testimony services.

The active help of Elder W. A. Boren and family is missed at Centralia. They have moved to California.

Elder C. E. Schmid and family, of Chicago, have located at Centralia and are active in the work.

Since the return of the pickers from the berry fields, various activities have resumed their normal trend.

A business meeting was held in October and Brother C. E. Schmid was chosen pastor. Brother O. L. Oppelt, former pastor, was presented a gift from the branch in appreciation of the years of helpful guidance and cooperation he has given.

A large percentage of the young people are nonmembers, but they seem to enjoy the activities of this department. They have organized in several ways. The Oriole Girls enjoy social activities. The Blue Birds are newly organized. A choir is directed by Brother Marion Oppelt, and furnishes music for services and special programs. The dramatic club under the direction of Sister Jessie Ward has given several splendid plays.

The young people of Seattle and British Columbia District have organized to stimulate a greater interest in church work. The different cities in the district will arrange programs to entertain one another. The groups have been organized at Centralia. The one having the most perfect attendance will be entertained by the other.

The Sunshine Club, the women's group, holds regular weekly meetings, and is making quilts to sell.

Apostle J. A. Gillen was there three days beginning October 30. Attendance and interest were good. His sermons gave the members renewed courage and a greater determination to press on.

Pasadena, California

Saints of this mission continue to meet with Brother and Sister Masters for preaching and prayer services. Elder Lawrence Brockway, who is now in charge of this group, took as his bride September 30, Miss Hazel M. Klein, of Los Angeles. Pasadena members believe Sister Brockway will be a great help here.

On the evening of October 11, the group met at the home of Brother and Sister Omohundro and gave them a surprise party, and the newlyweds were presented a gift from the Saints by Brother Strong.

The La Da Sa Club meets each Wednesday afternoon at the homes of the sisters. Sister Gertrude Kirkpatrick is president. They have enjoyed good programs and are now studying the church history. Some nonmember friends occasionally attend. A little English woman, Mrs. Cole, who is identified with the Friends Church, composed a helpful little poem and presented it to the club.

Brother and Sister Ben Green have moved back to Pasadena and are a great help.

The Saints here are trying to hold their ideals high, and desire to help the church through these trying times.

Davidson, Oklahoma

Three-day Visit of Apostle R. S. Budd

A recent three-day visit from Apostle R. S. Budd did much to encourage the Saints. The church was well filled on every night. On the first evening the Rhythm Band, composed of twenty small boys and girls and directed by Mrs. John McClure, a nonmember, gave two numbers, "Onward Christian Soldiers," and "Wake Up."

College Day was observed October 23, Apostle Budd the speaker morning and evening. "What Is Your Life?" was his theme of the evening service, and brought what the Saints needed, self-examination. They are trying to rid their "gardens" of the destructive "weeds" sown therein.

The Saints are enjoying the presence of Brother and Sister S. W. Simmons, of Keltner, Missouri, who are visiting at the home of Brother Simmons' daughter, Sister Robert Skinner. His health is improved since coming, and he has delivered two of his spirited sermons.

The young people have been making the fall months merry with social activities. Early in October their teacher, Mrs. Roy Skinner, entertained with an "organization" party in which the class organization was perfected, and later in the evening old-time games were played. Recently a hay-ride to the woods ended with a wiener and marshmallow roast, thirty-five young people of the church and community enjoying the fun. Ruth Carrow and Frances Simmons entertained the young people's class with a ghost party at their home in Rock Crossing, Texas, while the young married people's class participated in a Halloween frolic at the country home of Brother and Sister Roy Renfroe.

The following officers have been elected for the year which started October 1: Branch president, Z. Z. Renfroe; branch clerk, Mrs. Grady Hood; chorister, Edythe Skinner; pianist, Mrs. Troy Parker, and church school supervisor, Mrs. Helen Ridings.

Branch members are showing increased interest, and there is a better spirit prevailing among the Saints. The church school is better organized and expects to do more this year. Since the beginning of the new year the church school hour has been presenting an unusual feature every Sunday.

The Joseph Smith centennial was commemorated with an appropriate program by the church school. The stage setting was beautiful for the sacrament service which followed. The background was white with large clusters of chrysanthemums around an enlarged portrait of the late President Joseph Smith. Sixty-five partook of the Lord's Supper and of the splendid spirit present throughout the service.

On the afternoon of Sunday, October 30, a baptismal service was conducted by Z. Z. Renfroe. Sister Dale Simmons was the candidate. Brother and Sister Simmons and two small children are present every Sunday. They drive a distance of thirty-six miles to and from church. This is true with many other faithful members, some driving twice that far.

There is some sickness among the Saints. Brother Ray Carrow is seriously ill and confined to the hospital, at Vernon, Texas. The branch pioneer, Brother R. J. Parker, who is ninety-two years of age is in poor health. The Saints pray for the recovery of these two brothers.

The branch began the Sacrifice Period Sunday, November 20, with a special thanks offering.

Plymouth, Massachusetts

Patriarch and Sister J. A. Gunsolley Minister Here

Plymouth Saints and quite a number of nonmembers enjoyed the ministrations of Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley and wife during the last two weeks of October. His institute method of teaching the gospel is very effective.

Sister Gunsolley's talks preceded his, and were helpful. They were on the subject of the home life that will develop character to make Zion-building material.

Week-day meetings were held in the home of Brother Arthur P. Gordon. One meeting was held on Sunday afternoon five miles out in the country at the old South Pond Chapel, in the vicinity where most of the interested nonmembers lived. Two women nonmembers continue to come to services as a result of the special meetings.

Plymouth Saints hope to have these fine people with them again in the near future.

As July 18 was the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of this branch, a committee was chosen at the October business meeting to write the history of the branch up to date. The branch at this meeting also agreed to try out the combined, continuous service.

Renewed interest is apparent among the members, and indications of spiritual growth are seen in those who have been faithful in their attendance and duties.

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan

Strive to Aid Radio Broadcasts; First Sermon of Season November 20

Although the membership of Saskatoon Branch has been decreased, owing to the fact that the depression has compelled a number of families to trek north to the homesteads, activities follow one another in rapid succession.

There are two weddings to chronicle for September. Sister Florence Paul and Brother Arthur Gendron, two of the most popular young people of the local, were united in wedlock September 1, by Elder Ward L. Christy. The marriage took place in the chapel which was beautifully decorated. A reception was held after the ceremony at the home of the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. G. E. Smith.

September 28, Sister Minnie Piedt was married to Mr. John McKay, Brother Christy performing the ceremony. Sister Minnie, who has always lived close to the gospel law, set an example to all young people contemplating marriage by filing her inventory and paying her tithing.

Four souls were ushered into the kingdom by Brother Christy when Mrs. W. J. Smith, and Norman, Bruce, and Gerald Mogenson were baptized in the Saskatchewan River. Sister Smith's husband has been a member more than thirty years.

A most successful fowl supper was held at the church October 21, in aid of the radio fund. This is an annual event, and is looked forward to each year by a large group of nonmembers. Later in the evening a good program was enjoyed.

The annual business meeting occurred October 25. The following were sustained in their offices: Elder W. L. Christy as president; Sister Christy as director of Religious Education; Sister Grace Beckman, secretary; Sister Arthur Gendron was chosen assistant secretary; Sister Nelson, librarian, and Brother Nisbet, circulation convener, to work in conjunction with Sister L. C. Diggle, publicity agent.

The depression is far from receding in Western Canada. It is on the increase, and people in many cases are suffering. Yet the Lord is blessing his people and his work here.

The centenary of the birth of Joseph Smith was celebrated by a series of services November 4, 5, and 6. On Friday evening a pantomime was staged which was based on the play printed in the Herald. Music was unusually lovely, Sister Steves at the piano, and a quartet singing hymns. Others assisting in the music were Alvin and Lily Anderson, Gladys Steves, and Brother Christy. Sister Christy feelingly told the story of the life of Joseph, the peacemaker, during each intermission of the pantomime.

On Saturday morning a prayer service was enjoyed, followed by a description of the home-life of Joseph Smith by Sister Christy.

In the afternoon Sister L. C. Diggle spoke on the ancestry of Joseph Smith; Sister Blanch Cassidy on his early childhood; Sister Ethel Piedt described his interest in educational matters; Sister Grace Beckman talked of his father's martyrdom, and Brother Henry Piedt of his activities at Lamoni.

From four to eight o'clock Sister Mogenson served supper, the proceeds to aid the radio fund. The basement of the chapel was appropriately decorated with green and white, and the tables were lovely with vases of carnations and asters. Sister Mogenson is an able cook, and many declared that she surpassed herself on this occasion. A goodly sum was realized from the supper and from the sale of candy made entirely by Norman Mogenson, fifteen years of age.

That evening Brother Christy lectured on the prophetic calling.

Church school on Sunday morning was followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, a good spirit being present. The speakers in the afternoon were Paul Schmidt, Frank Piedt, Alvin Beckman, and Sister Grace Diggle. All discussed different phases in the life and work of Joseph Smith.

A letter was received recently from Sister Moran, who with her sons, Clifford and Dan, moved last spring to Edmonton, Alberta. She reported the branch work flourishing there, and related a rather trying experience. Their chapel is heated by natural gas, and during the church school hour, she commented several times on the odor of gas, but as there appeared to be no leakage, no action was taken. Suddenly a child fell over unconscious, followed in a few seconds by another. They were carried outside, a doctor was called, and finally they were revived. Also the gas man was called who located a bird's nest in the outlet. A humorous side of an otherwise almost tragic incident was revealed by Sister Osler, wife of Missionary Osler. She had been cleaning the church the day before when she was almost overcome. She called a doctor who shook his head gravely, looked serious, and declared that she had leakage of the heart. She was advised to cease all work for some months.

The first sermon of the year will be broadcast November 20, from three to four o'clock.

What is Zion? "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them." (Doctrine and Covenants 36:2.) Zion has been the heart of the message of the latter-day prophets. Zion has actuated the preaching of latter days, and will give more power to the preaching of the future than any other one thing. It is the embodiment of social righteousness.—E. Y. Hunker, in a sermon preached at the Stone Church.

Independence

During their first month of personal sacrifice in behalf of the general church, the women of Independence raised a sum of $1,167.27. They meet every Monday afternoon in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church, to check results and launch new work. These are veritable "pep" meetings. Interest in their endeavors is on the increase, and the crowds attending these regular meetings are large.

President Frederick M. Smith was present the afternoon of November 21, and gave an inspirational talk. President Elbert A. Smith was also there, this being his first time because of absence from the city. Pastor J. F. Sheehy was in charge. On this day in addition to checking over sacrifice envelopes, each woman was asked to bring a gift for the Woman's Exchange, a new department in the Commodity Shop. Approximately two hundred gift packages were accordingly deposited in a large basket.

Sister C. C. Koehler, in charge of the women of Independence, is pushing the work forward, and hundreds of feminine workers in the center place hope to make the second month's record better than the first.

The Saints of Independence experienced a real, old-time evening at the Auditorium Sunday night, to climax the month's observations of the centennial of Joseph Smith, the late President of the church. Pageantry, the singing of hymn compositions of Joseph Smith and other hymns of days gone by, good music by the Walnut Park Orchestra, directed by Orlando Nace, and a tenor solo by Edward Brackenbury were pleasing to the large crowd assembled.

At this hour members of all congregations witnessed the presentation of "Milestones in the Life of Joseph Smith III," a pageant written by Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Burgess. This was presented by groups from various congregations under the direction and management of the White Masque Players. Pastor John F. Sheehy read the Prologue, "Birth," and scenes were given by groups from Englewood, Spring Branch, Liberty Street, Second Church, Enoch Hill, and Gudgeon Park. Through the pageant the part of Joseph Smith was played by Kenneth Huntington Taylor, Duane Miller, Ralph Dunlap, and Frank Jennings.

Friends in Independence were shocked and grieved on Monday to learn of the death of Sister Earl D. Bailey, of Tulsa, Oklahoma. She was fatally injured in an automobile accident at Wichita, Kansas, Sunday afternoon, November 27, and lived only twenty minutes. Elder Earl D. Bailey, her husband, and the only other occupant of the car, was also injured. Brother and Sister Bailey were the first couple married at Lamoni, Iowa, their wedding occurring fifty-two years ago. They are the parents of ten children, eight sons, and two daughters. One son, Wallace, lives in Independence; the other sons and daughters are in Tulsa. In addition to her immediate family, Sister Bailey leaves two sisters living at Lamoni, a brother in Kansas City, a sister in Independence, a brother and sister in southern Missouri, and many friends.

Stone Church

The theme of "Thanksgiving for Our Heritage," has been presented at the church school worship service each Sunday during November by Superintendents S. A. Thiel and H. W. Harder.

In his sermon to the Stone Church congregation Sunday morning Elder R. S. Salyards held up Jesus as the example of divine love. He chose his text from Doctrine and Covenants 4, and stressed the fact that this revelation was given for the salvation of humanity.

An appealing program of music was given by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. The choir sang the anthems, "But the Lord Is Mindful of His Own," and "Hark, Hark My Soul," solo parts in the latter being taken by Mrs. Nina G. Smith, soprano, and Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, contralto. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee was the organist. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, and Elder W. B. Paul assisted him.

The Thanksgiving service, Thursday morning, was attended by a large number drawn together by the common desire to express thanks and praise for their blessings and to worship the Giver of all. Pastor J. F. Sheehy's thanksgiving sermon called for the thoughtful consideration of the Saints, and the music by the choir and soloists was excellent.

The death of Mrs. Mary Jane Phay, sixty-eight years of age, occurred November 22, at the Sanitarium. Her funeral was held Friday afternoon at the Carson and Son funeral chapel, Pastor Sheehy in charge, Elder Ammon White making the address. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. She leaves to mourn her husband, J. J. Phay, four sons, a daughter, a brother, and a sister. The family is widely scattered throughout the United States and Canada.

A wedding of interest to the Stone Church congregation was that of Miss Roberta Frances Givens and Albert Arnold Rall, November 20, at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Lott Sandy, Kansas City. The double ring ceremony was read by Elder George Mesley. Preceding the ceremony the candles were lit by little Lillian Sandy, a niece of the bride, while Miss Lucille Sandy, pianist, and Frank White, violinist, played MacDowell's "To a Wild Rose." Mrs. John Isaacks sang "At Dawning," and "Because," and during the ceremony Nevin's "Rosary" was played. The bride was attended by her sisters, Miss Marguerite Givens and Miss Gladys Givens, and the bridegroom was attended by Joseph C. Givens as best man and Roy Smith as groomsmen. The rings were carried on a satin pillow by Franklin Earl Freudenburge. A reception followed the ceremony. After December 1, Mr. and Mrs. Rall will be at home at 1308 West College.

Second Church

Thursday, November 24, a Thanksgiving service was held at Second Church at 11 a. m. The service opened with an organ prelude by Mrs. Gladys Inman. Pastor William Inman was the officer in charge. Mrs. S. A. Burgess sang "The Prayer Perfect," accompanied by Mrs. T. A. Beck. After the offering, Mrs. Burgess sang "Thanks Be to God." Patriarch U. W. Greene read the one hundredth Psalm and used it as his subject. The talk was brief and interesting. The meeting was closed by Elder A. W. Whiting.

The theme of the junior service, Sunday, was, "Thankful for the Sacrifices of the Pioneers." The meeting was directed by Brother Conyers assisted by Bethel Davis as pianist and Helen Wiloughby as leader of music. Brother Roy Settles talked of the hardships of pioneers of both the country and the church. He also offered the closing prayer.

Assistant Pastor B. C. Sarratt took charge of the eleven o'clock preaching service. The opening prayer was by Elder A. W. Whiting. A response by the choir was entitled "O Thou God Who Hearest Prayer." "Ivory Palaces," a duet, was sung by Mrs. Wilma Settles and Mrs. Grace Nave. Following the offertory the choir sang "Now on Land and Sea Descending." Elder R. D. Weaver was the speaker of the hour. His subject was "The Unfinished Task."

Assistant Pastor Ben Sarratt took charge of the eleven o'clock preaching service. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee played the organ. Elder F. L. Freeman, sr., offered the invocation. The choir sang "Father, We Thank Thee for the Night," followed by the offertory and another choir selection, "Praise the Lord All Ye Nations." Mrs. H. C. Burgess's Cantinina Chorus gave three numbers, "Morning Praise," "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," and "Break Thou the Bread of Life." The speaker of the service was Patriarch Ammon White who talked on "Marvelous Works on This Continent."

A young member of the congregation, Billy McPherson, was in charge of the junior service, assisted by Orson Murdock. The speaker was Pastor William Inman whose talk was "Thanksgiving." Sister Sarratt told a story entitled, "Sharing the Best."

At the seven-thirty service a song, "Come, Sound His Praise Abroad," was sung by the choir. A quartet composed of Mrs. Ethel Schuyler, Mrs. Edna Fetters, Mrs. Ethel McBride and Mrs. Alice Minton, sang "Just Abide." The opening prayer was by Elder D. A. Whiting. The ladies' quartet sang as a second number, "Confidence." The speaker, Apostle J. F. Curtis, used as his Scripture lesson, the second chapter of Daniel.

Elder R. L. Fulk and his wife, who have been in the mission field for eighteen years, and their daughter, Mildred, are making Independence their permanent home.

Mrs. J. M. Robinson who has been bedfast for a time is now improving.

On Monday afternoon, November 28, the funeral of Elder John T. Curtis was held from the church. Brother Curtis, who was seventy-two years old, died at the Sanitarium Saturday morning. He had been in poor health since last February. He and Sister Curtis celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1930; they came to Independence in 1904. He had been a member of the church for forty years. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Mary E. Curtis, four daughters, three sons, one brother, five half-brothers, one half-sister, twenty grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Enoch Hill Church

November 20, the church school took "Thankfulness" as its theme for the morning worship service. A story, "Asking and Thanking," was told by Sister Clara Frick, and "Count Your Blessings" was sung by a quartet, Lewis Hayes, Robert McDonald, W. T. Shakespeare, and Millard Pace.

Bishop J. S. Kelley, in his morning sermon, referred to the late President Joseph Smith as the "one mighty and strong," and presented characteristics worthy of emulation. The choir sang "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," and E. H. McKean sang, "When the World Forgets, Jesus Remembers."

"Onward, Christian Soldiers" was sung by the choir Sunday evening, and there was a cornet solo, "Beautiful Dreamer," by David Allen. "God's Investment in Us," was the theme of Elder T. A. Beck.

On Thanksgiving Day Enoch Hill members met at the church at ten o'clock. A short program was given by the choir and Mrs. Verla Waters, reader, after which Pastor H. L. Barto preached a Thanksgiving sermon. An old-fashioned church dinner was served in the basement at noon, showing the fine cooperation and consideration of the Saints. Everyone who could donated food and labor; but no charge was made, and those who because of lack of employment, found themselves unable to contribute food, were served as freely as all others. It was found in this way that everyone could enjoy a wholesome dinner with the fellowship of Saints at less expense than a dinner at home.

In the afternoon a very pleasing program was rendered, consisting of a pantomime of Puritan life, given by Mr. and Mrs. E. H. McKean, I. E. Kramer, Dale Constance, Betty Jean McKean, Esther Kramer, and Freddy Young.

Mrs. Amos Allen read a one-act play, "I Shall Not Pass Again This Way."

Mrs. S. A. Thiel, of the Stone Church, read "Benefits Forgot." Music for the afternoon was furnished by a mixed chorus of young people dressed in Puritan costumes.

Last Sunday morning Elder W. T. Shakespeare was the speaker. He knew Brother Joseph Smith personally and was able to bring to this congregation little incidents helpful to a better understanding of him. The choir sang "Blest Be Thou, O God of Israel," and Mrs. Willis Young sang, "The Prayer Perfect."

Walnut Park Church

At the session of the church school Sunday morning, two new officers were elected, completing the roster of officials for the current year. Brother B. O. Grimes was selected as superintendent of the adult department, and Erwin Moorman was reelected librarian.

The spirit of neighborliness and helpfulness is found to be present among the Saints of this congregation. Unemployed men have been occupying their time cutting wood for those who do not have money to buy coal. Brother Erwin Moorman announced Sunday morning that about ten truckloads had been cut already, and he called for volunteers to help continue the good work. Brother George Martin stated that he had farm work needing to be done, and that he would be glad to exchange produce for labor with any who might be unemployed and desirous of replenishing their larders.

Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker Sunday morning, his sermon being on the general subject of the mission of Christ. At this service Bonnie Louise Thomas, baby daughter of Brother and Sister Sharon Thomas, was blessed, Elders Roland Kapnik and Benjamin Bean officiating. Carolyn June Barnhardt, daughter of Brother and Sister Cyril J. Barnhardt, was blessed at the Religio session Sunday evening. The blessing was by Elder George Harrington and the baby's grandfather, Elder R. Barnhardt.

There was no preaching service Sunday evening, the congregation being left free to attend the pageant given at the Auditorium.

Brother and Sister Carl Bateman, of the Walnut Park district, are the parents of a baby girl, Viola Margaret, born Monday, November 21.

Spring Branch Church

"The Word of Wisdom" was the theme of last Wednesday night's prayer service.

Thursday morning another worship and prayer service was held at the church, Pastor G. W. Eastwood and Brother Robert Fish in charge. This was a time of thanksgiving and praise.

Pastor John F. Sheehy, the morning speaker, took his text from Luke 17, reading the story of Christ healing the ten lepers. The choir sang, "Sing to the Lord of Harvest," and was glad to have present Sister Jalmer Nelson, the music director. Illness in the Nelson family has kept her from the services.

David Stewart of this congregation was married to Laura McDowell, of Kansas City, November 16, at the home of his sister, Beulah Stewart Donkawich. Elder Harvey Minton officiated. On Thanksgiving night many of the Saints went to the Donkawich home where the bridal couple were visiting, and welcomed them to the congregation.

Gudgell Park Church

About the middle of November the branch decided to hold cottage prayer meetings during the winter. On the evening of the sixteenth the Saints met at the home of P. A. Sherman and enjoyed a good service.

Women of this group meet weekly, and are busy. On November 25, they met with Sister Roy Sherman, tied two comforts, and held their class on "Church Objectives."

The list of recent speakers includes the pastor, Walter Chapman, H. E. Winegar, D. S. McNamara, and H. G. Barto.

No prayer meeting was held last Wednesday evening, but the Saints assembled for a worship service at nine o'clock Thanksgiving morning.

November 24, Miss Charlotte Alberti, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilford Alberti, of Independence, and Leonard Ornell Sherman, son of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Sherman, of this congregation, were married at eight o'clock at the Trinity Episcopal Church, Doctor S. F. Riepma, the rector, reading the service. Preceding the ceremony Miss Gladys Good sang, "I Love You Truly," accompanied by Mrs. J. C. Story, organist, who also played the wedding march. The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attended by two bridesmaids, Miss Elinor Kennedy, of Kansas City, and Miss Marjorie Douth, of Independence. Lawrence Good, of Kansas City, was best man, and Kenneth Sherman was the groomsman. Albert and Ralph Alberti, brothers of the bride, were ushers. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Sherman left immediately to spend their honeymoon at Eureka Springs, Arkansas. They will be at home after December 10, at 211 South Huttig Avenue, Fairmount.

East Independence Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy was here to conduct the recent business meeting. He preceded the election of officers with an address which appealed to the loyalty and service of the members.

Brother Frank Minton was reelected pastor, and other officers are: Associate pastor, Cornelius Edgerton; bishop's agent and custodian, T. W. Thatcher; director of church school, C. Edgerton, and supervisor of women, Iva Edgerton. Other officers will be locally appointed.

The women of this district are busy with home needs and assisting, as means will allow, with the sacrifice system the women of Independence are conducting to help general church finances.

November 13 being Bishop's day, the pastor was appointed as speaker. His subject was taken from the teaching of Christ to the woman at the well. The day closed with H. S. Fields's delivering an old-time missionary sermon. His discourse was heard also by several visitors from Independence who were welcome additions to the congregation.

The first Sunday of November was the occasion for impressive and helpful services at East Independence. It was a day of peace, the Spirit being present at the serving of the Lord's Supper. At the church school hour Sister Madge Thatcher read the oration, "Joseph Smith," by Inez Smith Davis. The day closed with the presentation of a play, "One Hundred Years," written by Iva Edgerton, and portraying three periods of time—Joseph the Martyr in his prison cell reviewing the promises of God to him; the Amboy conference, and one hundred years of time which gave incidents in the life of Joseph Smith III.

Speakers the last Sunday in October were Elder H. V. Minton and J. T. Butler. Elder R. L. Fulk and family were visitors on that day, sharing in the basket dinner at noon. Brother Fulk had been the morning speaker on the previous Sunday.

Plano Observes Centenary of Joseph Smith

President F. M. Smith Is Guest Speaker

Plano Branch, assisted by other branches of Northeastern Illinois District, celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, president of the church from 1860 to 1914, with an all-day meeting November 6. President Frederick M. Smith returned to his old home town to celebrate this his father's natal anniversary, and the day was a special occasion for Saints of Plano, Sandwich, Aurora Mission, DeKalb, Oak Park, Chicago, Hinsdale, and Joliet.

A long press story of the day's events is given prominent position in The Kendall County News.

"It was especially fitting," says the News, "that the day be observed in this city, as Plano is a historical landmark, it being the church headquarters from 1862 to 1884. President Joseph Smith lived at Plano during that time, and was instrumental in the construction of the stone church on South Center Avenue."

President Frederick M. Smith was born in Plano and spent his early boyhood there.

The church school session on Sunday morning, in charge of Mrs. Clara Easterbrook, of DeKalb, district director of Religious Education, was followed by the sacrament service, presided over by District President R. E. Davey, of Aurora, the Plano pastor, Elder J. M. Blakely. President Smith gave an interesting short talk.

The centennial service followed the dinner hour, and President Smith's address was the principal item of the program.

In the evening the play, "Milestones in the Life of Joseph Smith," a brief sketch of his life, was presented by Plano Branch, assisted by several from Aurora. Then President Smith gave an illustrated sketch of several of the outstanding people and landmarks in the early history of the church, including the stone church and old Herald Publishing House at Plano.

Music for the day was contributed by local and visiting musicians, and greatly enhanced the services.

Kansas City Stake

Workers of the stake met at Grandview Church the evening of November 10, to perfect plans for the Sacrifice Period which is now under way and will end at Christmas time.

The entire stake membership will be visited by the workers. The members will fill out cards upon which they will state how much they hope they can give each week or month, and these cards will be filed for the use of the bishop. Envelopes will be left with each member to be returned to the local bishop's solicitor. If members fail to make their contributions, the solicitor will call personally for them. It is hoped that the people thus reached will not only show a greater interest in the financial aspects of the church, but also in the spiritual. The workers have begun their canvass.

The Stake Conference

Local churches canceled all services for the day, November 20, and met in the regular semiannual conference. The forbidding weather conditions of a few days past gave way to beautiful sunshine and a pleasant Sunday.

Central Church was well filled at all three services, preaching at eleven o'clock, prayer meeting at 2.30 p. m., and preaching again at seven forty-five. In the morning Apostle John F. Garver read Acts 26 for a lesson, using the text, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision," (verse nineteen) and his topic was, "The Basic Things of Our Philosophy."

The stake presidency, Cyril E. Wight, C. D. Jellings, and George Mesley were in charge of the meeting, assisted by Missionary J. Charles May.

Members gathered early for the social meeting in the afternoon, and sang three hymns before the opening number. Brother Evan Fry led the singing and Apostle J. F. Garver offered the invocation. Those desiring prayers were re-membered in the supplication by Elder J. Charles May. President Frederick M. Smith made the opening remarks.

Extra chairs were required to seat all who came to the evening service. President Frederick M. Smith, the speaker, reviewed the history of all Christian peoples, climaxing his sermon with a vivid portrayal of the struggles, trials, and growth of the latter-day church.

Special music was given by the choir led by Clayton Wolfe, and the invocation was offered by Elder Frederick S. Anderson.

Bennington Heights Church

The young people of Bennington Heights presented "The Pilgrim Mother" to the local church Friday, October 28. It was their entry in the drama tournament held at Central Church, November 28, 29, and 30. The early part of the seventeenth century was the period used in the play; about the time the Mayflower came over. The drama gave a good idea of the hardships that were endured by these people.

The church held a Thanksgiving service November 20. Brother O. G. Helm gave an interesting talk on the beginning of Thanksgiving. The service was closed at an early hour to enable the members to attend the stake conference services at Central Church.

Veteran Workers Hold Meetings in Iowa

Elders Amos Berve and Joseph Lane Are Missionary Team

Early in September Elders Amos Berve and Joseph Lane began a series of services in the Graceland Church, north and east of Lucas, Iowa. These services were continued over Sunday, the eleventh, with an average congregation of fifty-five. Interest was good and seventy-six were present Sunday evening, all but five or six being nonmembers.

On the following Sunday these two old associates in gospel work began another series of services at Bloomington Church. Here the Saints showed their interest by filling the church fairly well each evening. This interest continued throughout, and the missionaries were given an earnest invitation to "come again."

Then meetings were arranged for at the Downey Schoolhouse, south and east of Lamoni, and opened October 4. Here the people were anxious to hear the gospel, and the number increased until all the seats were occupied and several people stood. Weather made the roads hard to travel, and services could not be held there October 9, Sunday. This weather compelled Brother Berve to leave his congenial associate in the gospel work (They were associated in district work several years.) and to return to Independence.

Elder Lane then secured the assistance of a veteran missionary, T. J. Bell, and continued the Downey Schoolhouse meetings for three weeks. At the close ten were baptized.

Spokane, Washington

A Progressive Year for This Branch

The visits of Apostle J. A. Gillen and the newly-ordained and appointed bishop, D. S. McDole, and F. M. McDowell, of the First Presidency, have renewed the courage of members here.

Elder and Sister J. W. Peterson arrived in Spokane, June 24. He preached one sermon, June 26, conducted a cottage meeting the next day, and then was confined to his bed. He passed away August 11. After many years as an active missionary he had learned the art of patience, a lesson to be learned by all.

In the July sacrament service Brother McDole conducted a round table in the afternoon, discussing problems of the church. That evening he preached. Spokane is Brother McDole's former home. He has many friends here in the church and out.

Brother McDowell, in his quiet, forceful way, brought to the attention of local members some of the qualifications of a real Latter Day Saint. His time here was limited, and he endeavored to give a ten-day course in three class periods.

Mother's Day this year was observed in Spokane Branch with two appropriate programs. The children's division occupied the morning hour, the young people the evening. On this day the infant son of Brother and Sister W. E. Storey was blessed by Elder Joseph Sandidge.

The Saints rejoiced, July 17, when three children united with the church, Howard and Harriet, twins of Brother and Sister V. Merriman, and Doris Kinney, youngest daughter of Brother and Sister H. E. Kinney.

June 19 to 26 marked a sacrifice period of the church. The program for the opening day was impressive. The divisions of the church school and the priesthood participated in the program which was presented in the form of a prayer service.

The wedding of Guy Allen, a young priest in the branch and Miss Gertrude Story, formerly of Dayton, Washington, was witnessed by the Saints of this branch, Pastor Alma Andrews officiating. Sister Allen has been an active worker here for the past four years. A bridal shower was given them by the branch.

An oyster and chili supper was given to defray expenses of the baseball team. The branch is proud of the boys as a team. They showed sportsmanship from beginning to end, and ranked third in the honors of the Inter-Church Baseball League.

Spokane Saints accepted Coeur D'Alene's invitation to join them for their July 4 picnic at beautiful Lake Coeur D'Alene.

The branch has been conducting an extensive building program. Having long realized the need of more adequate quarters for the church school, they have gone to work with renewed zeal to finish the program outlined by Elder P. R. Burton. This has been conducted by Brother Dave Coleman, sr., and Pastor Alma Andrews and associate officers, all labor being donated. The work accomplished in the basement has been great and the expense small.

Brother Cook, of Vancouver, Washington, conducted a series of meetings September 21 to October 7. Apostle Gillen occupied the stand for one evening, his theme being, "Do You Want to Be Saved?"

Bisbee, Arizona

Elder W. P. Bootman Assists in Services

On November 6, Bisbee Saints enjoyed the fellowship of Saints from Douglas, a little town about twenty-five miles from here. The morning Sunday school service was followed by sacrament hour and prayer meeting which everyone enjoyed. Elders W. P. Bootman and F. M. Dearborn were in charge of the hour, assisted by Pastor T. R. Davis. The gospel gifts were manifested on this occasion, and the worshipers were greatly encouraged.

At the close of this meeting Lela Lula, five-months-old daughter of Brother and Sister Ratteree, was blessed, and Sister Mary Dearborn was administered to. Then an old-time basket dinner was enjoyed.

The priesthood meeting at three in the afternoon was in charge of Elder W. P. Bootman. The women also met at that hour, discussing ways and means of raising money to help with branch expenses. They decided to have a waffle dinner.

The seven thirty evening program commemorated the birth of Joseph Smith, third. The stage was beautifully decorated with flowers by Pastor T. R. Davis, and a large audience enjoyed the program. There were old-time hymns, favorites of the late President of the church; instrumental and vocal numbers. Miss Mildred Puckett presented "Joseph Smith the Boy"; Miss Evelyn Nicholas, "Joseph, the Young Man"; F. M. Dearborn, "Joseph, the Man"; Raymond Ratteree, "Joseph, the Leader"; Brother June Taylor, "Joseph, the Prophet"; Alva Corley, "Joseph, His Character"; Davis Myers, "Joseph, His Disposition"; Miss Lillian Simpson, "Joseph, as I Personally Knew Him," and Mrs. Daisy B. Short, "Joseph, the Successor." Elder Bootman assisted in this program.

On Monday, November 7, Brother Bootman was to return to Tucson, but missed his train. He was told that if he would preach that night, the workers would try to get word to all the Saints. Some had been praying that there would be service that night, and so joyfully gathered to hear Brother Bootman's sermon on the principles of the doctrine.

After the sermon Mr. R. C. Smith gave his name for baptism, stating that Brother Bootman's sermon had been exactly what he wanted to hear.

The next morning they drove to Douglas, and Brother Smith was baptized into the church.

Bisbee Saints have cottage prayer meetings. There are so few who can attend that some of the time is spent writing papers on what we as Latter Day Saints believe. Much good is derived from this. For instance, one week everyone writes a paper on baptism or faith. Then each one reads his paper, and the group discusses it.

The Lord has blessed the Saints of this region. Only two families of church members have been out of work. These have no children and have work part of the time.

Special Missionary Meetings for Oklahoma Branches

Ministers Tour District

After closing tent meetings at Davidson, Eagle City, Calumet, and Piedmont, Oklahoma, we had the pleasure of making a trip to the west plains of Texas, where we visited Saints and relatives. While there we were invited to take the gospel to a group of men and their families who were operating a power plant at Abernathy, Texas. This opportunity came as the result of the personal work done by Sister O. O. Sumner, of Lubbock, who has relatives and friends there.

The interest shown by these people in the Restoration movement made us realize more keenly our missionary responsibility, and we feel that if this effort can be followed up, there will be some additions to the church.

On October 8, we headed the car toward Alva, Oklahoma, where we began a missionary series. This meeting was very good. The Saints there have a nice church building. For this building and the activity of the group we are indebted to Brother A. H. Christensen who was missionary to Western Oklahoma District.

Apostle R. S. Budd came on Friday night to finish the meeting. His sermons were enjoyed.

Sunday, October 16, was an enjoyable day. After the morning sermon, we went to the park to partake of a basket dinner, then on to the lake in the park to baptize four people. Brother Budd preached the closing sermon in the evening, and we set out on Monday to visit the branches of the district.

The Saints at Freedom, Seiling, Eagle City, Calumet, and Davidson filled their respective churches to capacity and enjoyed the inspiring sermons given by Brother Budd.

On October 30, Sister Dale Simmons was baptized at Davidson. This baptism made our total since May number twenty-nine.

There is a fine opportunity for missionary work in this district. We are planning meetings for a number of the branches. We are happy that Brothers E. E. Crownover, B. A. Howard, Howard Harpham, Claude McColister, and others have given their time to missionary work, and are ready to do all within their power to keep the latter-day work progressing.

Z. Z. RENFROE.

Traverse City, Michigan

C. E. Harpe Conducts Missionary Meetings

November 20.—There was good attendance at Sunday school and church today, and Elder B. H. Doty was the speaker.

Traverse City Saints are looking forward to November 23, when the new missionary, Elder C. E. Harpe, will start a series of meetings. Whether they gain new members or not as a result of these meetings, they know many of the members will be revived and encouraged.

Brother Robert Moran and family have moved to Independence, Missouri, where he has employment. They are missed in this branch where both Brother and Sister Moran were willing workers.

The women's department served a "Maggie and Jiggs" supper at the church, November 10, proceeds amounting to about sixteen dollars. Every branch with an active women's department is bound to show progress. With the money the women have raised and the help of H. A. Doty, jr., and John Clark, much-needed repairs were made on the church basement.

Sister Etta Dick was called to Joyfield, Benzie County, by the illness of her father who passed away November 17.

Sister Orma Gardner and husband, of South Boardman, have come to Traverse City to spend the winter. Sister Gardner's health is poor, and the Saints are asked to remember her in their prayers.

Alexander, Kansas

Unemployed Help in Branch Work

Services here are attended by fair-sized crowds when one considers that the most of the congregation comes a distance of from two to fifteen miles. The branch president lives some fourteen miles away, but is present at most of the meetings, preaching twice on one Sunday.

Economic pressure on the members has lessened the tithing and offerings of the branch because there is little work, and the wages of the wage earners must go to support families. There are good, honest, hard-working men in the branch who go weeks without work. Nevertheless, they attend services and do what they can to help the church progress. The Saints are hoping for better times.

There has not been enough moisture in this region for the wheat, so the farmers are eating what they raised and spend little for things at the store.

One person has been baptized at Alexander this year, and a baby has been blessed.

Brother Hermon Kueffer and his good wife and family are a help in the services here.

Sister Clara Donecker and Vida Teeter are teaching school.

The annual branch election occurred November 5, and resulted as follows: Pastor, Elder John A. Teeter; clerk, Lois Teeter; treasurer, Peter Boese; supervisor of music, Vida Teeter; publicity department, Mrs. John Teeter; janitor, Archie Stephens; supervisor of young people, Versa Stephens; recreation and program superintendent, Lois Teeter; church school superintendent, Mrs. Elsa Boese; assistant, Hermon Kueffer; secretary, Archie Stephens. The teachers will be chosen near the end of this year.

Janesville, Wisconsin

One of the Oldest Branches of Reorganization

Although one of the oldest branches in the Reorganization, Janesville Saints still are few in number. But this branch has sent out into the world many who are earnest workers in the church.

Brother Cleo Heide, a noble young man whom all respect, is the branch president.

Sunday school is regularly conducted. Recently Elder Harry Wasson gave a fine sermon.

On November 6, the branch held an all-day service at the farm home of Sister Ella Dutton, a pioneer Saint of eighty-eight years whose testimony still rings clear and faithful to the truth of the latter-day message. Her Christian life has been an inspiration to many.

At 10.30 a. m. a memorial service was held in honor of Joseph Smith, the third. It was the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. Sister Julia Dutton gave a brief history of his life up to the time he became President of the church. Sister Effie Hield followed with a brief outline of his life as President of the church. Special music was by Miss Sylvia Dennis and Mrs. Walker, of Madison. The eleven o'clock sacrament service was in charge of District President Henry Woodstock and his counselor, Harry Wasson.

A picnic dinner at noon and at two o'clock a helpful sermon by Elder H. Woodstock were much enjoyed. About fifty attended the day's services, representing branches at Beloit, Milwaukee, Evansville, Madison, and Janesville.

The district conference was held at Madison, November 12 and 13, and was well attended by Janesville members. The Saints are looking forward to a study class in Doctrine and Covenants to be taught by District Missionary J. E. Vanderwood.

Elder P. T. Anderson Visits Isolated Saints in North Dakota

There are only seven members of the church at La Moure, but these were fortunate in having the services of Elder P. T. Anderson during the first two weeks and a half of November.

Each evening they gathered at the home of Brother and Sister John Young. Some nights there were just the members of the family; other evenings a few nonmembers were there. There again they were taught the gospel story.

On the first Sunday of the month it was a pleasure and privilege to them to have the sacrament administered. This was the first time in four years that they had had this opportunity. Brother and Sister J. Muffle and their two daughters, from Straubsville, and Lee O. Mussell, of Des Moines, Iowa, also met with them at this service. Though the number present was small, this service will linger in the minds of all for God's Spirit was there, and Brother Anderson was blessed with the gift of prophecy, and spoke of admonition and encouragement.

From La Moure Brother Anderson went to Straubsville.

Religion is not something you can pick up on the street and lose without knowing it. Religion is a growth made by applying the great principles of Christ in our lives.—H. E. Winegar, in a sermon to the Enoch Hill Congregation, Independence.

Miscellaneous

Announcement

The Y. K. T. Class, beginning next Sunday morning at nine thirty, is sponsoring a course in Church History, under the capable directorship of Pastor John F. Sheehy. We know that there are many young people in the Stone Church group who have not been attending regularly who will be glad to get in at the beginning of this course. We also invite out-of-town visitors to Independence to come to our class when you can. You will find a real live group here, and it is our aim to make this class all that its name implies—by their works Ye Know Them.

Notice of Rock Island District Meeting

Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp will visit Rock Island District December 10 and 11, and will be at the Rock Island Church, corner Eighteenth Avenue and Tenth Street, Saturday night, December 10, and morning, afternoon, and evening on Sunday, December 11. All who can are urged to attend these meetings and meet Bishop DeLapp in his first visit to our district. Bring basket lunch for Sunday, or come otherwise prepared to supply your meals. The general authorities are suggesting a general fast on December 11, in order that the Saints might have a fast offering to give to the church on that day. We feel that as far as possible we should comply with this request.—E. R. Davis, district president.

Pastoral

The Saints of Southwestern Texas District were greatly strengthened by the visit of Apostle R. S. Budd and Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry at their semi-annual conference, held October 9, at First San Antonio Branch. Brother Curry with his frank discussion of our financial condition awakened many to the realization of our responsibility to God and the church. Brother Budd in his three sermons reached the hearts of the people, and they are looking forward to seeing these brothers again. The writer was chosen the servant of the district as its president for the ensuing year. His counselors are Elders Ed. L. Henson and T. J. Jett, jr. These with other staff officers, while fully realizing the strenuous times through which we as a people are passing, are consecrated to the task of supporting the church program, and are hopeful for the future of the work in this district. This district though officially called the Southwestern Texas District, really embraces all that territory from Oklahoma on the north, lying west of a north and south line running just west of the city of Austin. It is a vast domain, and the district presidency feel that in this great territory are scattered many Saints who would like to have the elders call on them. If those Saints who have not had the privilege of meeting with other Saints and with elders will drop a line to Elder John A. Robinson, 1640 West Summit Street, San Antonio, Texas, we will try to see if it is not possible to arrange a call and perhaps to hold some meetings in the interests of the church work. We shall be glad to hear from any Saints in the district.—John A. Robinson, district president.

Two-day Meetings

To the branches and scattered members of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District: You are invited to attend the following meetings at the Grand Rapids Church, 1225 South Division Street, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, December 9, 10, and 11. On Friday, December 9, at 8 p. m., will be held the young people's institute. Others are invited. At 2 p. m., next day, there will be a prayer service; at 4 p. m. priesthood meeting; at 8 p. m., a sermon. Sunday: 9 a. m., devotional; 10.25, church school; 11.25, sermon; 3 p. m. workers' institute; 7, sermon. President F. M. McDowell and Apostle D. T. Williams and various district and branch officers will be present. Further than this, Apostle Williams will speak at 7 p. m. at Lansing Sunday, and President McDowell at 8 p. m. Tuesday, December 13.—A. C. Barmore, district president.

Marriage

FISHER - BRUDER.—On November 14, Elder C. E. Bruder was married to Miss Evelyn M. Fisher, of Tyvan, Saskatchewan. The wedding took place at 2172 Osler Street, Regina, where the bridal pair will take up residence. Brother Bruder is the president of Regina Branch of the church. Elder O. W. Okerlind, missionary to Southern Saskatchewan District, performed the ceremony. The Saints' best wishes for a happy life go to the newlyweds.

Conference Minutes

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.—District conference convened at East Jordan, November 5 and 6, Apostle D. T. Williams and the district presidency in charge, with splendid attendance. The weather was ideal. Saturday: Conference was opened with fellowship meeting at 10 o'clock followed by business session at 11 o'clock. At this meeting encouraging reports were read from all branches in the district, also a petition from the Saints in Wells, Michigan, to organize a branch in that place. After careful consideration the petition was granted. Brother J. J. Ledsworth's missionary report which not only concerns us locally but also the entire church is as follows: Sermons preached 265; total services attended 365; classes attended, General Conference and reunion, 15; baptisms 50; confirmed 35; assisted 10; visits 540; calls 125; children blessed 15; administrations 70; new openings 4. During the three years Brother Ledsworth has spent in the Northern District, he has baptized nearly three hundred people. Adjourned for lunch. Session opened again at 2 o'clock. At this time election of officers was held. Allen Schreur was reelected as president of the district; Sister Aldred was again sustained as district secretary, which office she has held for many years. Allen Schreur was sustained as district treasurer. Hector MacKinnon was sustained as district superintendent of Religious Education. Sister Aldred was sustained as president of the women's department which office she also has held for many years. Sister Emily Carter was elected press chairman of conference. At 7.30 a program was given by East Jordan Branch, beautifully portraying the faith of the missionary's family. This was very inspirational and educational. Sunday: Priesthood meeting was held at 8 a. m., Apostle D. T. Williams in charge. At nine o'clock the Saints met in general prayer service at which time the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was served, in charge of D. T. Williams, A. E. Starkes, and Dirk Schreur. At 10.45 preaching was by District President Allen Schreur. His subject was "Problems of the Young," and he gave wonderful advice which was well received by both young and old. At two o'clock a thirty-minute song service was in charge of Byron H. Doty. At 2.30 preaching was by D. T. Williams. Subject, "Centennial of Joseph Smith." He voiced many glowing tributes to the memory of the Prophet and peace maker of the people in the church and out of the church. At this service Brother Edward R. Carter was ordained a priest under the hands of Apostle D. T. Williams and J. J. Ledsworth. At the close of the service, a vote of thanks was tendered East Jordan Saints for their splendid hospitality in caring for the visiting Saints. Brother Starkes saw that everyone was well cared for. At 7.30 J. J. Ledsworth preached on the subject, "Obedience Is Better Than Sacrifice." During the conference there were many solos rendered, both instrumental and vocal, by Sister Perkins, of East Jordan; Sister Luce, of Lansing; Helen MacKinnon, of Gaylord, accompanied by Miss Ila Schreur. Also a solo by Gould Pinney, of Chestonia, was greatly appreciated. Everyone enjoyed the services and was loath to leave when the conference ended. The time and place of the next conference were left to the district presidency.

Our Departed Ones

HAWN.—Osro J. Hawn was born January 30, 1869, at Lunenburg, Ontario. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Detroit, Michigan, June 26, 1895, by William Davis. Married Ida Mann on Christmas Day, 1895. During his life he was active in serving the church, being first ordained a priest in 1897, an elder in 1899, and a seventy April 16, 1907. He accepted conference appointment in 1901, and served continuously as a missionary until his last illness. He was known to and loved by many people throughout the country to whom he went as missionary and helper. He died October 23, 1932, at Independence, Missouri, after a number of months of poor health. Surviving to mourn are his wife, three sons: Ralph A., of the home, W. B., of Mogadore, Ohio, and A. J., of Detroit, Michigan; one daughter, Ina D. Lutz, of the home; one sister, Mrs. Eunice Swank, of Detroit, and many friends. For more than thirty years he was the faithful, loyal servant of the church.

The Pigeonhole

"Bleak House"

On one of the best streets of Independence, a home that had formerly held a happy family, and presented a beautiful appearance, was allowed to go untenanted and neglected. The lawn was uncut, the trees untrimmed, weeds grew up and filled the yard, vandals broke all the windows, and the whole place became an offensive eyesore. It was a wonder that some vagrant, warming himself on its bare floors, did not set it on fire. The neighbors began to call it "Bleak House."

Last summer a poor couple, well-advanced in years, came there to live. Their circumstances must have been very desperate, for they lived there many weeks before any of the windows were replaced. But they cleared out the weeds, cleaned up the place, and gradually made such inexpensive improvements as they could. Poor as it still looks, the place begins to take on the appearance of somebody's home. It is "Bleak House" no longer.

How many other vacant homes might mercifully shelter some who are in need, who can not pay rent, but who would care for and improve the property. And thus how much suffering could be averted.

Maintaining the Branch Educational Program

Houston Branch believes so strongly in the educational value of the church paper that they do not want anyone to go without it. They maintain a fund for the purposes of helping members who could not otherwise afford to take the paper. This plan is unique and interesting, and may be of use elsewhere.

Brother C. W. Tischer, president of Central Texas District, writes us the following interesting letter: "The Houston Branch is going to raise some money—about $20—and call it the Herald Fund.

"This money is to be advanced for members who are not or will not be able to order the Herald and pay the $2.00 at once in advance, but will be glad to pay back into the Herald Fund at the rate of five cents per copy.

"We want a Herald in every home, and every member a reader. I firmly believe that the debt of the church could have been long since removed had the Herald been read by more of our people.

"The Herald of today surpasses that of the past." Thank you, Brother Tischer, and good luck to you!

"Power"

The world stands out on either side
No wider than the heart is wide;
Above the world is stretched the sky—
No higher than the soul is high.
The heart can push the sea and land
Farther away on either hand;
The soul can split the sky in two,
And let the face of God shine through.
But East and West will pinch the heart
That can not keep them pushed apart;
And he whose soul is flat—the sky
Will cave in on him by and by.

—From Renascence, by Edna St. Vincent Millay.

Editorial

Our Church for the Children

In an issue of the Herald in September were some paragraphs relative to the increase in the number of contributors to the financial support of the church. The figures submitted showed that in 1929 the number of tithepayers was 14,717 and the total number of contributors for the same year was 17,704. In 1931 these had increased to 18,051 tithepayers and a total of 25,907 contributors. Thus in two years there was about a twenty-two per cent increase of tithepayers, and approximately forty-six per cent increase in the total number of contributors.

These figures are gratifying in at least two ways, for the increase in the number of contributors resulted in the budget of 1931 being practically raised, and the figures assure us that there was a substantial number of Saints whose interest in and love for the church have been increased or enriched by bestowal of at least some of their treasures. The heart generally goes where our treasures are gathered.

There is still another reason why this increase is encouraging. Under Bishop Carmichael's administration a chief objective of the financial department was to teach and administer the law so as to ultimately have the names of all members of the church on the Bishop's Books. The men of the present Presiding Bishopric have kept this before them as a desideratum, and have planned their work accordingly, and the figures and percentages quoted indicate a degree of success which should encourage the Bishopric and all of us to continue the efforts in this direction.

In our desire to have all members observing the financial law as part of the whole spiritual law of the church it is well to keep before us the outstanding fact that is making contribution to the financial support of the church the interest in and love for the church on the part of the contributor are enriched, and this is especially true when the contribution is accompanied by some degree of sacrifice. To do one's duty to the church in paying tithing and discharging first our obligations to the institution, brings satisfaction and enlarges our self-respect. To go farther and make offerings and sacrifices for the love of the Saints and our organization is sure to be followed by an exaltation of soul. We love, therefore we give, and in giving we love the more. This is spiritual uplift.

The law of tithing adapts itself to the financial capacity of each. From him who hath much, much is demanded. From him who hath little only little is expected. But all should contribute, and each should have opportunity to give accordingly. It is quite natural for comparisons to be made, and when handsome sums are given by those who can do so, attention is sometimes for the nonce diverted from the small contributor. And the persons of small means sometimes hesitate to and may even refrain from making their small donations. This they should not do. The Lord blesses the small giver in proportion to his ability, and he has said all must observe the law so all may share the resultant blessings. This is simple cause and effect.

Save the Church for them

Pay Your Tithing NOW

So in instituting methods of contacting all members of the church there should always be borne in mind the rights of the small giver. He should have the opportunity. No contribution is too small, for any amount becomes the measure of one's willingness and desire to do duty providing it is proportionate to capacity. In this connection it is pleasing to note that the methods being introduced and encouraged by the Bishops have this in view. The widow will be permitted to contribute her mite, and get the pleasure which comes from helping a loved cause. All must give, for all must respond to the call of duty.

This is particularly true of the children. No child who can understand what is said to him, or has learned even partially the value and use of money, is too young to make contribution to the support of the church. This duty should be taught to him from the first. And parents and church officers should see that children do have a chance to contribute. This is particularly true now, when special efforts are being put forth to meet a very trying situation. The church needs all, as all need the church, and our children will have their interest in the church aroused the earlier by being invited and given the opportunity to help now. So let the children help.

A factor which looms large in paying tithing, making offerings, responding to the call for sacrifice—in observing the church financial law—is the spirit of altruism. We give for others. We give without thinking of selfish application or reward. We give while thinking of the good we may indirectly bring to others. The church builds for the future. Each generation erects its temples, adorns its church buildings, founds its institutions knowing that the fuller benefits will flow to those who come after us. And we take delight in believing that in the days to come when our bodies lie pulseless the burdens of the young now with us may be made easier by our sacrifices and foresight. We can not, must not, forget that the little feet patterning along beside and in company with our longer strides must some day in response to duty take up the journeys we now make in doing our justly imposed tasks; the little hands so trustingly placed in ours now will soon have tasks of their own to do, while holding still other small hands in turn placed in theirs; and little shoulders now so free from burden will someday, all too soon perhaps, be bending neath the burdens we pass on to them. And to those children now so happily with us, whose presence we love and whose interests lie so close to ours, will come, when grown to the time of adult responsibilities, the need of the sustaining power which may be extended to them from the best heritage we can leave to them in the way of a church institution builded on sound spiritual and financial lines. So we must see to it that our foundations are secure.

To make the church safe for our children who may even need the steadying influence of the church and churchly institutions more than do we, because of harder and more trying times, is our present task.

And to the faithful performance of that task let us devote our best efforts and energies so that the heritage of our fathers may be passed on enhanced and enriched to our children.

Shall we save the church for the children? We will!

To the task!

F. M. S.

How Shall We Build on Our Foundations?

"Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God"

II.—HOLDING OUR NATURAL INCREASE

We have been considering ways by which to build up the church numerically and spiritually. First in our consideration among the major methods possible to be employed we have noted missionary endeavor. Next there comes to us the thought that if the church could retain its own natural increase from generation to generation, (i. e., the children born to Latter Day Saint parents) we would soon have a very powerful organization in point of numbers. Here should be our most promising field, for children reared under church traditions in a religious atmosphere and coming to the service of the church in maturity should have a great advantage over those who hear the message in mature years and have everything to learn and many things to unlearn.

THE GOOD HOME

In this work of holding our children to the church the home is first in importance. Writing in the Delineator Magazine, December, 1924, Mary Roberts Rinehart, said: "The good home puts its permanent mark upon the child. What the child will be is largely determined by the first eight years."

Mrs. Rhinehart is singularly in accord with the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 68:7, which in effect is that the Latter Day Saint home should put such a permanent mark upon its children that at eight years of age they shall be ready for baptism, having been taught the gospel, and moreover having seen and felt its influence constantly in the atmosphere of the home.

Here is a work ready at the hands of mothers, and preeminently theirs. True, the father shares this work, but it is the mother who, under normal conditions, is constantly with the child during these first eight formative years. Upon her devolves a great responsibility. She answers the innumerable questions that children ask; she gives them their first view points upon life; she helps to form their first religious convictions. She is not ordained to the priesthood by the laying on of hands, but by her very nature, physical and spiritual, she is called, chosen, ordained, and set apart to this particular sacred task.

Some one has said that "God could not be everywhere, so he made mothers." He entrusted his own Son to the care of an earthly mother. The sons and daughters of the church, the future builders of the church, are entrusted to maternal care and guidance. The call for devoted and pious mothers was never greater than now, when the fate of the world is trembling in the balance, and when the church is at a time of crisis unprecedented. Both the world and the church are calling for new and consecrated leadership to arise from the ranks of youth.

TEN YEARS FROM NOW

In the church this call will become more insistent. In our general missionary force, for example, the numbers have been reduced at the dictates of dire necessity. Younger men, able to go out and wrest a living from the world under present adverse conditions have been released, excepting in instances where special conditions called for their retention. Older men have been retained, and a decade at best will see many of these men by advancing age dropping one by one from active service. Where then will be our missionary force? There must be ready young men and women willing and prepared to step into the breach as God shall call—some to be missionaries, some to be missionaries' wives. There must be those to move into the local work as pastors, as branch, district, and stake workers. There must be those to carry on the church-school work. There must be a devoted generation rising up to sustain the missionary force and the general church work with tithes and offerings. There must be ready a band of young people who have the vision of Zion to move in and carry on the task of the redemption and upbuilding of Zion.

At present the bulk of this great potential force of Church builders that will emerge upon the scene of action a few years from now is found in the childhood and youth of the church, scattered throughout the homes of the church. What sort of mark is your home putting upon these children?

WHAT ONE WOMAN DID

We have recently celebrated the hundredth anniversary of the birth of the late President Joseph

Smith, that man who in wisdom and grace more nearly than any other man that we have ever known approximated the spirit and character of Christ. We can scarcely think of him and his life without recalling the mother who nurtured him and came with him to Amboy, April 6, 1860, to deliver him to the church, her stewardship complete and her accounting to the church at hand.

Left a widow by the assassination of her husband, she found herself in dire straits. Threatened on every hand with violence, left behind by the scattering forces of the church, she was entreated by her own people, well-to-do and influential, to forget the church and return to New York State and the ancestral home. With equal insistence the followers of Brigham Young urged her to go west and rear her children under that regime. The traditions of the family say that one elder, a man of fiery temper and the hair that sometimes goes with such a temper, threatened her, "You will yet kneel at my feet and beg to be my plural wife." Her spirit flared up and she retorted, "If I do, it will be the first red-headed Brighamite I ever kneeled to."

A woman of courage, spirit, and faith she kneeled to but one Master. She remained in her home in Nauvoo, reared her children in the faith of their fathers, and in time gave to the church, not one, but three sons, Joseph, Alexander, and David: "Like the three remaining pillars of the temple on the hill."

There are in training somewhere in the homes of the church those men and women who will be the future pillars of the church. Given the right kind of home influence the years shall produce not three pillars but thousands of pillars to the church. Let us with more zeal endeavor to conserve the natural increase of the church.

Prayer

By W. E. G.

Pray not for wondrous knowledge
For splendor or for place;
Pray not to be distinguished
Or winner in life's race;
Crave not the wealth that others
So foolishly oft seek;
"Let not your heart be troubled"
When men shall call you weak.

Just pray to know your duty,
And then your duty do;
Just ask that those who need you
May place their trust in you;
Be it your aim to gladden
Some heart by grief depressed;
Forget yourself in others
And give to God your best.

Financial News

A comparative statement of receipts by districts for the month of October 1932-31 is submitted below. It is to be noted that the income for October this year is almost $6,000.00 below that of a year ago and almost $9,000.00 below our budget requirements for the month. It is to be noted, however, that every effort is being made to keep our expenses within our income, or, in other words, below the amount authorized in the budget appropriation.

The total amount required for the months of October, November and December is $120,000.00. This leaves approximately $105,000.00 to be raised during November and December. November reports are just beginning to come in and it will be impossible to learn the total amount of income for November until all reports are received. It is quite evident, however, that the greater part of the money needed will have to be raised during the month of December. We again wish to emphasize the need for every member to support the church with tithes and offerings.

Reports are being received which indicate that the membership as a whole is putting forth every effort to accomplish the task. Special groups of women workers are busily engaged throughout the church in response to the call previously made. Favorable reports have been received from women's organizations of Independence, Missouri, Lamoni, Iowa, Los Angeles, California, Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Xenia, Illinois; Illinois covering results accomplished as well as plans under way. Many other reports have come through stake and district officers indicating the women are organizing for the long time program of assisting in paying off the church debt.

Splendid cooperation is being given by bond and note holders in reducing the interest rate two per cent. The response thus far is almost unanimous in agreeing to the reduction requested. It is still too early to give a report on the amount saved in this way as many of the forms are yet to be sent to the bondholders. Considerable routine work is required in getting the necessary forms completed, which takes time because of the shortage of clerical help. However the reductions actually made to date show a savings of over $1,200.00.

Continuous efforts are being made to reduce our indebtedness through the liquidation of real estate, and reductions already made have amounted to several thousands of dollars. More complete figures covering this phase of our work will be submitted at a later date.

We believe the Saints have reason to feel encouraged and much for which to be thankful. We trust that all may move forward in faith.

CURRENT EVENTS

A Record of Railroad Service

The Milwaukee Railroad Celebrates Its Eighty-fifth Birthday

Pioneer days, when the arrival of a new railroad was an occasion for celebration by any community, are recalled by the announcement that eighty-five years ago last week the Milwaukee Road came into existence.

The original charter was granted by the Territory of Wisconsin on November 23, 1847, under the name of the Milwaukee & Waukesha Railway. The present-day system embraces 11,260 miles in 12 states and in normal times gives employment to about 50,000 persons.

The value of the new railroads of those days was inestimable. Increased land values, new markets, increased immigration and greater security for early day settlers followed in the trail of the Iron Horse.

The Editor of a Milwaukee (Wisconsin) newspaper, writing in 1855 about the construction of the Milwaukee Road's line between Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien, said: "The completion of this line . . . will be a memorable event for our city and state. It has already trebled and quadrupled the value of the farming lands along its eastern and finished division and increased by the same amount the taxable property of the state. . . . Let our merchants and business men, then, thank God and take courage for the whole Northwest invites and will reward their ventures."

Few of the present generation recall the hazards and discomforts attendant upon life prior to the advent of the western railroads, but all have enjoyed the benefits accorded society by the contributions the railroads have made, in addition to transportation service, through tax payments, payrolls and purchases of products and supplies in the territory served.

In the past fifteen years the Milwaukee Road alone has spent approximately 127 million dollars for taxes; 1,200 million dollars for payrolls; and 650 million dollars for purchases of materials, supplies and equipment. During that period it has not paid a dollar to its thousands of stockholders.

What the next 15 years hold in store for the railroads is a matter of conjecture, but, considering the substantial support received from the railroads, it would appear to be clearly to the public's interest to patronize and support the railroads.

Pioneering days have passed for the railroads, but, all things considered, no agency that gives the public more for its money has yet appeared in the transportation field.

A MacBeth Among the Nations

While we were celebrating Thanksgiving Day, Japanese machine gunners herded 2,700 people in Manchuria together, all of them civilians, women and children included, and mowed them down like a lot of animals.

Japan's course in Manchuria reminds us of the story of MacBeth, as related in Shakespeare's play of that name. MacBeth's plan was to murder his enemies and rivals as fast as they appeared. Very shortly he had no friends left, and the whole nation deserted his cause. His death was the inevitable end of such a career.

Japan's method can never lead to success. Her enemies grow in numbers and in bitterness of opposition. More than that the military operations are very costly, and are a great drain on the treasury of the nation. She is headed for exhaustion unless she can change the course of events.

We hope and believe that no nation can succeed with the horrible record that Japan is making. We are glad that bankruptcy, exhaustion, and isolation are the punishment for such work.

An aroused and united China may someday take sanguinary revenge for what Japan is now doing.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle M. A. McConley in Western States

Leaving Independence November 18, after a brief stay at the Sanitarium, Apostle M. A. McConley again traveled westward, stopping in a number of places to visit with and hold services for Saints. Denver was his first stop, then Sterling, Colorado. He spent Thanksgiving at Auburn, Wyoming, then on to Ogden and Salt Lake City, Utah, and Las Vegas, Nevada. His plans were to meet Apostle E. J. Gleazer at Los Angeles.

Brother McConley is feeling more physically fit for missionary endeavor than for many years, and in a letter to the First Presidency expresses his hope soon to "get into active service."

Shortly after the death of Sister McConley, October 19, at their Los Angeles home, Brother McConley came to Independence.

Primaries Provide Thanksgiving Cheer

The primary department of the church school at Mount Washington, Missouri, a small congregation of Kansas City Stake, prepared and distributed nine Thanksgiving baskets this year. These gift baskets, which went to needy families, contained vegetables, canned goods, breakfast foods, jellies, jams, meat, sugar, and other articles.

Elder G. J. Waller Celebrates Seventy-third Birthday

The priesthood of the three Honolulu branches, Hawaii, sponsored an appropriate celebration November 9, for the seventy-third birthday of Elder Gilbert J. Waller, sometimes called the father of the Reorganized Church in Hawaii. He has devoted many, many hours to the work of his ministry in Honolulu and everywhere he has traveled. His faith in the cause of Zion is strong.

Brother Waller is director and manager of the Hawaii Meat Company. He was born at Stackhouse, Yorkshire, England, November 9, 1859. During his life he has been prominently identified with the work of the church, with the Anti-Saloon League, and with politics. He was a Democratic nominee for the Senate in 1904 and 1906, national Democratic committeeman for Hawaii for four years, and has served in other offices.

Women of Independence Raise $1,324

In five weeks of their personal sacrifice campaign the women of Independence raised a sum of $1,324, to go to general church funds. This effort is being made in response to the call of general officers to the women of the church. Independence women are thoroughly organized and are carrying out the weekly envelope plan in their forty-six groups. They meet every Monday to check results.

Apostle J. F. Garver Busy Attending Conferences

Conferences at Chicago, Illinois, Burlington, Iowa, Madison, Wisconsin, and Kansas City, Missouri, demanded the attention and attendance of Apostle J. F. Garver in rapid succession after his release from the Independence Sanitarium the middle of October. In all these places he found a good spirit among the people.

After a short time spent in the Omaha-Council Bluffs area, he enjoyed Thanksgiving at home in Lamoni. Now he is again proving helpful at other conferences. His present plans cover conferences at Joplin and Springfield, Missouri, and Marion and Beardstown, Illinois, concluding December 18.

English Patriarch Holds Services at Exeter

Exeter Branch, England, lately enjoyed missionary meetings by Patriarch William H. Greenwood. His work in the branch began with his having charge of the Thanksgiving services October 9. District President John A. Judd was the speaker on that day. Brother Greenwood closed his series November 3.

Don Carlos Milliken Is Dead

Don Carlos Milliken, eighty-nine years of age and the eldest son of Arthur and Lucy Smith Milliken, died November 26, at his home north of Hamilton, Illinois. His mother was the youngest sister of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The deceased was born October 13, 1843, at Saco, Maine, while his parents were on a mission. He has lived a long and respected life in the vicinity of Nauvoo. Was baptized in 1873, by his cousin, the late Joseph Smith.

Coeur D'Alene Introduces Feature for Parents

Eighty-five per cent of the church school children of Coeur D'Alene, Idaho, Branch are nonmembers. For their nonmember parents, officers of the church school have introduced a once-a-month get-together which is proving most effective in prospering the cause of the church. A program, games, refreshments, and time to get acquainted are included in these meetings.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS

Writes His

Memories of the Late President Joseph Smith

The little town of Saint David, Illinois, could boast of only two rows of houses and a little chapel that the Saints had erected out in the woods. The chapel served as a meeting place for the Saints and as a schoolhouse for the children.

It was in this little chapel that I first gazed upon the face of our late beloved Joseph Smith, who through his faithfulness and the providence of God, had the honor to preside over the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints nearly fifty-five years.

During the summer of 1866 the president of the branch, Jeremiah Jeremiah, announced that the prophet and president of the church would soon pay them a visit. This announcement created a great sensation. The old as well as the young were very much excited and his coming visit was the subject of conversation on the streets and in the homes of the Saints.

I was ten years of age and had peculiar ideas as to the appearance of a prophet of God. To my boyish mind he would be very different from other men and I clothed him with personal attributes and characteristics almost divine, so I considered myself very fortunate to have the privilege of looking upon the face of a prophet of God and hearing him speak.

The eventful day arrived. The church in which the Saints met seated only about one hundred persons, so to be sure of getting a seat, I was one of the first at the meetinghouse and sat up in front in order to get a good view.

At last the prophet, so anxiously looked forward to, in company with the president of the branch and Edwin Stafford, appeared on the scene. They occupied seats on the old-fashioned half-moon platform.

Childhood impressions are vivid and lasting and I now see him distinctly in memory, as I looked upon him then. However, I was greatly disappointed in his appearance, as I had in mind all the time, a being of enormous physical proportions, while before me sat a seemingly very human man wearing ordinary clothing with no adornment whatever and having quite an unassuming manner.

He was slight in build with dark hair and whiskers. I was favorably impressed with his dark, piercing eyes which seemed to penetrate one's very soul but at the same time his intense gaze was modified by a kindly sympathetic expression, making his thin face not unattractive.

He also had a personal magnetism about him that drew even little children and there was never a time when our worthy brother was not sociable and very considerate of those around him. He had a power in him that drew people and such winning ways that the people loved to be in his company. He impressed me as being an only ordinary speaker, he then having only about six years' experience in the pulpit. In later years it was my grand privilege to listen to his wise counsel, able arguments and marked ability as an interesting pulpiteer.

As I sat there, a ten-year-old boy, very ignorant of the ways of the world or the things of God either, little did I realize that I would be so closely associated with the speaker in carrying the angel message and in helping to build up the kingdom of God. I am quite sure he did not have the slightest idea that the ignorant little Welsh boy who sat before him, would be so closely associated with him in the ministry and in the high councils of the church for nearly forty years. A short time after his departure I demanded baptism and I feel confident that it was the good impression I had of the prophet that prompted me to join the church.

It was thirteen years ere I had the opportunity to meet our dear brother in Lamoni, Iowa, in the summer of 1879. Lamoni, at that time was just sprouting, there being only a few houses clustered around near the station. There was a branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad that run from Chariton to Pleasanton. Brother David Dancer, Elijah Banta, Samuel Gurley (who kept a store), and the Walkers and a few others resided there.

The Prophet Joseph and W. W. Blair, his counselor, were here looking after church affairs. Brother Joseph and the writer were domiciled at the home of Elijah Banta, a short way out of the town. We both occupied the same bed. To my young mind it was a great privilege to be permitted to sleep in the same bed with a prophet of God.

Thirteen years had brought about a wonderful change in both of our appearances and experiences in the Lord's work. I was delighted with the kindly treatment I received from him and the wise and wholesome counsel and instruction which he imparted unto me under the influence of God's Holy Spirit, during the short time we were associated together. I was given the assurance by the Spirit at that time that he would be a true and faithful spiritual father to me and that he was a true man of God and as long as I would give heed and be obedient to the counsel that he would give me from time to time, I would succeed in the ministry and I can truthfully testify that he proved true to what the Spirit evidenced to me regarding him, for just a few days previous to his demise, on my return from Australia, I received a letter from him which breathed the same kindly interest in me that he had manifested toward me for nearly forty years in our association together in the ministry.

In October of the same year we met again at Gallands Grove, Iowa, at the semiannual general conference. After I left him I visited Lucas, Iowa, on the way to the General Conference, preached and baptized twenty. The conference was in session when I arrived and it was the first General Conference that I had had the privilege of attending and I was very enthusiastic over it. It was here that I first met the rest of the leading authorities of the church in those days, and to my surprise and consternation, the Prophet Joseph appointed me to preach the next morning at eleven o'clock. I felt very much disheartened and discouraged over it, that I a boy, had to face such an austere audience consisting of the leading men of the church and I tried to be relieved of that tremendous responsibility but the prophet would not listen to it.

On my way to the pulpit he came to me and told me not to be afraid and that the Lord would be with me by his power and bless my effort by his Holy Spirit. However I did not know at the time whether to believe him or not, even though he were a prophet, and went there trembling like a lamb to the slaughter and made the effort. I shall never forget that day as long as I live. All the twelve sat right in front of me and other high officials and the prophet himself sat about fifteen feet in front of me with his back to a tree looking me straight in the face. I could see his lips moving. He was praying for me and that gave me encouragement to proceed after I got started and to my happy surprise I enjoyed wonderful liberty of the Spirit. As soon as the benediction was pronounced the prophet came to me and took me by the hand and said, "Didn't I tell you that the Lord would bless you with His Spirit and that you would have good liberty in preaching?" This was a source of great encouragement to me and increased my confidence in the prophet more than tongue can tell or pen could write.

In April, 1880, the General Conference convened at Plano, Illinois, and I was assigned to Michigan and Canada. The day before conference closed I met Joseph on the street. He took me off to one side and told me I would have an experience which would be very trying and discouraging to me and that I should be of good courage and put my trust in the Lord and depend upon Him for guidance and I would come out all right.

About two months after, I was laboring in Galien, Michigan, and the prophet stopped off there on his way to attend a district conference at Clearlake, Indiana. I met him at the station and as I shook hands with him he said, "You had the experience that I told you you would encounter, but you came out all right." He then related to me some of his own experiences wherein the Lord had warned and forewarned him of conditions that would be trying to him and the church. From there we went together to the conference.

At the following General Conference, a year later, which was held in Plano, Illinois, in 1881, I had some very pleasant experiences with which he had much to do with my future happiness. It was here that I first met my wife, Hattie R. Robbins, with whom I lived for forty-three years. We were strangers to each other. I was brought up in the West and she in the East. She, wishing to learn more about me, went to Brother Joseph. One day when I went to the Herald Office I was peculiarly impressed with the way he winked and blinked at me with a mischievous smile—I being ignorant of the correspondence that had taken place between him and my future wife relative to me, and he presumed she had told me his reply to her inquiries concerning me. It was six months after our marriage before she handed me the letter he had written her about me, and I was very much pleased with the recommendation he had given me, he having had evidences in regard to our future work, that we both would be instrumental in performing a work in the interest of the church, and she surely proved to be a valiant worker for the Lord and a spiritual help and inspiration to me.

In the fall of 1881 on my way to attend the semiannual conference at Council Bluffs, Iowa, my wife and I stopped off near Emerson, Iowa, where I preached a number of sermons to good-sized audiences with wonderful liberty of the Spirit but no one seemed to be ready for baptism. At this conference I was assigned again to Canada. At the close of the conference the Prophet Joseph came to me and stated that he had spoken to the minister in charge in Canada, namely, Brother John H. Lake, for permission for me to drop off at Emerson and that I should hold a series of meetings there and

The Organization of the Primary Department

By Jewell Thorson

¶The following is an imaginary experience written in response to a requirement in one of our correspondence courses. It is so cleverly done and so true to life that it offers a splendid suggestion to Primary teachers. In apologizing for the fiction the student writes, "I can see no reason why it could not happen, do you?" We don't.—C. B. W.

The very first essential in the organization of any department of the church school is a number of pupils to attend the sessions thus providing material with which to work. My particular group consisted of thirty children of primary age, the number being about equally divided between boys and girls. These thirty children were quite regular in their attendance and often brought friends so that the attendance seldom fell under thirty and often as high as thirty-five.

Having the pupils provided, the next thing which had to be determined was the needs of the group and of each individually. Since these children were all strange to me I had to find some means of determining their needs, and the best I knew was to find the kind of homes they came from. So with the company of Miss Brown, who knew all the parents, I made a personal call at each home during the week. I told them I was to have charge of the primary department of the church school and was interested in meeting them and in discussing our problems in order that we might be able to work together in developing within their children the qualities which go to make up the kind of men and women of which the church as well as the world is always in need. The parents welcomed such a proposition gladly and were glad to share their problems.

So we went to other homes and I gained a lot of helpful information. Mrs. Jones told us that her Bobby was capable of learning quickly and thoroughly but played constantly and did not care whether he progressed in school or not and was the same way about church school work. Yes, he loved stories and would do any errand gladly for a cookie or a penny but when it came to getting his school work done he just could not be bothered. I made a mental note: that child needed to discover where and how he was going to get his pay for his effort in study . . . he lacked an incentive.

I found Mary delighted in telling great, adventurous tales that never could have happened and insisted that they were true. Johnnie had a weakness of using his collective instinct so extensively that he often collected things which did not belong to him. Perry and Maxine were both "only children" and a bit self-centered. Barbara and Jack came from a home where they scarcely had enough food to eat to say nothing of training. Elizabeth had two small sisters whom she mothered at home and insisted on mothering every other child whether they appreciated her maternal care or not. The rest of the children were about average children coming from good, clean, happy homes. Perhaps problems would come up with them later. At any rate, I had already unearthed enough to make the work quite interesting and worth while for some time so I could now set about to get my equipment in shape to receive my pupils.

I first took inventory of what I had and checked this with what I needed. I found my classroom to be one large room with three small benches at either end. There was a flag hanging on the wall and a few pictures cut from magazines and held to the wall by thumb tacks. The floor was covered by a congoeum rug done in blue, the benches were red, and the walls green. About the room were a few dilapidated picture books which showed rough handling. Not so much on hand but there was plenty of room there, and I at once saw possibilities. The next person I saw was the director of the school. When I laid out before him my meager list of assets he was eager to help and seeing my enthusiasm he at once entered into my plans with me. They had been thinking for a long time they should have more adequate furniture so he was sure we could have at least twenty-five dollars with which to work out our needs.

We decided we needed, first of all, chairs to sit on instead of those benches. The chairs would provide more comfortable seats, they could be grouped to better advantage, and there was not the irritation of crowding and sitting too close together as is often the case when benches are used. On investigation we found a lot of forty slightly used chairs which we could obtain for twenty dollars. They were in need of refinishing but were quite strong so when the junior department supervisor offered the surplus energy of her boys to paint them we made the purchase. The walls being a pale green and the rug blue, we decided to have the chairs a soft gray.

◆◆◆ The Personnel of the High Council ◆◆◆

By S. A. Burgess

In discussing the personnel of the High Council, we are confronted with several difficulties.

1. The First Presidency, Twelve, Seventies, and Presiding Bishopric act wherever they are. A High Council is local. This is the general rule, even though in the Reorganization to 1916 the General High Council was not so strictly localized as to members. In the early church, 1830-1844, removing from Kirtland to Far West; Far West to De Witt, or Adam-ondi ahman, or since 1916 from Independence, Missouri, and vicinity, was followed by release.

2. Different from these other officers, one High Councilor does not act alone, but only when a part of a body.

3. Further, when meeting as a High Council, the number must be made up to twelve each time; hence the fact that a name appears on a list of High Council does not mean permanent membership or ordination to that office, as in many cases it is only temporary. Some High Priests have sat on many cases or counseled on many matters of general importance, through several years, yet have never been members, but only called to act each time in place of an absentee.

4. On our records ordination as High Councilor has rarely been recorded.

It seems clear that before 1834 an appellate court consisting of Twelve High Priests associated with the First Presidency was recognized. Also all high councils are declared in the law to be equal (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 14, 15). Yet the history sets forth in some details the High Council at Kirtland, which was presided over by the First Presidency sometimes with others also presiding; the High Council of Zion, which may be considered as continued in the High Council at Far West; and the High Council at Nauvoo. Also in the Reorganization there has been a distinction between the Stake High Councils and the General High Council, as the First Presidency has presided over the General High Council.

All of these are Standing High Councils, as were the many stake high councils in the early church in distinction from the temporary councils held prior to 1834.

Joseph Smith attended the organization of the High Council of Zion, just as his son attended that of Lamoni and Independence stakes, but after that it was presided over by David Whitmer and his counselors, then by Thomas B. Marsh and David Patten and finally by Brigham Young. The First Presidency does not appear to have presided over this high council either in Clay County or Caldwell County, even though Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon once sat as councilors, and once met with them and the Bishops Court to consider inheritances.

At Nauvoo, the First Presidency presided part of the time, and at other times William Marks and his counselors, Charles C. Rich and Austin Cowles.

The High Council in Kirtland was first organized as a Standing High Council. But after the removal of the First Presidency in March, 1838, its importance to history disappeared. Still we learn from his biography that Salmon Gee was a member 1841 to 1844. But we list only to March, 1838, as its distinctive importance had ceased, and its personnel was very doubtful after that date.

Parallel to this was the High Council in Zion. For nine months it was the principal High Council of the church, March to December, 1838. But ended when the Saints were driven from Missouri. From 1839 to 1844 that of Nauvoo was the principal council.

Members of one High Council sat on others. In the lists that follow where a name is repeated in a later Council we have used the old number, as K 4 for Kirtland list No. 4; Z 18 for the list of Zion and Far West No. 18.

KIRTLAND HIGH COUNCIL

1. Oliver Cowdery, February 17, 1834-January, 1836.
2. Joseph Coe, February 17, 1834-September 3, 1837.
3. Samuel H. Smith, February 17, 1834-March, 1838.
4. Luke Johnson, February 17, 1834-February 14, 1835.
5. John S. Carter, February 17, 1834-August 27, 1834.
6. Sylvester Smith, February 17, 1834-September 14, 1834.
7. John Johnson, February 17, 1834-April 3, 1837.
8. Orson Hyde, February 17, 1834-February 14, 1835.
9. Jared Carter, February 17, 1834-October 1, 1837.
10. Joseph Smith, sr., February 17, 1834-January 13, 1836.
11. John Smith, February 17, 1834-September 3, 1837.
12. Martin Harris, February 17, 1834-September 3, 1837.
13. Orson Johnson, August 27, 1834-September 3, 1837.
14. Hyrum Smith, September 24, 1834-January 13, 1836.
15. Joseph Kingsbury, January 13, 1836-September 3, 1837.
16. John P. Green, January 13, 1836-September 3, 1837.
17. Noah Packard, January 13, 1836—
18. Thomas Grover, January 13, 1836-September 3, 1837.
19. Samuel James, January 13, 1836—
20. Henry G. Sherwood, September 3, 1837-1838 or 1839.
21. William Marks, September 3, 1837-1838 or 1839.

22. Mayhew Hillman, September 3, 1837-1838 or 1839.

23. Harlow Redfield, September 3, 1837-1838 or 1839.

24. Asahel Smith, September 3, 1837-1838.

25. Phineas Richards, September 3, 1837—

26. David Dort, September 3, 1837-1838 or 1839.

27. Oliver Granger, September 3, 1837-August 25, 1841.

28. Lyman Sherman, October 1, 1837—

Others served on this High Council, but were probably temporary; namely Roger Orton, John Whitmer, Newel Knight, Levi Jackman, Gideon Carter, and William Woodstock. John Whitmer was a member of the Presidency in Zion. Newel Knight and Levi Jackman were members of the High Council of Zion.

Of the above two were released upon being ordained to Quorum of Twelve, Luke Johnson and Orson Hyde.

Four on account of ordination to other positions: Oliver Cowdery, Joseph Smith, sr., John Smith, Hyrum Smith.

Nine released on account of removal from Kirtland: Samuel H. Smith, Jared Carter, John P. Green, Thomas Grover (of these we have definite date of release), William Marks (President of Stake, Nauvoo, October, 1839), Henry G. Sherwood and David Dort, (High Council of Nauvoo, October, 1839), Asahel Smith (High Council of Iowa, 1839-1840), Mayhew Hillman, (High Council of Adam-ondi-ahman, 1839).

Five not sustained: Joseph Coe, Sylvester Smith, John Johnson, Martin Harris, Joseph Kingsbury.

One expelled from the Church: Orson Johnson.

Two died in office: John S. Carter and Oliver Granger. (At least the latter was in Kirtland for the church at that time.)

Of the remaining five we do not now have data, as some books are missing from the office: They appear to have been serving when First Presidency left Kirtland. But Noah Packard was objected to as a High Priest at Nauvoo, April 7, 1841, so had probably also removed. The four, Martin Redfield, Samuel James, Phineas Richards, and Lyman Sherman are not further mentioned.

ZION

A high council was organized in Clay County, Missouri, just across the Missouri River from Jackson County on July 3, 1834. This High Council continued at Far West, Caldwell County, Missouri, till the expulsion in December, 1838. Personnel:

1. Simeon Carter, July, 1834-1838.
2. Parley P. Pratt, 1834-1835.
3. William E. McLellan, 1834-1835.

4. Calvin Beebe, 1834-1838.
5. Levi Jackman, 1834-1838.
6. Solomon Hancock, 1834-1838.
7. Christian Whitmer, 1834-November 27, 1836.
8. Newel Knight, 1834-1838.
9. Orson Pratt, 1834-1835.
10. Lyman Wight, 1834-1837.
11. Thomas B. Marsh, 1834-1835.
12. John Murdock, 1834-October, 1838.
13. Elisha H. Groves, January, 1836-1838.
14. Jesse Hitchcock, 1836-August 1, 1837.
15. George M. Hinkle, 1836-October, 1838.
16. Elias Higbee, 1836-1838.
17. Peter Whitmer, jr., 1836-1837.
- K. 18. Thomas Grover, August, 1837-1838.
19. George Morey, August 1, 1837-1838.
20. Samuel Bent, October 1838-1838.
21. (K. 16) John P. Green
22. Isaac Higbee, October, 1838-1838.
23. George W. Harris, December, 1838-1838.

Some of the above are stated as members, but not as being ordained. At a High Council held December 13, 1838, of the above list Numbers 1, 5, 6, 12, 18, 20 were present.

Besides Thomas Grover who also appears as eighteen on Kirtland list, there were from Kirtland High Council also number nine, Jared Carter, and number twenty-six, David Dort. New names are George W. Harris, John Badger, John E. Page, and John Taylor. John Murdock had been released to remove to De Witt, but had returned of necessity, and is said to take the place of John P. Green, and John Badger the place of George Morey.

A few days later, December 19, 1838, Simeon Carter and Levi Jackman not present. John E. Page and John Taylor present, but they were then ordained to the Twelve, so did not sit. Instead Harlow Redfield of Kirtland High Council, Theodore Turley, Ebenezer Robinson, and Reynolds Cahoon acted. This appears to be the end of the High Council in Zion.

Of the above twenty-two names: Four were ordained to the Twelve, Parley P. Pratt, William E. McLellan, Orson Pratt, and Thomas B. Marsh.

One probably for other office, Lyman Wight was Counselor to John Smith as President of Adam-ondi-ahman, later one of the Twelve.

Two moved to DeWitt and so released. John Murdock and George M. Hinkle.

Two died in office: Christian Whitmer and Peter Whitmer, jr.

One released, but no reason given, Jesse Hitchcock.

George W. Harris was probably only temporary. The remaining twelve were acting when last met and driven from Missouri: Simeon Carter, Calvin Beebe, Levi Jackman, Solomon Hancock, Newel Knight, Elisha Groves, Elias Higbee, Thomas Grover, George Morey, Samuel Bent, John P. Green, Isaac Higbee.

NAUVOO

At a conference, October 5, 1839, in Nauvoo, the High Council was again organized.

1. (Z. 22) George W. Harris, 1839-1844.
2. (Z. 18) Samuel Bent, 1839-1844.
3. (K. 20) Henry G. Sherwood, 1839-1844.
4. David Fullmer, 1839-1844.
5. Alpheus Cutler, 1839-1844.
6. William Huntington, 1839-1844.
7. (Z. 8) Newel Knight, 1839-1844.
8. (K. 18) Thomas Grover, 1839-1844.
9. Charles C. Rich, 1839-April, 1841.
10. (K. 26) David Dort, 1839-1841.
11. Seymour Brunson, 1839-1842.
12. Lewis D. Wilson, 1839-1844.
13. Leonard Soby, 1841-1844.
14. James Allred, 1841-1844.

Seymour Brunson acted as late as October, 1841, but beginning January, 1842, his name is missing. Aaron Johnson acted 1842 and in fact as late as January, 1846. Ezra T. Benson is named October, 1844, to January, 1846, as a permanent member, but that was after the death of Joseph Smith, jr.

Charles C. Rich was ordained counselor to William Marks; David Dort died. Hence the two appointments of April, 1841. The twelve names listed and numbered are regarded as retiring at death of Joseph Smith, jr. We note three were former members of the High Council in Kirtland, and three of Zion.

REORGANIZATION

In 1860 (April 6) members of a High Council were duly chosen and ordained. In 1866 two vacancies were filled. The High Council was sustained at each conference till 1875, but no names given. After 1880 there remained only five or less members. Cases were tried by elders' courts as committees of branch or district. In 1876 the First Presidency considered several cases on appeal and reported each to the General Conference for approval. But by 1888 the need of a High Council was felt, and in 1890 it was reorganized.

1. (Z. 4) Calvin Beebe, 1860-1861.
2. Andrew G. Jackson, 1860-1863.
3. Dwight Webster, 1860-1868.
4. John C. Gaylord, 1860-1874.
5. Jacob Doan, 1860-1875.
6. (Z. 19) George Morey, 1860-1875.
7. William Aldrich, 1860-1876.
8. Lyman Hewitt, 1860-1880.
9. Zenos Whitcomb, 1860-1885.
10. Edwin Cadwell, 1860-1886.
11. Oliver P. Durham, 1860-1887.
12. Winthrop H. Blair, 1860-1894.
13. Hiel Bronson, 1866-1887.
14. Jesse Price, 1866-1880.
15. J. C. Crabb, 1890-1916.
16. Charles Derry, 1890-1902.
17. David Dancer, 1890-1898.
18. Frederick G. Pitt, 1890-1910.
19. James H. Peters, 1890-1903.
20. Asa S. Cochran, 1890-1916.
21. William Anderson, 1890-1911.
22. David Chambers, 1890-1897.
23. Robert M. Elvin, 1890-1916.
24. John A. Robinson, 1890-1902.

25. C. A. Beebe, 1890-1903.
26. John A. Chisnall, 1894-1913.
27. Charles E. Butterworth, 1897-1903.
28. J. M. Baker, 1900-1916.
29. Willis A. McDowell, 1902-1913.
30. Temme T. Hinderks, 1903-1922.
31. Joseph A. Tanner, 1903-1929.
32. John A. Grant, 1905-1922.
33. George A. Smith, 1905-1916.
34. Vinton M. Goodrich, 1911-1916.
35. Samuel Twombly, 1911-1926.
36. Charles Fry, 1913-1922.
37. Richard J. Lambert, 1913-1932.
38. W. O. Hands, 1916-1922.
39. Walter W. Smith, 1916-1925.
40. David J. Krahl, 1916-1922.
41. George H. Hulmes, 1916-1932.
42. William R. Pickering, 1916-1922.
43. John A. Becker, 1922-1926.
44. Nathaniel Carmichael, 1922-1932.
45. John F. Garver, 1922-1925.
46. Roy V. Hopkins, 1922-1932.
47. Mark H. Siegfried, 1922-1925.
- *48. Israel A. Smith, 1922—
49. John M. Cockerton, 1922-1923.
50. Beauford J. Scott, 1925-1932.
- *51. Robert T. Cooper, 1925—
- *52. C. Ed. Miller, 1925—
- *53. Denzil O. Cato, 1925—
54. Merrill A. Etzenhouser, 1926-1932.
- *55. J. Stanley Kelley, 1932—
- *56. Leonard Lea, 1932—
- *57. Carroll L. Olson, 1932—
- *58. Howard Andersen, 1932—
- *59. Harry G. Barto, 1932—
- *60. Amos Allen, 1932—
- *61. Arthur B. Phillips, 1932—
- *62. A. K. Dillee, 1932—

Of the first fourteen listed all died in office, except Winthrop H. Blair, who resigned in 1894, because of deafness. (We note that Calvin Beebe and George Morey were members of the early High Council in Zion, the former a charter member.) In addition the following also died in office: David Dancer, William Anderson, David Chambers, John A. Robinson, Calvin A. Beebe, James H. Peters, John M. Cockerton. A total of twenty, who died in office.

Three resigned because of ordination to other office: John F. Garver, Twelve; Mark H. Siegfried and John A. Becker, Presiding Bishopric.

Five were ordained evangelists: Frederick G. Pitt, C. E. Butterworth, Charles Derry, W. A. McDowell, and Samuel Twombly.

One resigned because of removal: Walter W. Smith. This is two who resigned, as W. H. Blair—deafness.

Twenty have been released: J. C. Crabb, Asa S. Cochran, Robert M. Elvin, John A. Chisnall, J. M. Baker, Temme T. Hinderks, Joseph A. Tanner, John A. Grant, George A. Smith, Vinton M. Goodrich, Charles Fry, Richard J. Lambert, W. O. Hands, David Krahl, George Hulmes, William R. Pickering, Nathaniel Carmichael, Roy V. Hopkins, Beauford J. Scott, Merrill Etzenhouser.

Twelve are present members: I. A. Smith, Robert T. Cooper, C. Ed. Miller, Denzil O. Cato, J. Stanley Kelley, Leonard Lea, Carroll L. Olson, Howard Andersen, Harry G. Barto, Arthur B. Phillips, Amos Allen, A. K. Dillee.

Prayer and Testimony

Have You Given Your Testimony?

The Editors invite all who read and appreciate the letters that appear regularly on these pages, to write and send in their own testimonies.

The circle of people who read these pages are like a large prayer meeting. All listen; most receive comfort and help; a few arise and do their part which brings the blessing of the Good Spirit to all present. Some must be urged to bear the testimonies that fill their hearts. The meeting is waiting now. Perhaps it is waiting on you.

Have you given your testimony yet?

Missionary Openings in New Mexico

By W. P. Bootman

I am on my way home from Portales, New Mexico, after spending about six weeks in that part of the country. I stopped first at the home of Brother Cothern who lives in Portales, held some meetings in the courthouse, and in their home. Then a man who attended my meeting at the courthouse came after me to take me to his home, about twelve miles away, where I commenced a series of meetings in a union church living at the home of the nonmember who took me to hold the meetings there. This was a mixed congregation of Baptists, Christians, Holiness people, and there may have been others. The family with whom I was stopping belonged to no church, but are honest people. On last Sunday with three other adults I baptized the wife, and the husband will follow later with others that are near the kingdom.

From there I went about forty miles to Brother Deskin Cothern's home and commenced meeting in a schoolhouse where the gospel had never been presented by our people. There was considerable prejudice, but a number of splendid people reside in that community.

From there I went to a brother's home about forty miles from Portales. I baptized this man about eighteen years ago, when he was attending a debate I was holding with a minister by the name of Andrew Nunery. This brother was baptized along with thirteen others. I held meetings there four nights, and on last Sunday (October 30) I baptized his eldest daughter with three others, making eight in all.

When I closed my meetings at Bethel, where the friend, Mr. Harvey Redburn, took me, there were two hundred present. Many asked me to return. Farmers are so busy now that they can not take the time from their crops. The price of produce is very low, and they must save all they can.

At Portales the Saints have a nice little Sunday school with an average attendance of about twenty-five. We had Saints in attendance at the sacrament meeting from sixty miles away in one direction, and from forty-five miles in the opposite direction.

I think that Brother A. J. Layland was the first to present the work in that locality, following him came Brother J. E. Vanderwood, Brother Wildermuth, Brother G. H. Wixom, then myself. I effected three new openings here, and I think that it is the ripest field for work that I ever worked in. So many who do not belong to any church, and are ready to hear the truth, and believe that the times are fulfilling the word of God.

Sister W. T. Cothern is Sunday school superintendent.

She is doing a good work and she is a well posted woman, and very much liked by those not of the faith, because of her kind manner.

I am at this writing at the home of Brother F. M. Dearborn, pastor of the church in Douglas, Arizona. I held a series of meetings here some time ago. Will leave here for Tucson this afternoon.

I must go to Phoenix soon, as I was expected there long ago, but found conditions in New Mexico so favorable for the work that I did not deem it wise to leave there.

When I closed my meeting at Bethel, a man who had been a minister of the Baptist church for many years arose after I closed and asked permission to speak. I granted it and he said, that he had followed me very closely and that I had preached Christ's gospel plainer, clearer, and more of it than he had ever heard before. I look for him to obey. I am happy in the work.

Tells of Healings Through Administration

By Lula I. Bruce

This morning I wish to write my testimony to the people of Christ's church. I do so not because I feel worthy of the blessings received, but because I want to help others.

I was healed a year ago at the Decatur conference under the hands of two of God's servants whose names I do not remember, of wild hairs in my eyes.

And about a month ago I was healed of a big sore under the hands of Brother Bern Case of the Indian mission, south of Macy, Nebraska. Neither time was I healed in a minute, but in the latter case, the fever left almost in a minute, also the pain. For these blessings and others I am very thankful to God and his servants. I pray that his good work will go on.

I feel that I have been chastened, but can say as Paul said in his letter to the Hebrews: "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." (12: 11.)

I am fourteen miles from church and do not often get to go, and I feel the need of Saints. Nevertheless, I have been shown three times in a dream that my place is here. I feel that in the future, however, the way will be opened up for me to associate with members of the faith. And I pray that I can do more for the Lord who has done so much for me.

We Should Not Grieve for Death

By Edith Prideaux

I enjoy "The Riddle of American Origins," by Harold I. Velt. I read all articles and listen to all stories along that line, and have a box well filled with clippings of articles and illustrations which I prize very much.

The Scriptures tell us not to turn a stranger away from our door for we may entertain an angel unawares. I always travel like a book agent with my traveling bag or suitcase well supplied with books and papers of the church. As I was returning from a trip to Cambridge, I chanced to fall into conversation with a woman from New Meadows. I took the Book of Mormon from my handbag and started telling her what it was, also about the three Nephite brothers who were never to see death.

Here is the story she told me. A very good woman had lived at New Meadows. She had lost her only son. She took this loss very sorrowfully and grieved so much for him that her neighbors became alarmed and did all they could to comfort her, but to no avail. One day she was in the house alone when a strange man entered and told her that he had come to talk to her about her son. He quoted many passages of Scripture to her and told her not to grieve any more. "Do you know where my son is?" she asked of him. "Yes," he replied, "and he doesn't want you to grieve any more. He is happy and would not come back to the earth again if he could."

This caused the woman to stop grieving. She told her neighbors of the strange visit and the assurance the visitor had given her. Where had he gone? She described him to them and asked if he had left on any outgoing train, but no one had seen him except herself.

Here is a word to the Glendale, California Saints. At 3440 Rosemary Street, North Glendale, lives a young married sister, Mrs. Ray F. Love, who would be glad to worship with you if she knew where you worshiped. She will be glad to have Saints call on her. This sister may be remembered by some of the Saints in California as little Geraldine Mathison who lost her mother in 1919, at Los Angeles.

Prayer Breaks Tobacco Habit

By E. B. Johnston

I want to tell a vision that was given to me when I gave up the tobacco habit. For over ten years I had been a heavy user of tobacco. But I had been taught and shown in the Doctrine and Covenants 86:1 and 119:3 that tobacco was not good for man in the form that I had used it. After trying for some time to break the habit, and failing, I made it the subject of prayer. At this time I was firing a stationary boiler in Duluth, Minnesota.

After again praying to the Father for help, I threw my pipe into the firebox and gave away my tobacco. I then sat down in my easy chair having finished my work for an hour. At that time I was taken up in a vision. It seemed as though my spirit left my body and traveled up for some time. Finally I arrived at a place in which everything seemed far more beautiful than anything I had ever seen. The sky, flowers, and grass and trees seemed to take on a more beautiful color. While I was thus occupied in admiring the beautiful surroundings and the peace of the place, Christ appeared to me. I could see the prints of the nails in his feet and hands. He was going to show me his side, but I said, "I know that you are Jesus the Christ." Among the things he told me and the promises he made me this one stands out most clear—"I will be with you always." Mortal man has not the power to describe the look of kindness and love that was on his face. Nor is it possible to describe his features or the sound of his voice.

May the telling of this vision be the means of strengthening the Saints of the most high God, and also of bringing some who search for truth and the more abundant life.

Would Live to Meet Son Joyfully

By William Stark

It is now six months since my boy went to the great beyond. In the hours of the night I am able to see him as if he still were with us.

Recently, on his twentieth birthday, I prayed before retiring to bed that I might see him again. My humble prayer was answered, and I was allowed to be with him. We were, at the time, workers together though the work we were doing is somewhat vague to me.

I have assurance that my son is a busy worker for Jesus, and if I can live and hold out to the end as he did, I am promised that I will meet him to part no more.

Two days before my boy, Louis C. Stark, left us, he had a foretaste of heaven in which Jesus descended upon a pure white cloud, and after being caught up with the Spirit into the heights of glory, they were assembled in a beautiful place. He mentioned that, including his father and mother, sisters and brothers, there were multitudes of good people there. With grand accord songs echoed through this vast place. He added that with his own Hawaiian guitar he was a worker, too, playing glories to God.

In conclusion he said, "The last song we sang was 'Nearer My God to Thee,' and I played it. Oh, Daddy, you were there, and someday we'll be pals, and it won't be long. Good-bye, you can go home now; I'm all right."

So sorrowfully we turned home, but mingled with our sadness was the understanding that Jesus Christ will some day return with all glory and those who have gone before. My desire is to live so as to meet him with joy and not with sorrow.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Mary Emerick asks the prayers of the Saints for her mother who is seventy-six years old, that the heavenly Father will send her the understanding of the truth. She also desires prayers for herself.

VALENTINE, NEBRASKA.

Mrs. Nancy Jane Solomon who has been very ill with indigestion, wishes the prayers of the church. She is nearly deaf, and has many trials to endure, but she has faith in prayer and the power of God to heal. She is grateful to the heavenly Father for the blessings he has bestowed on her in years gone by.

GILLETTE, WYOMING.

Once again Sister Emma A. Vickery requests Herald readers to remember her in prayer, that her health may be improved. The other day she fell and broke a rib on the right side which is giving her considerable pain.

WINFIELD, KANSAS.

Prayers of the Saints are asked for Mrs. Emily Whittman, who is suffering, with a growth of the hip joint. She is a patient sufferer, and Brother L. R. Adkins, who asks prayers for her, thinks that if she is healed, she will be a power for good in the community gospel work.

QUESTION TIME

How could Paul be sent to preach, and not be sent to baptize, as stated in 1 Corinthians 1: 17?

It may be noted that Paul was, at the time referred to, rebuking some who claimed they were of Paul, Apollos, or other Christian ministers. They had been baptized into the church, but, instead of being converted to the teachings of Christ, appear to have been converted to the minister by whom they heard the message. Paul here emphasizes the fact that it is not the person who baptizes which is important to the candidate, but rather the gospel of Christ. Unless interpreted in this light, the language of Paul could be misunderstood to mean that to baptize was no part of his work as a minister, which is by no means the meaning of the text.

In the Greek text certain words convey particular emphasis not indicated by the English text. The Greek emphasis in the text cited is as follows: "For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel": this emphasis meaning that the great purpose of his commission was to present the message of Christ, of which baptism was only an incidental or feature, and not the chief end in view. The fact that Paul mentions several whom he had baptized, shows that he did not imply that baptism was unnecessary or no part of his work. It is often difficult to translate a text by using exact English words for the Greek terms employed, as things are frequently implied that are not actually stated. The translator must use great care not to say more than authorized, and in doing so he may and often does say less than may have been implied originally.

Please explain how the office of Seventy arose, and how many it included.

It is recognized that Israel was used by God as a type of his people to come, and many significant rites and truths were contained in the Mosaic laws and ordinances. Hence the fact that Jacob had twelve sons is found in after ages to have great spiritual meaning, in some respects prophetic. They later had twelve pillars, twelve loaves of showbread, twelve stones, twelve cakes of flour, twelve gates in the New Jerusalem, and twelve men, all of which represented either the twelve sons of Jacob or the twelve tribes of Israel. The twelve apostles of Jesus evidently were chosen in recognition of this established symbolism, as his leading representatives.

The seventy elders of New Testament times may also be traced to a similar symbolism. It was "out of the loins of Jacob" that seventy souls were reckoned of those who went down into Egypt (Exodus 1: 5). Afterward God commanded the "princes" of Israel, "heads of the house of their fathers, who were the princes of the tribes," to make certain offerings, including a "silver bowl of seventy shekels" for each prince (Numbers 7: 13). It was "seventy of the elders of Israel" that Moses took with him when he went to meet God in the mount. There were still seventy "ancients" (seniors) of Israel in Ezekiel's day, but they had become backsliders (Ezekiel 8: 9-12). The Jews trace the Sanhedrim (70), the leading religious council of the Jewish people, to the Mosaic period.

The seventy of Christ's day are mentioned only in the tenth chapter of Luke. They were chosen after the twelve were appointed, none of the twelve being of their number, as the record states "other" seventy, that is, different from the twelve, were appointed. The Greek term indicates that seventy persons composed this early church council of elders, as twelve composed the apostolic council.

What was the Jewish Sanhedrim?

The correct form of the term in the Aramaic is said to be Sanhedrin. It was the supreme religious council of the Jewish body, and in Acts 5: 21 is probably referred to by the term "senate," as Josephus uses this term, or quotes it from King Antiochus. The Mishna indicates that it was considered to be derived from the seventy elders of the time of Moses. For a time they appear to have been of the priesthood, but later scribes and elders of other lineage were included. Originally they were evidently the "princes" of the various tribes of Israel. At times the high priest appears to have been a member of the Sanhedrim, and at such times he presided over its functions, which were ordinarily concerned with questions of the Mosaic law and established religious customs.

The members of the Sanhedrim were chosen for life, unless removed for cause. It is said by Josephus that Ananus (Annas) the high priest called the Sanhedrim and condemned James, the brother of Christ, to be stoned to death.

MEMORIES OF THE LATE JOSEPH SMITH

that I would baptize a good many into the church. I went in accordance with his directions but not having much faith in many people joining, and held forth for a number of weeks and upwards of sixty people were baptized through the effort put forth. Thus it was that he proved to be a true prophet.

During this conference I was walking in the grove one day and passed Joseph Smith and John T. Kinnaman, the latter being a great singer and leader, and the prophet said to him: "Did you see that young man with black curly hair going by? He will some day be an apostle." Eight years later this prediction was fulfilled.

The next time we met was at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1883, at General Conference, the first one held there, which was a remarkable conference in point of spirituality, held in the grand old historic temple. Four years later, in the same building in 1887, I was called to the apostleship through the prophet and he was the mouthpiece in ordaining me to that responsible sacred office. He pronounced many interesting predictions upon my head, relative to my future work, especially in the office of the apostle, which have been literally fulfilled and proved to me again that he was a true prophet of God.

One day while visiting at my home during the conference I asked him if he would impart unto me some of his experiences in receiving revelations from God and he proceeded to tell me how he had received revelations in the past. He told me that an angel had talked to him and that he had received manifestations through spiritual dreams and visions and also through the operation of the Holy Ghost in prophecies. He related one incident that made a great impression on my mind. He said he was directed to write and complied with the command he had received and said he wrote under the influence of the Spirit and all of a sudden his hand stopped and he could not write again for quite a while until the Spirit directed his hand again and he then continued to the end of the communication.

In 1890 the Joint Council of the Presidency and Twelve met to consider some very important things pertaining to the church. One question was brought up before the council upon which the Twelve and the Presidency could not agree, and we debated it for some time but could not reach any agreement thereon. Finally when the question was put to a vote it was two to ten. At last it was proposed by one of the Twelve that we take the matter to the Lord for His final decision thereon. The prophet felt very embarrassed over the proposition of leaving it to the Lord to decide for the reason that the prophet would be the one to receive it, and as he stated, suppose the answer would be in favor of the position he and his counselor had taken throughout the discussion of the question? The brethren of the Twelve told him they had such implicit confidence in him as a man of God that if he brought a revelation to them sustaining the position of the presidency, they were confident it would be of God and they would abide by it. They fasted and prayed to that end and the Lord revealed through him that which they sought and it was accepted unanimously.

Other matters were imparted in the revelation and the entire conference indorsed it and the Lord bore witness to the divinity of the revelation through His Spirit in that great assembly. I remember seeing even children with tears streaming down their faces, while the matter was being considered, under the influence of the Spirit, by the General Conference.

One year later, in 1891, an incident happened during the General Conference at Independence, Missouri. A revelation was given that some of the Twelve took exception to. They were not opposed to anything that was stated in the revelation but objected to the manner in which it was presented. Some of the apostles contended that the revelation should have been presented to them and the rest of the quorums before being presented to the general body and sought to have the prophet appear before the Twelve to answer to them why he took the revelation before the conference for its approval before bringing it to them and the other quorums for their approval.

He came before the Twelve per their request and I shall never forget the attitude he assumed on that occasion. His answer was: "You want to know why I took that revelation before the General Conference before bringing it to you and the rest of the quorums. The Lord commanded me to take it there and I did, and I will do it again if the Lord so commands me." I can now see his hand as it came down in emphasizing—"and I will do it again if the Lord so commands me." There was not a word said in reply and that was the end of the matter. This surely was a supreme direction or control as some call it. And that was not the only time that he displayed supreme directional control to my knowledge.

In 1913 at Lamoni, Iowa, he ordained me the President of the Quorum of Twelve, which position I occupied for ten years, and this from all accounts is the last ordination he officiated in.

At this conference I was assigned to the Australasian Mission and just before I left Lamoni I met the prophet and his wife on the street and he told me I would be wonderfully blessed and would be instrumental in accomplishing a work that would be very beneficial to the church and bade me Godspeed and I was made to realize that what he told me was true in every respect for the reason that on the way to Australia I stopped off at the South Sea Islands and was instrumental in the hands of the Lord with the help of other brethren in bringing back into the fold about one hundred of the Saints who had drifted away from the church and they were known on the island as the "Priesthood People" who permitted themselves to drift into what I denominated as a sort of spiritualism.

The things that he pronounced upon my head in the ordination have all come true, which proved beyond the possibility of a doubt in my mind that he was a prophet of the Lord and I was acquainted with him nearly forty years in the ministry. He has been to me a true spiritual father and I truly loved him. I often think of him and thank the Lord that I had such a true friend to help me be what the Lord intended me to be, during my day and generation. I had no father of my own to counsel me in Godly things as he did when I was quite young.

At this juncture I wish to call the attention of the reader to many incidents which I think should be read with profit by those who did not have the privilege of seeing and associating with such a noble man of God. He was tender-hearted and was always ready to sympathize with the people in their troubles and sorrows and to speak words of comfort and cheer to them as they passed through their Gethsemane.

In the latter part of 1894 and the beginning of 1895, when the "grim reaper" visited our home and took from our embrace three loving boys, he wrote me a very sympathetic letter of consolation and in it he related what trying experience he had passed through when quite a number of his loved ones had been taken away in death. No one but God knows what comfort and peace his cheering words brought to our sad hearts and especially from one who realized the awful trial we were passing through.

A few weeks prior to his fiftieth anniversary it was my happy lot to pay him a visit at his home and he informed me he had been very poorly physically for some months, during which time he had not been able to attend services and was fearful that he would not be able to attend the fiftieth anniversary of his presidency of the church. He felt quite sad over it. Nevertheless he still had faith in God and in his ability to help him physically so he could be present on that memorable occasion and he requested me to administer to him, which I willingly and gladly did and our united faith in God brought the desired blessing, for he was present throughout the entire day and enjoyed himself immensely, and all who were present to celebrate the wonderful occasion, rejoiced to have him with them.

During the General Conference at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1896, he stayed at our home and early in the morning of the last day he asked me if I could interpret dreams and I answered that it depended as to whether the Lord would give an interpretation or not. He then told me his dream. He said he was driving a team of white horses up an incline. All of a sudden and to his surprise and dismay, one of the horses dropped dead, then the Presiding Bishop and the Twelve helped him get the vehicle up the incline. I answered that Brother Blair, who was then his only counselor, was going to die suddenly and that the Presiding Bishop and the Twelve would assist him to carry his heavy load until other counselors would be given him to support him in his office. He answered: "You don't mean to tell me that Brother Blair is compared to a horse?" I said, "No, but his office."

Brother Blair was taken sick that same day in the joint council and started next day for home, dying on the train before he reached his destination. The prophet was in my home when the telegram came announcing the sad and sudden death of Brother Blair. He glanced at my wife and said, "The dream and interpretation have come true." He told me afterward that the dream made him feel sad and he did not want my interpretation of it to be true.

He sent me many revelations that had reference to me personally and my work, in which the Lord gave him directions concerning my missions over which I presided.

A few years before his departure he requested me to move my family to Independence, as he felt I could be used more advantageously if I were closer to headquarters. I was very much elated for a time and began to make arrangements to comply with his request, but on arriving home at Kirtland, Ohio, I told my wife of what I had been requested to do, but for some cause or another, it was given to me personally that I should not move from Kirtland at that time. That my work in the east had not come to end as yet. This made me feel rather sad as I desired to obey the counsel I had received from him as my superior officer and guide in spiritual things. I finally wrote to him asking him if he would join my wife and I in prayer and fasting. It was about two or three weeks ere I received an answer from the letter, in which he stated that he had complied with my request and the Lord had given him the revelation contained therein which was to the effect that I was to remain where I was until I received a command from God to move from Kirtland. It was expedient for me to be there at that time. This was an evidence to me of the greatness of the man and that he was always willing under all conditions to submit to the will of God in all things, so I acted accordingly. It should be remembered that he did not speak by command of God when he requested me to make the change, but simply from the standpoint of human wisdom.

I had not published the Instructor, or the Exegesis of the Priesthood but I sent him the manuscript for his approval for I considered him God's interpreter and he willingly acquiesced with my desire in that regard and I therefore felt free to publish the same under his approval.

In the opinion of the writer, the late Joseph Smith, the prophet, will rank with any of the prophets that preceded him, in point of faithfulness and godliness to the trust imposed in him by God. None of the prophets had a more difficult task to perform than he did. He had great courage and stability to assume the reins of the presidency of the church at the time God selected him to carry on the work his father had begun, in view of the terrible and trying conditions that confronted him by reason of the apostasy that had taken place.

Subsequent to the martyrdom of his father, the church had divided into eighteen factions, which made it a very unpleasant and trying task for him to gather together those who had been deceived by the leaders of these different factions. It took great patience and fortitude, wisdom and inspiration from heaven, to bring back into the fold those who had been led away from the path of virtue, truth and righteousness, through the misrepresentation and false doctrine of the false leaders.

All who are familiar with the history of this wonderful man, must exclaim that he was the right man in the right place.

Peace to his ashes.

We now turned our attention to tables. Here the young people's supervisor offered his young carpenters' services and from three dollars' worth of lumber they turned back to us three fine tables. These the junior boys painted to match our chairs and our furniture was ready for use.

In the meantime a month had gone by and we had been so busy we hardly knew where to turn. I found Miss Brown, who had accompanied me on my first visit to the homes, to be an efficient worker on whom I could safely depend. She was very young and had not had any teaching experience but she loved children and was anxious to study them and meet the demands they made of her. I at once decided on her as one of my teachers. Mrs. G— had taught in the department before my arrival but I soon found that she came to school Sunday morning, read the story to the children while a few listened and the rest played, and went home and back to her other interests until the next Sunday morning when she, apparently suddenly remembered she had a class to teach. This caused me a great deal of anxiety as I knew many of the workers thought the primary department could not go on without this lady. However, I decided to let her go on for the time being.

I found the room could be used to better advantage and the children better situated if divided into three groups according to age. This we did and obtained the help of Mrs. S—, a young mother who was anxious to understand her own youngster and assist his development in a well-balanced way.

We took the children into our confidence in planning to fix up the room and they were so enthusiastic about it they wanted to come on Saturday afternoons and work on it, which was just what we wanted them to do. The older girls in the young people's department cut and hemmed some curtains for us from inexpensive unbleached muslin. Our boys traced animals on blue cambric and cut them out, and our girls appliqued them on the curtains with black folds. We made oil cloth covers for our tables from white oil cloth with blue animals appliqued on and the boys made us a book trough from some boxes they obtained from a grocery store. The older boys had made us a supply cupboard from a box also and each class in the department was assigned a compartment in this cupboard for their own supplies. By the time the month was ended each teacher had in her compartment an adequate supply of scissors, crayolas, pencils, paste, etc., most of which had been provided by the pupils themselves. The school provided us with colored construction paper and plain note paper for hand work.

At the end of the first month, to my surprise, Mrs. G— came to me and said she had been teaching so long she would be very happy if I could get some one to take her place which I, realizing her lack of interest and enthusiasm, was glad to do. A girl in the young people's department wanted to be a teacher and was glad for the chance to start and I was glad to get her help.

The children were so proud of their room which was attractive and orderly (made and kept that way by their own efforts) that we planned to have a "house warming" the last Sunday in the second month, to which they could invite their friends and parents. This month was even busier than the last, putting on the finishing touches and getting ready for our celebration. We came across some old screens not being used in the women's room, which we curtained with muslin with blue animals on to match our window curtains. These divided our room nicely into three separate classrooms after our worship period and made our work much more effective. Pictures were gathered from everywhere and the best ones framed neatly in colored construction paper and hung on the wall. Our books all received new coats of colored paper and shellac. Mrs. S— had in her attic an old-fashioned organ which had been in her family for a century. This she loaned us for use in our music and Johnnie's mother gave us a phonograph which they had discarded for a radio. Each Sunday each child either pasted or drew a picture illustrating his lesson on a sheet of cardboard given him for that purpose. These were all to be displayed on the new bulletin boards on the last Sunday. Each class had a large attendance chart in their section of the room on which each child received a star for attendance and an extra one for bringing some one with him.

The theme for the month was "Home" and the children responded whole-heartedly. On the third Sunday of the month the lesson story was about the house Elisha's friends built for him and the children made a little paper model of a house with a little room on top. This they placed in the sand box and with the use of a few palm branches made a lovely display. We told them that our house was now all ready and we were ready to invite our friends there next Sunday. Each child told of his friends who were coming. I asked who was the very best friend to everyone of them. They immediately agreed it was Jesus and when asked if they had invited him they admitted that they had not thought of it; so as we closed our session with eyes closed and heads reverently bowed, each child invited his friend, Jesus, to be his guest the following Sunday. As they prepared to leave we told them that our work was done now and our house completed so there was no need for further disorder hereafter; for if we wanted Jesus to meet us there we must come in and take our places and never forget that we had a guest present in our home. They all agreed to be good hosts and hostesses and treat their guest kindly always.

During the week, as Miss Brown and I were discussing the past weeks, I suddenly remembered the list of problems we had collected and taking my list we started checking them. Bobby had been so busy he had had no time for play and we had come to depend on him for getting anything done we asked of him. Mary had found the true experiences so adventurous and thrilling she had not had to resort to the imaginary ones. Johnnie had learned to collect valuables for the whole group and had lost the desire to hoard up other people's possessions to himself. Perry and Maxine had learned to associate with other children and share with them. Barbara and Jack had taken an interest in their personal appearance; they were clean and neat and wanted their own home pretty like their church school home. Elizabeth had found an outlet for her maternal instinct in helping the younger children with their hand work. Why, our problems had all vanished! "Yes," agreed Miss Brown, "they 'fold their tents like the Arabs and silently steal away,' but our one problem now, is to see that they do not sneak up on us again. They have been crowded out of the children's lives because we have filled them so full of other things they found no room. We must keep them that way."

At last the day arrived and for a little surprise which children appreciate so thoroughly, we prepared a lunch and took to the church so we could spend the whole day there. We arrived early and when it was time for the children to begin coming we opened the door and played the phonograph very softly. Each teacher took her place at her own table and the children entering the room, heard the music, and saw their teachers sitting quietly. They immediately took their places in an orderly manner. When it was time for the opening of the church school everyone stood silently with bowed heads for one minute after which Miss Allen took her place at the organ and we all sang "Jesus Is the Children's Friend." We had a short prayer thanking God for all the things he had helped us to accomplish and for all the friends he had given us to help us. We thanked Jesus for accepting our invitation and asked him to come each Sunday. After the prayer we sang softly, "Jesus Loves Me."

The director of the school was present and now presented a large, framed picture of Jesus blessing the little children and told them the story. The monitors put the screens in place dividing the room and each teacher conducted her own class work centered around the thought of Jesus in their home. Each child prepared a list of things he would want Jesus to find if he came into his own home. These were placed on the bulletin boards for the observation of visitors in the afternoon. When class time was over they were invited by their teachers to stay for lunch and after singing another song they marched out to the auditorium for junior church.

After lunch we assembled in our room ready to receive our visitors. We carried in as many chairs as there was room for and these were soon occupied as well as the standing space. Jack and Perry acted as ushers and were quite pleased to see so many guests. At the appointed time Bobby asked them to all join in singing "I Have Heard the Sweetest Story," after which the children with bowed heads, repeated the twenty-third Psalm. Bobby then made the welcome speech and thanked everyone for helping us. There were several individual numbers on the program and the meeting was dismissed by a prayer of blessing by the pastor. The visitors were then free to inspect the room and exhibits in which they took much interest. When the last guest had gone the children set the room in order and went home with the memory of the happiest experience in their lives.

When in the teachers' meeting the following week I thanked them all for their cooperation in getting my department organized and well started, they refused to accept my thanks for their services for, they said, they should thank me instead. I was quite bewildered but as they continued I understood. Each supervisor insisted that new life and enthusiasm had come into his department as he had helped us in getting started. They had learned the true joy of service through helping me. Surely I, too, had found the same joy and could well thank the children for my experience, but anyone who saw their beaming faces on that day knew they had found even greater joy than we, so we decided it was just another debt due only to our heavenly Father.

Weekly Health Letter

Questions on Nose and Throat Troubles

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

DISEASED TONSILS—(MASSACHUSETTS)

"I am constantly troubled with white cheesy particles coming from my tonsils. The glands of my neck are slightly swollen at times. Some of my friends say I am scrofulous. What should I do for this condition?"

REPLY: This cheesy mass which finds lodgment in the crypts contains many kinds of pus germs such as pneumonia, tubercular, etc. Some benefit may be obtained by your family physician cleaning out the crypts, but to delay too long about having the tonsils completely removed by a competent specialist is dangerous.

TONSILITIS—(NEW JERSEY)

"I have occasional attacks of tonsillitis, some times often as two or three times a year. I am told by some of my friends if I have them removed I will have tuberculosis or may take pneumonia easily. What do you advise me to do?"

REPLY: It is not advisable to remove tonsils unless diseased, but if you have tonsillitis once or twice every year undoubtedly they are abnormal and should be removed. It is foolish to assume that you may have tuberculosis or pneumonia if you have them removed. In fact you are more likely to contract some serious, and perhaps fatal condition, unless you have them properly treated or enucleated.

HAS DISEASED TONSILS—(CALIFORNIA)

"My physician advises me to have my tonsils removed, as God put them there, and if I do it will it be the means by which dirt and dust will enter my lungs? Please advise me."

REPLY: No doubt God intended that if "His Temple," the body, was properly taken care of, in such a manner as described in the Word of Wisdom, there would be no such thing as diseased tonsils. If they are diseased, I advise you follow your physicians advice and have them removed.

WHAT EVIL EFFECT HAS DISEASED TONSILS?—(NEW YORK)

REPLY: Mouth breathing, bad breath, anaemia, tuberculosis, enlarged neck glands, deafness, sore throat.

MOUTH BREATHING—(CONNECTICUT)

"In spite of every precaution I use when sleeping, I breathe through my mouth and snore. I sleep in a well ventilated room. Have noticed some advertisements in the magazines and newspapers of a mechanical contrivance to compel one to breathe through their nose. Have been told that my lungs will be weakened unless I do something about it. What do you advise?"

REPLY: The well ventilated room meets with my approval, a sleeping porch would be better. Mouth breathing is always dangerous whether you sleep in a well ventilated room or sleeping porch. It does not allow the air to enter the lungs freely and prevents it from being properly filtered, warmed, and moistened. The cause of mouth breathing is enlarged tonsils, adenoids, some obstruction in the nose or pharynx which may be a growth or an abnormal bony condition. I advise you to consult your family physician and a specialist. There is no mechanical contrivance that will prevent mouth breathing or cure such a condition. After the obstruction is removed occasionally the habit will persist for a time, which can be easily overcome by forming the new habit of breathing through the nose instead of the mouth.

ADENOIDS—(WISCONSIN)

"Have been told that tonsils and adenoids should not be removed. My daughter, five and one half years old, has them. Do you advise treatment or removal?"

REPLY: My contention is that adenoids and diseased tonsils are a result of mal-nutrition brought about by an improper balanced diet and lack of cleanliness of the nose, mouth and teeth. After they become diseased the only recourse is removal. Occasionally tonsils may be benefited by removing the cheesy mass and food particles from the small openings in the tonsils. These openings are called "crypts." The physician can clean them out and apply medicine. The patient can assist in the treatment by squeezing the masses with a loop made of smooth wire. Most cases of diseased tonsils should be completely removed as they are dangerous.

ADENOIDS—(CALIFORNIA)

"Our little girl of five years of age has adenoids and always sleeps with her mouth open. Please let me know by return mail what to do about it."

REPLY: You should consult a throat specialist. There are other causes for mouth breathing that has been described in previous Health Letters. If she has adenoids be sure and have them removed.

MOUTH BREATHING—(ARIZONA)

"Our child four years old catches cold easily and is sickly and breathes through his mouth. Do you believe he has adenoids, and what can I do for him?"

REPLY: Mouth breathers are disease catchers and frequently contaminate. They are "catchers" in the strict sense of the word. They usually bring home from school a variety of contagious diseases such as scarlet fever, diphtheria, etc. Many cases are caused by adenoids, and if neglected the nose spaces are lessened, the roof of the mouth and face is deformed, the teeth protrude and do not meet properly. I advise you to consult a throat specialist.

The Lord of Life and Glory

While heaven's arch, with all eternity
Fill with a mighty shout: "'Tis He!
The Lord of Life and Glory."

See, on His brow, a cruel thorny crown,
And crimson blood which dies His snowy gown.

The angel hosts, amazed, ask "Can it be?"

And back the chorus rolls, "'Tis He!
The Lord of Life and Glory."

Up, t'ward the Great White Throne,
they wend their way,
Ten thousand thousand in their bright array;

Into the presence—lo! they bow the knee—

The Father speaks, "My Son, 'Tis He!
The Lord of Life and Glory."

Each tongue is still. All eyes are on the Son.

His head is bowed—"Father, Thy will be done,

My life I gave, I now return to Thee."

Again the chorus sounds, "'Tis He!
The Lord of Life and Glory."

Hark! From the throne, the Voice of Love Divine

Says, "Son, well done, the glory shall be thine;

Thy crown of thorns of glory now shall be,

And Thou shalt reign eternally
The Lord of Life and Glory."

The gates of Death and Hell burst open wide;

No pow'r below can stem the rising tide;

A mighty shout, "Hosanna, glory be!"
Resounds, as face to face they see
The Lord of Life and Glory."

And now, regions of eternal day,
Enthroned and crowned the Savior holds full sway,

Adored, beloved, supreme security

Of angels, sinners, men—" 'Tis He!

The Lord of Life and Glory."

There are men who never read theology or books of Jesus. These will never be permitted to visit famous art galleries or to ally themselves with vast institutions. But all men can be touched by the Christ-filled character.—F. M. McDowell, in a sermon at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

Distribution of Baptisms Since 1920

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH,
Office

Dear Brother Smith:

In harmony with your request I am inclosing herewith a tabular report showing the monthly and annual trend in baptisms from 1920 to date.

We have given the total baptisms reported for each individual month, as well as the total for the calendar year, from 1920 to 1930, and then shown the average for each month for this eleven-year period. The monthly totals for the years 1931 and 1932 should be considered in relation to this 11-year average, in order to determine the trend.

Trusting that this gives you the information you desire, we are,

Yours sincerely,

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS,

By C. L. OLSON.

*For the year 1932, the total for the ten months, January to October inclusive, equals 2,672. For this same ten-month period in 1931 the total was 2,789. The average of this ten-month period for the years 1920 to 1930 inclusive was 3,172. By this it will be seen that 1932 to date is 117 less than the same period in 1931, and is exactly 500 less than the average of this period for the years 1920 to 1930. This amounts to a decline of 4.2 per cent from 1931, and of 15.8 per cent from the 11-year average.

It is interesting to compare the two months of June and July of 1931 and 1932 with the 11-year average. For the 11-year average, 906 baptisms were reported in these two months; in 1931, 904 baptisms were reported in these two months; and in 1932, a total of 1,059 baptisms were reported in June and July. Out of the total baptisms for the first ten months of the year, for the 11-year average 29 per cent were reported in these two months, for the year 1931, the percentage was 32 per cent, and for the year 1932, the percentage was 40 per cent. In other words this year 2-5 of the baptisms to date were reported in 1-5 of the months, and were associated almost entirely with Children's Day exercises. The baptisms for the other months have been definitely less than they have been in other years.

Coeur D'Alene, Idaho

Once-a-month Meetings for Parents of Church School Children

Saints of this branch have been very busy. They have sponsored three programs by the children of the church school which were well attended by the parents, mostly nonmembers.

Through the efforts of church school officers and supervisors of the midweek activities of the children's division, the school has grown from a group of thirty-four in 1930, to one of eighty-six at the present. About eighty-five per cent of these children are nonmembers.

During the month of July Brother and Sister Stanley J. Fout were absent from the branch most of the time in charge of district work.

Elder L. E. Holmes is associate pastor and is very faithful in keeping things going in the absence of Brother Fout.

Sisters Margaret Gibson, Myrtle Phay, Laura Millard and Gladys M. Fout are attending the leadership training school in Spokane every Tuesday evening. The teachers and supervisors believe in preparation.

This group has been visited by Apostle James A. Gillen; Elder M. H. Cook, of Vancouver, Washington; Brothers James H. Sage, Alma Andrews, and Bert Hart, of the Spokane priesthood, and Elder Joseph L. Sandage who is the part-time missionary.

On the evening of October 6, twenty-eight of the parents of the church school children met in the basement auditorium of the church and spent an enjoyable evening. A short program was given, and a few games were played under the supervision of Sister Angie Heddal, after which refreshments were served. Again on the evening of November 3, the second once-a-month get-together meeting was held with games, program, and refreshments for the enjoyment of the parents, forty-three parents were present. Saints are now looking forward to December 8 for the third meeting of this kind, and then to the ninth, tenth, and eleventh of December, when several of the young people are going to Spokane to attend the class work of Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

The Saints of Coeur D'Alene are greatly encouraged in the work and feel that they have been abundantly blessed in their efforts to serve. Yet they feel greatly the need of more consecrated workers, ready and willing to sacrifice.

Women of Independence Collect $1,324 for General Church Debt

Their Project of Raising Money Is Now Five Weeks Old

When the call of the church was sounded for the women to assist in raising money to pay the church debt, the women of Independence were well organized to do their share of the work and more. They set at once about their task.

Monday, November 28, marked the fifth weekly meeting of the women, and at this session they checked up their donations for the five weeks of their endeavor as follows: October 31, $378.62; November 7, $286.22; November 14, $239.45; November 21, $215.86, and November 28, $203.85, making a total gift to the church of $1,324.

Individual Envelope System Is Used

The women are organized under a woman's leader, Sister Lottie Koehler, thirteen district leaders, and forty-six group leaders. Their plan to raise money has already been mentioned in the Herald, and the women have full charge of the work. Feminine members of every group are assisting their group leader in making a weekly visit in every home in their group. An envelope is left in each home and the women call to collect the envelopes at the end of the week. These are turned in to their district leader who presents them to the women's meeting held every Monday afternoon at the Stone Church from two till four o'clock. The money there is counted and reported by group so that every Monday, they know exactly how much money all the women have donated for the week.

Group One Gives a Dialogue

In order to keep these Monday meetings lively, and build interest, the members arrange a little program to precede the business of the hour. Group One was in charge of the program November 28, and the following dialogue was presented by six women:

"Say, just what do you think of our Monday afternoon meetings?"

"Oh, I think they are just fine."

"Well, I'm getting tired of them. I think they are monotonous."

"Just what do you mean monotonous?"

I've really enjoyed those Monday meetings."

"Oh, well, we just go there and sing a song, hear the money count, listen to a speech, and go home. Don't you call that monotonous? I do."

"I wouldn't say it was monotonous yet, anyway. Still we might do something different to keep the pep up."

"Yes, Sister Koehler was talking to me about that very thing and she wants something just a little different each week that will keep the women on their toes."

"Oh, I think it would be fine to have different districts put on a stunt each week. That would be fun, too."

"That's Sister Koehler's idea about it, too. Suppose we start it this afternoon and show them what we mean."

"What do you want to do that for? It will be so much work and, anyway, who wants to do anything like that, besides how is that going to help us redeem Zion?"

"Well, I think it's going to help more than anyone realizes. All my life I have been hearing about 'redeeming Zion.' When I was a small child my grandmother used to talk about it a great deal, and in my childish way I thought when everyone became so good we did not need jails and policemen in Independence any longer, we would wake up some morning and find Zion redeemed. The streets would be clean, the houses would be beautiful, the flowers brighter and more colorful, a beautiful temple would be on the temple lot, everyone would have plenty of money, lovely cars, and clothes. Well, that was a lovely dream, but worth-while things just don't come that way. Zion will be redeemed only by sacrifice and hard work. To me Zion doesn't mean just beautiful houses, but beautiful homes. As each home is made perfect we are that much nearer Zion. Anything that brings the women close together in a spirit of good fellowship, that keeps us working together to lift a heavy load, will, by that same teamwork, help each of us to solve our individual problems and almost before we realize it, our task will be accomplished. Just paying the debt, while in itself is a big thing, is so small compared to the ultimate goal that we can't help but reach it, working together as we now are. The whole plan will be a success in more ways than one."

"Here comes Miss Griffiths now. Tell us what success the envelopes have had in our group."

"Group No. 1, has placed fifty-four envelopes in homes and we have had returns from forty-four of them. The other ten are with us in spirit, but are unable to contribute financially."

"Hadn't we better be going to the meeting now? We will be late if we don't."

Birmingham, England

These Saints Are Grateful for Blessings

The year that is closing has been rich with blessings from the God of love. Many have been the experiences of Birmingham Saints, some very sad, but through it all, they have felt the Divine Power.

Local prayer services are of a high order and have increased from one to five meetings a week. It has been wonderful to pray for all the needs of the community and the church. The sick in most cases have been healed. The young men have found employment. Troubles have been lifted, and the Saints have indeed stood on holy ground. Prayer is the greatest force in the world. It helps, cheers, comforts, clarifies, enlightens. The Saints should thank God for the privilege of communing with him.

Sunday, October 30, the president of the district, Elder J. Holmes, visited the branch. His exhortation was: Choose ye this day life and good, or death and evil, and he used the words of the Lord: "I am the way, the truth, and the life."

In conjunction with Brother Holmes's helpful sermon on that day there was an address by Elder W. Bailey on "What Is Man?"

Birmingham's harvest Sunday was a splendid occasion. There was an abundance of rich gifts, a splendid display, a real thanksgiving. Sister Allen, sr., presented the branch with beautiful coverings for all the seats as a thank offering to God for the blessing of a daughter consecrated to Him through the waters of baptism. Her blessing was the restoration of health. This gift was greatly appreciated by the congregation.

Special services were held the Sunday following Armistice Day. Bishop A. T. Trapp addressed the congregation at both services. He dedicated to the church and presented to the branch a beautiful plush altar cloth of purple with gold lettering. It was a gift from Sister A. A. Meredith, sr., as a memorial to the life of her late husband. May his gentle, active life be always remembered by this token of love. Elder Edward E. Meredith lived for long years among Birmingham Saints, and was loved by young and old.

The Laurel Club comprised of the young people is an active body. It has planned concerts and social evenings for the coming season.

Under the leadership and direction of Pastor P. S. Whalley, who is interested in young and old, the Saints have faith that they shall accomplish much through greater unity, more consecrated lives, and continuous prayer.

Duluth, Minnesota

Sixteenth Avenue, West, and Bristol Streets

Though progress seems slow and obstacles are many, the Saints in Duluth are striving to move Zionward. The depression has been felt here, several of the members being unable to find work. Nevertheless, they have lately been strengthened by a series of meetings conducted by Apostle J. F. Curtis.

It was a treat also to the Saints to have here President F. M. McDowell during the Minnesota district conference. That was the first time this branch had been honored by the presence of a member of the Presidency. A fine spirit prevailed throughout the conference and attendance was good. Brother McDowell brought thoughts inspiring the members to climb toward greater heights of life. He impressed his hearers with the fundamental values of truth and service. A cordial invitation is extended all general officers to visit Duluth.

The annual business meeting was held in October. Elder E. J. Walters was chosen president; R. C. Zuelsdorf, Sunday school superintendent; Mrs. Mollie Feathers, superintendent of women; Mrs. Eva Tourville, musical director; P. G. Schnuckle, branch treasurer and solicitor, and W. C. Stauty, secretary and publicity agent.

The women gave their annual chicken supper October 20, which netted them over one hundred dollars. These suppers are looked forward to by many people because of the fine meal and service given. Had it not been for the depression, it would have been hard this year to have accommodated the crowd.

Mrs. Eva Tourville, musical director, with the help of Mrs. Lottie Zuelsdorf, is building a junior choir which will be an asset to the church.

The women furnished the eleven o'clock program Sunday morning, November 13, Mrs. Lottie Zuelsdorf and Mrs. R. C. Stauty in charge. These two and Miss Ada Carlson, and Mrs. Velna Erickson were the speakers and their theme was "Sacrifice." The junior choir sang, and Mrs. Eva Tourville sang a solo. The theme of the hour was well analyzed, and thoughts were well expressed.

Elder Samuel Case, of Warba, Minnesota, with his daughter-in-law, Irene Case, worshiped here Sunday, November 20. Ralph Case is at present confined to the hospital for treatment of his eyes.

Elder Bert Bosshardt, who runs a transfer truck from his home at Bemidji to Duluth, has met here at the Wednesday night prayer services.

Exeter, England

Patriarch W. H. Greenwood Conducts Meetings

October 9, Exeter Branch held its harvest thanksgiving services. The church room was beautifully decorated with gifts of flowers, fruits, and vegetables.

The services of the day were in charge of Patriarch William H. Greenwood, assisted by Pastor Frank Wilson and Elder Harry Hailstones. The speaker at 11 a. m. and 6:30 p. m. services was District President John A. Judd, who gave two beautiful sermons full of good thoughts and counsel.

During the afternoon a baptismal service took place in which one of the church school pupils, eight years of age, was baptized by Brother J. A. Judd and confirmed during the fellowship service by Brothers W. H. Greenwood and Frank Wilson. A splendid spirit prevailed throughout the day.

Patriarch W. H. Greenwood continued to hold services at Exeter until November 3, presenting the gospel of peace in the power and Spirit of Christ and in plainness so that no one could fail to understand. His sermons were very educational and of a character-building quality. This brother has ministered in a labor of love, and has won the respect of Exeter members and gained a warm place in their hearts. His visit terminated with a social held in his honor November 4, attended by twenty-nine.

Exeter Saints send gospel greetings to all who have labored and ministered among them.

Redeem Zion by Sacrifice, Service, and Love

Suggestions for Sacrifice Period and After

We are now observing a Sacrifice Period, and I wish to offer some suggestions. Our sacrifices should not stop at the end of Sacrifice Week, nor should it stop at supplying the church with funds to carry on the work, but we should all of us come to realize and be conscious of the fact that there are those who can not contribute money but could contribute necessities of life such as food, clothing, and fuel. This is especially true of the Saints living on farms.

Saints locally could do much towards helping the needy and missionaries and their families that are living in their community. Some could contribute perhaps a bushel of potatoes or two or a cord of wood. Some could give butter, eggs, clothing, etc., each community working out its own problems as wisdom directs and having a special day set to gather together these things and deliver to those that have need.

I believe that Saints in some communities are carrying this out, but I should like to see a more universal observance of this throughout the church, working together for the common interest and welfare of the Saints as a group and individually.

I know of other churches that are doing this successfully, and through their efforts have accomplished much even though they are all poor people. In union there is strength.

I know one church not far from here that every fall helps its pastor out in this way. The members set aside a day or evening when they meet and have a short program. They then present to the pastor the things they wish to give him, and in that way he is supplied wood, potatoes, etc., without undue burden placed on anyone.

Saints in the cities could buy these things of Saints living on farms nearby, or give what they could out of their own cellars or kitchens.

I would also suggest that a report of the success of these ventures be sent to the Saints' Herald, that we may profit by them in the future.

Zion can only be redeemed by the sacrifice, service, and love of the Saints for each other and for God, purifying themselves in heart and mind.

HAROLD D. HALE.

Union Branch

Clitherall, Minnesota

Union Branch has been fortunate in the past season. Regular services were resumed in May, and there has been good interest all summer and fall.

Brother and Sister J. W. Davis spent several weeks camping at Lake Clitherall, and were of great help throughout their stay, not only in the church services where Brother Davis did all the preaching, but they made friends for the church among their neighbors.

Elder Earl Hall, of Des Moines, Iowa, preached one Sunday in September, and left a valuable testimony of the power of the gospel and of the need of consecrated living.

Apostle J. F. Curtis stopped here in October on his way home from district conference in Duluth, and announced preaching services for a week. At the close of the week the interest and attendance seemed to warrant a further stay, and meetings were announced for another week. At the end of this time twelve were baptized October 30. One entire family was baptized with the exception of those under eight years of age. This family included the grandfather and grandmother, and thus completed two family circles. Two children were blessed. Others were interested in Apostle Curtis's services which continued the third week with good attendance. He left several reading the Book of Mormon and studying the Instructor. In connection with his sermons he used a chart showing the unchangeability of the gospel and making the Scriptures plain.

Among the young people from this community who are attending school are Elon Tucker at Graceland. The following are in high school: Clark Christianson, Winnifred and Harry Richards, Harry Peek and Junior Tucker.

The weather throughout November has been cold and stormy and many are unprepared to cope with the times; but the Saints are trusting in God and his overruling power in the affairs of men and nations.

Brewton, Alabama

Alaffora Branch

Elder Jacob Halb has just closed one of the best meetings held in this branch. He conducted services for three weeks in succession, and the longer he stayed the better the members liked to hear him preach. He is one of the best preachers they have had the privilege of listening to, for he leaves out nothing that would help them to understand the gospel. Then, too, he is very humble and kind, and the members felt blessed with his help.

Five were baptized at the close of the meetings, and there are others to follow.

This branch has preaching on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, Sunday school at ten o'clock, and then there is service in the evening. The prayer meeting has not been held of late, but members are hoping it will soon be revived. Sacrament service is enjoyed each first Sunday of the month.

Brother Earl Higdon is an active worker in this branch, and the members are happy to have him and Sister Higdon here.

Brother Benjamin Jernigan had a serious operation a short time ago. He is getting along nicely at this writing. Brother Jernigan is one of the presiding elders of the branch, and is much missed from his post of duty.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

The priesthood of the branch recently organized to make a general visit to every home of Saints, and now they are enthusiastically at work. Visiting teams are led by B. M. Anderson, E. J. Lenox, W. E. Poague, Francis Schrunck, and Grover Wall. Assisting brothers are W. S. Farrar, A. M. Pfanmiller, George Weller, Ralph Harder, and a Brother Williams, of Burlington, Iowa.

A fine spirit prevails in the branch, and the regular attendance at all services is excellent.

Under the capable leadership of Sister Esther Schrunck the young people have been organized into a club known as La Da Sa (meaning Latter Day Saint) and have regular services with increasing attendance.

Elder W. A. Smith, missionary to district began a series of services a few nights ago. Attendance is good, and workers are putting their best into support of this series.

The Saints entered the special sacrifice period with a deep conviction of what the church means to them and their great need of Zion as well as an understanding of the needs in the homes of the missionaries and of debt reduction. With fasting and prayer they began observance of this period, and while many have little to give in money, they are finding ways of sacrificing regular meals or necessary clothing in order to be helpers. Thus they move on with faith and courage toward Zion.

President F. M. McDowell Instructs and Leads in Southern New England Conference

The Religious Education conference of Southern New England District convened at Somerville, Massachusetts, November 19 and 20, and the members felt well repaid for the postponement which made it possible for them to enjoy the presence and instruction of President F. M. McDowell.

In the first afternoon session Brother McDowell started his course of lectures with the themes, "Why Do You Want to Serve the Church?" and "Where Do We Find the Best Revelation of God?"

Those who have listened to Brother McDowell are well acquainted with the manner in which he presents his lessons of life. At the outset he impresses one that he has complied with Paul's admonition to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God."

In this write-up of the conference the correspondent does not have time or space in which to do justice to the lectures and classwork of Brother McDowell. Suffice it to say that he discussed "Our Task Is Guiding Growing Persons to God," under the following subheads: God; Jesus; Man of Character; Fatherhood of God, Sonship of Christ, and Brotherhood of Man.

A short and spicy business session preceded the lecture Saturday evening. Sunday Brother McDowell spoke to the priesthood at the Fisher Business College besides holding two periods of class work in the forenoon and one in the afternoon.

Calvin C. Sears, well known in this district, was ordained an elder under the hands of President McDowell and Bishop E. L. Traver.

Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley preached an able sermon which closed the conference in a fitting manner.

The Saints came, heard, saw, and felt the spiritual force of a God who is still in his heaven and mindful of his children.

And as a result they are more firmly resolved to go forward to Zion, making the justice of God a reality in the industry of men.

Madison, Wisconsin

2119 Jackson Street

The basement of the church was recently finished and newly-painted by Charles Fields and Clyde Richardson. It was the scene of the men's Halloween social and supper, Charles Fields being the cook. The supper was paid for according to the height, four cents a foot being charged for the first five feet and a penny an inch thereafter. Proceeds went into the branch fund, and about one hundred people were fed.

The director of church school has asked the young people to write one letter a month to isolated members of the district. Brother Lee Root furnishes the names from his tithe payers' list.

October 16, Patriarch W. A. McDowell spoke to a full house morning and evening. In past years Brother McDowell has been a father to the branch here, and his return for the day was much appreciated as well as his helpful counsel.

In the afternoon some Saints from Janesville came for their patriarchal blessings. A carload of members from Evansville worshipped here on that day.

October 8, Brother and Sister Henry Woodstock and the Walker family attended an all-day meeting at Beloit.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood preached morning and evening, October 23. While in Madison he visited in the homes and helped wherever he could. After the district conference he remained to preach, visit, and help with the prayer service, also in the class on "What Latter Day Saints Believe About God." This group meets in one of the homes.

The branch took action, October 30, on the call of Lee Root to the Melchisedec priesthood. Brother Root is making progress in the work of the church, among the young people, and is an asset to the church school.

Paul Utenhmer, Nona Walker, and Ora Miller attended Graceland Homecoming in October.

Brother Charles Clark, sr., and family are back in Madison for a short stay. Brother Clark preached November 20. On Tuesday evening many of the adults of the branch surprised them in their home with a hearty welcome. The evening was spent listening to Brother Clark tell some of the funny things connected with circus life. Refreshments were served.

Not long ago a treasure hunt was given by the Walker family for the young people. After the treasure had been found, the guests returned to the home of their hosts and ate chile con carne and pumpkin pie.

A service commemorating the memory of Joseph Smith was given by the young people the evening of November 6. Some of his songs were sung, and talks presented Joseph Smith, the man, the peacemaker, and something of his life work. There was a short sermon by Brother Lee Root.

An eight o'clock prayer meeting was held Thanksgiving morning after which a thank offering was taken to be sent to the bishop.

The November sacrament service was unified with the church school, and the entire program worked out very successfully.

Sacramento, California

Twenty-fourth and Kay Streets

A short time ago Elder Arthur Oakman, missionary, finished two weeks of services in which he gave thirteen sermons on "Building the Kingdom of God." His discourses were to the point and covered the needs and requirements of man in his relationship to the establishing of the kingdom through obedience to His will. The songs sung by Brother Oakman and others added to the sermons and the success of this missionary endeavor. Sacramento members feel that this young brother is doing a great work for the Master, and hold him in grateful remembrance.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer also spent several days here. Not only did he preach a powerful sermon the morning of November 6, that seemed to reach deep into the issues of spiritual life, but he returned in the afternoon and clearly placed before the members what the life of service of the late President Joseph Smith meant to the church. As a result, the Saints here will picture Brother Joseph in memory as a Saint, a leader, and a man who bore heavy responsibilities with strength, fortitude, and righteousness.

Brothers G. P. Levitt and Eli Bronson and their families came from Oakland and attended the all-day services November 6.

Early morning sacrament was well attended, and that beautiful Spirit which Christ said would come to his people when they are willing to serve, was manifest.

At ten o'clock the branch and church school officers were dedicated by Brother Levitt to the work and opportunity of service for his church.

The business meeting, held for the purpose of selecting branch officers for the year, occurred October 1. Pastor W. H. Dawson was sustained. He, in turn, renamed Elders E. C. Burdick and J. L. Bussell as his counselors. Gertrude Bidwell was sustained as church school superintendent. District President G. P. Levitt came from Oakland to preside over the meeting. A pleasing spirit permeated the service, and the expressions of all showed the spirit of consecration to the cause of the Master.

Local Saints feel a growing spirit of unity in the services. They have opened the doors and welcomed missionary efforts in the past, and know that spiritual blessings have come to many. They hope during the new year to be blessed with the services of numbers of God's servants.

Death claimed Brother Newton Napier, age seventy-three, November 1. He leaves many friends who will cherish in memory the happy times and associations with this departed one. He gave his time, his service, his financial support to the church as a true Latter Day Saint. He was enjoying his retirement after forty-two years of active and honorable service as a stationary engineer with the Southern Pacific Company at Sacramento. The free transportation allowed him for his long service, was often used, and it was at the end of one of these trips into the Sierra Nevada Mountains, where he had gone to close up their summer home, that death overtook him. He leaves his wife, Pauline O. Napier, two daughters, two grandsons, and other relatives. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the entire branch.

Nine from this branch took advantage of the teacher training course given by the International Council of Religious Education. Some of this group have been attending these study courses for four years. All received their cards and credits after six Monday nights of attendance. This type of study, outlined in the various courses, is helpful to anyone who is interested in teaching or leadership work, and those who make such an effort to prepare for service are not only helping themselves but also the church.

Young People's Day at Crescent, Iowa

The young people of Crescent entertained one hundred young people at Underwood, Hazel Dell and Council Bluffs Branches with an all-day program November 27, which will be remembered as one of the outstanding days of 1932 activities. It was characterized by a good spirit of fellowship in the devotional service.

At the preaching hour Elder Gerald Gunsolley, of Logan, delivered a timely and instructive message which was accompanied by the power of the Spirit pointing the way for the youth to have life in fullness of spiritual and material things.

Crescent young people furnished and served the noon dinner which was prepared by the women of the home branch.

At two o'clock in the afternoon a round table discussion was held in which the program of the young people's organization was outlined by district Religious Education workers. The young are hoping that this program will bring many special days and activities for the district and for local branches. They hope for the district and every branch a young people's division the aim of which is spiritual fellowship for service to the church.

Each branch furnished two special musical numbers for the services, adding to the day's pleasure and development.

Pueblo, Colorado

Pueblo Saints wish to tell the church of the series of meetings held here last week by Brother E. P. Darnell, of Denver. He gave eleven talks, and the meetings were well attended. Two were baptized, Brother James Walker and Sister Ruth Ard. Sister Ard is the daughter-in-law of the group leader, Reuben Ard.

Many others are interested, and the Saints look forward to Brother Darnell's return. There is no elder in Pueblo, and the Saints profit greatly when an able speaker visits them even for a short time.

Several were blessed through administration, and spiritual strength was derived by those members whose homes were visited.

Shenandoah, Iowa

Priesthood Conduct Two Missions

The work of the church is moving forward in Shenandoah, and the members are determined to exert themselves this winter to show progress. They have had promise of greater blessings if they will all do their part.

The priesthood have organized and have been doing good missionary work. There are a few Saints at Red Oak, a town about twenty miles northeast of Shenandoah, also at Clarinda, about the same distance east. The priesthood have been holding services at Clarinda each Friday night since early spring, and interest is good. At Red Oak during August the meetings were discontinued until September 1. The workers hope that people at both of these missions will soon be baptized. Those who have been putting forth the effort to keep the meetings going feel confident that good will be accomplished.

Brother J. O. Rennie has been giving a series of missionary sermons, using a chart to illustrate the points he wishes to stress.

Sister Alta Royer and Brother John Topham were united in marriage September 4, at Omaha, Nebraska, by Elder Ray Whiting. They are making their home at Omaha. Alta had been the young people's leader for some time and had been quite active in other phases of the work at Shenandoah. She is greatly missed by the branch.

October 31, the young people sponsored a Halloween party, inviting the Saints at Clarinda and Red Oak.

The choir, under the direction of Sister Mayme Miller, is working on the Christmas cantata to be given Sunday evening, December 18. The young people and children's division are planning a program for Friday night, December 23.

Every two weeks a young people's prayer service is held on Sunday evening. These are good meetings. Some of the themes have been "The Game of Life," "The Bargain Counter of Life," and "The Value of Friends."

Chicago, Illinois

Central Church, Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets

Many things to interest and instruct have held the attention of the Saints in the past three months. Brother Roy Healy with his chart and lectures has given information concerning latter days, reminding the members of the careless state of the people's mind and the fulfillment of certain ancient prophecies.

The two-day meeting, September 17 and 18, was an enjoyable time. A profitable afternoon was spent on Saturday, Sister Easterbrook in charge of a roundtable discussion of problems after a talk on Religious Education. Apostle J. F. Garver preached on, "Let Us Go On," in the evening.

Brother Garver was also the morning speaker Sunday. A basket lunch was enjoyed at noon. The evening service was held early to permit those from out of the city to start home before a late hour. Brother C. A. Edstrom was the evening speaker, and his theme was "Going On." Musical contributions during the day by soloists and choir, and the help of the local ministry added to the attractiveness and enjoyment of the services.

Everyone present was encouraged by the day's services, and felt a deeper desire to forge ahead in the gospel work.

Saints were glad once more to see the smiling face of Sister Sarah Tonks after an absence of five years caused by illness. She was able to attend services on that day through the kindness of Brother and Sister Sewell Carpenter.

Special services were held on rally day, October 2. At the sacrament the Saints were reminded that they must have a standard, and that standard should be Jesus the Christ and the gospel of salvation. Brother H. P. W. Keir was the evening speaker, and his theme was "God."

On October 6, President F. M. McDowell was here to preach on the theme, "Things That Abide," and the choir was present and helped as it does in practically all services.

October 13, the women's department held its first fall meeting in the home of Sister Cora Keir. Plans were laid for fall and winter work. A week later the women met at the home of Sister Fanny Rodger, and on October 27, they held a

New England dinner. Brother Roy Healy had charge of the lectures and pictures held after the meal, presenting a "Century of Progress," and a lecture on "City Racketeering." The proceeds of a bake sale, November 12, went to the sacrifice fund.

The local ministry, composed of Brothers Evans, Lowe, Olliver, Keir, Healy, and Lester, though very busy men, keep the Saints supplied with spiritual food. These are trying times, and the priesthood need the faith and prayers of the membership.

On November 6, the memorial services at Plano, Illinois, lessened the number here, yet the spirit of the occasion was felt at local services. Special prayers were had for the sick, and the evening sermon was by Brother Olliver.

During the fall Saints have visited in Chicago from Kansas City, Canada, Indiana, Detroit, and other places.

All who attended the district conference were strengthened by the voice of the Spirit through two of God's servants.

The junior choir work moves on with Sisters Bennett and Eskridge in charge. Brother Steve Lester carries on the Bible school work in the absence of Brother Clem Evans. Preparations are being made for a "white" Christmas service.

November 20, Brother C. A. Edstrom began a series of ten sermons.

The annual business meeting was held December 5.

While small in numbers the Wednesday evening prayer services are blessed with spiritual uplift. God is verifying his promise to be with and bless his faithful ones.

Kansas City Stake

Thanksgiving Day was observed at all local churches with a special service in the forenoon. Some also made the Wednesday evening prayer service a Thanksgiving feature.

Mount Washington Church

The month of November was a busy one for this congregation. Local members met with a group of devoted Saints at Central Church upon one occasion, evolving a plan to increase local offerings to the church, by choosing workers to call on a certain number of families each week.

The primary department worked out a plan of its own to make someone happy on Thanksgiving Day. Each child was asked to bring something each Sunday beginning about the first of the month. They brought Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, turnips, apples, canned goods of various kinds, breakfast foods, bacon, pumpkin, jellies, jams, sugar, butter, and bread. Celery and lettuce were added on Thanksgiving eve. Nine baskets were delivered to the needy. This department and its officers are to be commended for their work along this line.

The O. B. K.'s sponsored a six thirty dinner Thanksgiving eve followed by the midweek prayer meeting. About thirty-two were present.

The O. B. K. one-act drama tournament of the stake found Mount Washington present at Central Church and giving "Sabotage" on Tuesday night. This play was given to the home congregation Sunday evening, November 27, and was enjoyed by more than one hundred people of the community. Some excellent musical numbers preceded it. Eight plays were presented in the tournament.

Sioux City, Iowa

610 Center Street

Sioux City Branch has been the center of several activities since last report to the Herald. Brothers G. M. Vandel, C. E. Burnett, Harry Sevy and C. J. Smith have shared the task of imparting able and beneficial instruction to the congregation. Sermons have been delivered which unquestionably were dictated by a divine spirit.

Sunday night, November 20, there was a splendid sermon by Brother Clem Evans, of Chicago. The timely subject and the evident spiritual presence accompanying Brother Evan's sincere desire to fulfill his task made this sermon one to be remembered by all. Many of his statements fit the conditions in this group, and served in a measure to shake the members out of the lethargic state of false security into which they have drifted. Brother Evans is a stranger here, but the problems he brought up are those faced by every member of the church. It is understood that there is a possibility Brother Evans will locate in Sioux City.

The program commemorating the centennial birthday of Joseph Smith was most interesting. C. J. Smith, C. E. Burnett, G. M. Vandel, and Harry Sevy contributed talks concerning the late President of the church and various periods of his life. Brother J. F. Dickey told of personal experiences and contacts he had had with Brother Joseph. The music used was composed of songs written by Brother Joseph.

For a few weeks both groups of women have turned their attention to quilts. An all-day meeting was held at the home of Sister Bessie Johnson and a number of comforters were tied. An all-day meeting of the Riverside group at the home of Sister Emmerson made it possible for the women to quilt a quilt they had made and sold. On the same day the Central Group met at the home of Sister Romona Burnett where they sewed for Sister Haviland. Such activities are swelling the treasury little by little.

Thanksgiving Day brought the usual morning service, a thirty-minute prelude of organ music by Genevieve Sands. This included a number of Thanksgiving hymns along with an anthem, "Thanks Be to God." Pastor George Vandel delivered a Thanksgiving sermon, and Raymond Smith sang "Count Your Blessings."

Plans for the Christmas program are now being carried out. Sister Florence Tiller has some excellent material for work, and Sister Genevieve Sands is chairman of the junior Sunday school program.

Independence

As soon as every member of the young people's council of the congregations in Independence has filed his inventory and made arrangements to pay his tithing, the council hopes to initiate a program among all the young people, leading to a fuller compliance with the financial law of the church. The council invited Elder T. A. Beck to speak on the financial law, at its regular meeting Monday night, November 29, and took steps to carry out such a program.

This council is a group of about twenty-five young men and women whose purpose is to stimulate interest in activities that concern the eighteen hundred young people of the church in Independence. Roy E. Settles, of Second Church, is president of the council.

Stone Church

Christmas Day will be appropriately observed by the Stone Church congregation. The morning services from nine thirty until noon will be in charge of the primary, junior, intermediate and young people's departments of the church school. The children hope to make this a "singing Christmas" for their home congregation. There will be numerous Christmas carols by the congregation and different choruses in addition to a variety of other Christmas program features.

From four-thirty until 5.45 in the afternoon the public is invited to attend the annual performance of Handel's "Messiah," sung by one hundred and twenty-five voices of the Independence Messiah Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. Soloists this year will be Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley, soprano; Mrs. S. A. Burgess, contralto; Edward Brackenbury, tenor, and Albert Brackenbury, bass; organist, Robert Miller, and pianist, George Miller. The oratorio will be broadcast at this hour from the church over KMBC. A silver offering will be taken at the close of the performance.

There will be no eight o'clock service on Christmas Day, all families of the congregation being free to spend Christmas Night around their own firesides.

The spirit of love and peace dominated the last sacrament service of the year for the Stone Church congregation. During this hour the needs of the church, the needs of the sick, the afflicted, the troubled, and, indeed, the needs of all, were called to the attention of the worshippers.

Under the leadership of Pastor J. F. Sheehy, a large congregation partook of the emblems, and it was appropriate that Brother Sheehy read the story of the Savior's birth as it is recorded by Luke.

In the stand assisting Brother Sheehy in the service were President Elbert A. Smith, Elders D. S. McNamara, H. G. Barto and C. Ed. Miller, and Bishops R. T. Cooper and J. S. Kelley.

Toward the close of the hour the congregation was asked to give a few minutes to silent meditation and prayer while the organist played "Silent Night, Holy Night." Then Elder C. Ed. Miller gave a special prayer.

Elder John F. Sheehy was the speaker Sunday evening at the Stone Church. Music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir.

Among those whom death has called from this congregation in the past few days was Sister Mary Ellen Blodgett, seventy-seven years old, wife of Caleb Blodgett, who passed away November 27, at her home. The funeral was held from the Stone Church, November 29. Sister Blodgett is survived by her husband; three sons, two daughters, several grandchildren, and many friends.

The funeral of Brother Joseph H. Winn, seventy-two years old, was conducted December 1, at the Stahl's Funeral Home, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Brother Winn had lived in Independence fifteen years and passed away November 29, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. F. W. Holm. He leaves his widow, Mrs. Oda I. Winn; fine daughters, three sons, a brother, and nine grandchildren.

Brother Charles E. Laudie received fatal injuries when a car struck him Saturday night, December 3. He was taken to the Independence Sanitarium where he died three hours after the accident. He was born February 27, 1859, at Wadesboro, North Carolina, and has belonged to the church since 1914. Left to mourn are his wife, two sons, two daughters, and other relatives.

Walnut Park Church

Sacrament service Sunday morning was in charge of Pastor Frank McDonald, assisted by Elders George Jenkins and M. T. Williams. The emblems were served to a large gathering of Saints, the church being completely filled. Two babies were blessed during the service, Richard Blair Mitchell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack G. Mitchell, Elders C. K. Green and W. T. Gard officiating; and Virginia LaRena Morford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth A. Morford, Elders George E. Harrington and George Jenkins pronouncing the blessing. Elder Harrington is the baby's great-grandfather.

The Walnut Park Religion continues to grow. Two hundred and twenty-five were in attendance Sunday evening. The interesting program following the classes consisted of two male quartet numbers by the priesthood quartet composed of Brothers Moorman, Blackburn, Closson, and Chapman; two numbers by an intermediate girls' chorus, directed by Lois Butterworth; two readings by Jessie Anderson; a vocal solo by Sisters Marian Campbell and Carlotta Norman; and a five-minute talk by Elder Royden Barnhardt. Vernon Sackman is president of the Religio, and Fern Price, vice president.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

A good attendance was also present to hear Elder R. D. Weaver's sermon at the evening service.

Twenty-seven members of the Swastika Class of the Sunday school attended a "kid" party Friday evening, December 2, at the home of Audrey Horn, a member of the class. Each "child" brought one pound of some nonperishable food, to be turned over to the officials for distribution to the needy. From the size of the pile of groceries received, it is suspected that some brought more than a pound. Prizes were won by Vida Duzan and Kenneth Morford, teacher of the class. The engagement of two members of this class was recently announced. They are Katherine Price, a member of the social committee, and Max Smith, vice president of the class during the past year, who recently moved to Princeton, Kansas.

Spring Branch Church

The sacrament service was in charge of Pastor G. W. Eastwood and Elders Robert Fish and John Bozarth, and a harmonious hour was enjoyed.

Pastor Eastwood talked to the church school Sunday morning.

At the evening church school hour Englewood congregation presented a splendid program: a double quartet number, "Come Close to the Savior," readings, "In the Morning," "My Neighbor Over the Way," and "Betty's Cow," and a violin solo, besides other vocal selections.

Elder J. A. Gardner was the evening speaker, and Francis Tankard sang "Lovest Thou Me?"

Last Friday night, "The Spinsters' Convention," was given at the church, nearly a full house enjoying the play.

The weekly prayer meetings, Wednesday evening and Sunday morning, were well attended and a good spirit prevailed.

"Mother, I have found a dusty thing High on the shelf—just a book."
"Why that's a Bible, Tommy dear; Be careful—that's God's book."
"God's book!" the child exclaimed,
"Then mother, before we lose it We'd better send it back to God For you know we never use it."

Houston, Texas

Doing All They Can to Make Their Sacrifice Offering Large

Keen interest is being manifested by the membership of this branch during the sacrifice period of the church. And in spite of the depression and other drawbacks much is being accomplished in the raising of funds.

The women's group is doing its bit to raise money. They seem to be trying to outdo the men of the branch by initiating activities which will increase their sacrifice gift to the general church.

A movement is now under way among the women for every one of them to pay in two dollars. This was suggested by Sister L. T. Mitchell after she read the Herald which stated that there are fifty-five thousand women over eighteen years of age in the church. If all these women were doing their full financial share, the church would be well cared for. Sister Mitchell conveyed her thoughts on raising funds to the women's group, and in a day or two they raised more than forty-six dollars. Before the sacrifice period is over, they are confident that every woman in the branch will have paid her two dollars.

Nor have Houston women contented themselves with what they alone can sacrifice. They have written personal letters to every part of the district, asking the women's groups to make their contributions equal Houston's.

The men, too, under the able leadership of Brother C. G. Pierce, are doing their part. They have distributed pledge cards and are gratified with the wholehearted response.

Never before has a greater interest been manifested among the people of this branch than is being exhibited at this time. To help the church in its hour of need helps the individual members.

You have never the complete Christian message until you reach the great word, "service." Christianity is not a vision or a thought or a dream; it is action, conduct, life. The goal of the Christian faith is not theoretical knowledge, but practical power.—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

This is the year for worthwhile Christmas presents. The Herald Office offers a wide assortment.

Conference Notices

The District Conference of Northwestern Iowa will convene December 10 and 11, at Missouri Valley, Iowa. All statistical reports, please send at once to Mrs. W. R. Adams, district secretary, Logan, Iowa. The election of district officers and the matter of the disorganization of the Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Branches, will be up for consideration. We urge a goodly attendance at this conference. This is sacrifice period and you should support the church with your presence. President F. M. Smith, Patriarch Albert Carmichael, and Missionary E. Y. Hunker will be present to assist in the conference work.—Mrs. W. R. Adams, secretary.

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—District conference convened with First Chicago Branch, October 29 and 30. A nice program was given Friday evening. Two good prayer services were held, one Saturday morning, the other Sunday afternoon, and the gifts of the gospel were manifested to the edification of all. Business session of the conference opened Saturday morning with reading of reports, etc. Brothers John F. Garver, R. E. Davey, and C. A. Edstrom in charge. Bishop's Agent A. O. Skinner reported having received from October 1, 1931, to September 30, 1932: Tithes, $5,209.35; offerings, $1,178.82; Christmas offerings, $889.88; oblation, $515.38; College Day collection, $59.44; Auditorium fund, $49.65; surplus, $2, and birth offering, .50. Total, $7,905.02. It was moved, seconded, and carried that this conference consecrate the $600 annual interest of the current year to the general church in harmony with the financial law, to be used according to the judgment of general church officers. The following district officers were elected: President, R. E. Davey; counselors, H. P. W. Keir and C. A. Edstrom; secretary, Grace E. Johnson; treasurer, C. C. Simpson; director of Religious Education, Clara B. Easterbrook; director of music, Ruby I. Newman; publicity agent, Harold McCaig, jr.; bishop's agent, A. O. Skinner. The preaching was of high order. The sermons were delivered by John F. Garver, R. E. Davey, and C. A. Edstrom. The church school was in charge of Sister Clara Easterbrook. C. A. Edstrom taught the adult class. He is an efficient and forceful instructor. John Peterson gave a wonderful talk on "God's Investment in Us" to the school. While the priesthood meeting was being held the women's department held a profitable and instructive session. The Spirit of the Father prevailed throughout the conference and was manifested by the peaceful communion of Saints. The hospitable feeling present in all branches of the district was again manifested by Chicago Saints at the conference.

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—Semiannual conference business session was held at Central Church, November 21, at 7.45 p. m. The stake presidency, Cyril E. Wight, Charles D. Jellings, and C. George Mesley were in charge, associated with C. A. Skinner and F. S. Anderson, stake bishop and counselor. Also President Frederick M. Smith and Apostle J. F. Garver were invited to occupy seats on the platform; Sister Maude W. Gunsolley was secretary. After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting by the secretary, President Wight announced that Elder C. A. Selbe, formerly pastor of Bennington Heights and until recently pastor of Northeast and Gladstone Churches, and a member of the Stake High Council, had passed away at nine o'clock that morning. As a mark of respect to him the conference stood for a moment. A report from the stake high council recommending to ordination C. C. Babb, Central Church, to office of priest and Raymond Gerber to office of teacher, and Mason Stobaugh to the office of deacon, the latter two of Mount Washington Church, was read, accepted, and the ordinations provided for. The report of Stake

Missionary J. Charles May was read. It recounted his assistance to the pastor of Gladstone Church as part of his work for the past six months. Elders R. L. Goold and E. P. Sanders had resigned their pastorates of Armourdale Church, and the stake presidency had supplied the help temporarily needed to carry on. As the congregation had no men to occupy as permanent leaders, it asked the conference to continue their supervision of Armourdale Church. This was ordered by motion. The temporary stake auditing committee, appointed since the May conference, had audited the stake bishop's books and found them correct. By motion the conference ordered the appointment of a permanent auditing committee, and the chair announced the reference of this matter to the high council. Stake Bishop Skinner's financial report showed receipts, including $2,238.07 on hand January 1, 1932, of $24,963.50, and disbursements of $24,345.50. Balance on hand October 31, 1932, $618.51. The stake presidency's report was a complete document, copies of which had been placed in the hands of the workers two weeks previous to the convening of the conference. It was based on a survey of the needs of the stake conducted during the past year by the stake high council. Matters emphasized were leadership, inactivity, defined functions of the priesthood, priesthood preparation and activity, quorum activity, social service missionary emphasis, church decorum, social activities, church school workers, women's department, O. B. K.'s, Men's club, value of stake organization, services on conference Sunday, local business meeting, stake publication, organization, baptisms, future missionary emphasis, type of structures, location, local improvements, local funds, means of raising funds, budget, building fund, and general finance. Before submitting the report to the conference, President Wight stated that there were four goals it was hoped would be kept in the minds of the workers, viz: (1) Enlarging our loyalties; (2) Inspiring individual response; (3) Increasing participation, and (4) Enlarging our spiritual resources. As the measures of the report were nearly all administrative, only three were acted upon by the conference: (A) Local business meetings, three each year—(1) In the month of May, to approve the pastoral appointments and to select nominees for church school; (2) In June, to elect church school officers; (3) In the first week in December to consider and approve the budget of the local congregation. (B) Closing all local churches all day on conference Sundays. (C) Providing for a committee of three in each local to prepare a budget of all anticipated items of expense in consultation with the stake bishopric whose duty will be to limit all buying within the budget, to take effect December 1. All three were adopted by the conference, which was then adjourned. Before leaving, President F. M. Smith addressed the congregation for a few minutes, asking them what they were going to do with the document they had just considered, urging them to loyalty to God, the church, and its officers. Apostle Garver also responded briefly to a request to speak. As a whole the conference in point of spirituality and amount of responsibility taken on, is the best in years. Everything was done in a fine spirit.

SOUTHERN WISCONSIN.—District conference was held at Madison, November 12 and 13. On Friday night there was a sermon by Elder J. E. Vanderwood. Saturday's 10.30 prayer service was in charge of Lee Root and J. E. Vanderwood. "Growth" was the theme. At 2 p. m. the district presidency, associated with Apostle J. F. Garver, were chosen to preside over the conference. Reports were read. The bishop's agent's report showed total receipts for the first nine months, $1,024.67. A letter came from Milwaukee Branch expressing appreciation for the help the district officers and priesthood had given them during the year. After the reports, Brother Garver gave a talk. The seven o'clock service was a business meeting and election of officers. The district president presented the name of Lee Root to be ordained to the office of elder subject to the approval of the conference. The recommendation was approved, and the ordination provided for. The district president made the following recommendations to the district: (1) That the number of all-day meetings be increased, where possible two or more branches meetings together; (2) More priesthood meetings where the priesthood and men not holding the priesthood can get together from two or three branches; (3) Give more time and attention to the musical part of the meetings; (4) Let the young people feel their responsibility in the church by putting on young people's services, demonstrating their idea of what they think the services should be. H. W. Woodstock was elected district president; associates chosen were George Noble and Harry Wasson; district clerk, Leda Colbert; director of Religious Education, Harry Wasson; musical director, Irene Walker; financial agent, Charles Hoague. Discussion was held relative to insurance on East Delavan Church. Some suggestions on Religious Education were read and passed over to the director of that department for further action. The district budget is to remain the same as last year: District president, $75; director of Religious Education, $28.25; district clerk, $11.25. The amount to be collected from the seven branches of the district. At 8.30 there was a sermon by Apostle Garver. The 8.30 prayer service Sunday morning was in charge of the presidency; church school at 9.45 in charge of the local director, Lee Root, assisted by Harry Wasson, district director. "Growth" was the theme, and a program was carried out. At 11 o'clock the young people's service was unified with church school, and the theme was "My Lord and I." This consisted of instrumental music, Scripture reading, quartet and duet numbers, hymns by the congregation, and a theme talk by Apostle Garver. Dinner was served in the dining room of the church by the Gleaners. At 1.30 came the priesthood meeting. Apostle Garver gave the talk and invited all who desired to listen. At 2.30 Lee Root was ordained an elder. The prayer of blessing was by George Noble. The charge was given by J. E. Vanderwood. The ordination was by Apostle J. F. Garver and Elder H. W. Woodstock, after which Brother Garver preached a sermon on "Be True to Your Vision." After this meeting, conference adjourned subject to the call of the district presidency. At 5 p. m. vesper service was in charge of Lee Root. There was special music by the choir, and a sermon by J. E. Vanderwood. Branches represented at the conference were Milwaukee, Evansville, Janesville, Beloit, and Lancaster.

NAUVOO.—District conference met in the Saints' church at Burlington, Iowa, November 5 and 6, the district presidency presiding. The following officers were elected for the year: District presidency, Elders F. T. Mussell, Charles Fry, and A. L. Sanford; secretary, W. H. Gunn; treasurer, H. F. Bromann; chorister, Sophie Lee; superintendent of Religious Education, Arnold Ourth; reunion committee, the district presidency and J. C. Page, W. Wood, A. Lee, and E. Sherman. The 1933 conference will be held in June at Fort Madison, Iowa; November, 1933, conference at Nauvoo, Illinois. The recommendation of Burlington Branch that Brother Leonard Duke be ordained to the office of priest was approved. Short speeches on the general outlook of the work were made by J. F. Garver, L. G. Holloway, and Charles Fry. Sunday services began with a priesthood meeting

During this service a manifestation of the Spirit was given through Apostle J. F. Garver. The afternoon service was given to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the late Joseph Smith. Basket dinner was served in the basement of the church to the large number assembled for the Sunday services. L. G. Holloway remained at Burlington following the conference, and conducted a two-weeks' series of meetings.

Our Departed Ones

KLEINHAUS.—Mary M. Kleinhaus was born July 13, 1849, in the vicinity of Camp Perry, Ottawa County, Ohio. Departed this life October 22, 1932. She was baptized in June, 1913, into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Lake Erie by S. W. L. Scott. Identified with Oak Harbor Branch, she was true to the faith until called to go. Loved and mourned by all, she was laid to rest October 24. Elder S. W. L. Scott preached the funeral sermon to a large crowd of people who packed the church. She leaves to mourn, her husband, seven children, seventeen grandchildren, thirty-eight great-grandchildren, two great-great-grandchildren, two sisters, and many devoted friends. Committal services were in the cemetery near the church.

FISHEL.—Mary Maranda Fishel was born June 3, 1846, at Manchester, New Hampshire, and died at the home of her son, Albert Fishel, at Newton Falls, October 14, 1932. December 10, 1866, she was united in marriage to Warren H. Fishel, of Southington, Ohio, who preceded her in death January 16, 1918. To them were born eight children, seven of whom are still living. Wesley O. passed away June 4, 1906. Those who are left are Lucious, Ernest, Elmer, Albert, Mrs. Ida Ingraham, of Diamond, Ohio; Mrs. Jessie Bailey, of Newton Falls, Ohio, and Mrs. Mabel Bushwell, of Plainesville, Ohio. There are also seventeen grandchildren, and ten great-grandchildren. In early youth she was united with the church to which she was faithful throughout the years. The funeral was conducted by Elder John L. Cooper at the Newton Falls Funeral Home.

FARLEY.—Mary Ann Stone was born on October 3, 1865, at Kewanee, Illinois. Her father died when she was but a baby. Some time later, her mother again married, this time to Alfred S. Fletcher; and in the year, 1880, the family moved to Lucas, Iowa. While living in Lucas, in her youth, she became a member of the Methodist Church. It was also in Lucas that she became acquainted with William E. Farley to whom she was married March 26, 1884. To this union were born fourteen children, six sons and eight daughters. Two sons and two daughters preceded her in death.

In 1886, she and her husband and family moved to Streator, Illinois; and there they came in contact with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of which church they became members in the year 1887. She was a faithful and devoted member of the church and an earnest student of the church books, especially of the Book of Mormon. In her husband's work as an elder in the church, she was a great help by reason of her devotion and her diligence in study. An unfinished garment which she was making as a contribution to help in raising needed church funds, today gives its own mute testimony to her devotion to the work of the Lord. About the year 1896, the Farley family moved to Durango, Colorado, where they have made their home almost continually since that time. Mrs. Farley was a charter member of the LaPlata Circle number 190, Neighbors of Woodcraft; and the ladies of that organization had charge of the concluding services at the grave. She passed from this life at her home in Durango, Colorado, after an illness of only four days, October 25, 1932, at 3.05 a. m. She leaves to mourn her departure, her husband, four sons, six daughters, twenty-eight grandchildren, and a host of other relatives and friends.

WATSON.—Albert Watson was born at Sheffield, England, March 25, 1893; died November 1, 1932, at Mountain Home, Pennsylvania. He married Josie Edith Stethem, April 3, 1919, and they made their home at Middletown, Ohio. To them were born three children, Thomas, Donald, and Jerry, all of whom with their mother survive. Besides his immediate family, there also mourn his departure his mother, two brothers, and two sisters who live in Sheffield, England, and many friends. On November 6, 1921, he united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by Elder J. D. Showers, at Middletown. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Claude D. Barker. Interment was in Wood Side Cemetery, November 5.

DIMICK.—J. T. Dimick was born at Ypsilanti, Michigan, September 12, 1851, the son of Benjamin and Marcia Dimick. He was united in marriage to Emily Myers in 1872, and to this union were born ten children, six of whom survive him: five sons: Charles G., of Pahokee, Florida; Elmer F., Lachine, Michigan; Eugene L., Hillman, Michigan; Leroy, Flint, Michigan, and Harry A., Saint Charles, Michigan, and one daughter, Marie Campbell, of the home at Independence. His wife passed away about twenty-five years ago. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder Alexander Malone, in McCormick Lake, Michigan, June 12, 1904. Was confirmed by G. W. Burt. Passed from this life after a short illness at his home in Independence, November 2, 1932, leaving a host of relatives and friends to mourn his passing. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Joseph Luff at Carson Funeral Home, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ENTRICAN.—Clifford D. Entrican was born May 1, 1905, at Peoria, Illinois, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints May 18, 1913, in Chicago. He lived for a time in Orlando, Florida. Died in the Saint Louis Hospital after an operation November 19, 1932. The funeral was at Witts' Undertaking Chapel, Elder T. J. Elliott officiating. The body was taken to Kentucky for interment.

NAPIER.—Newton Thomas Napier was born in Pacific Franklin County, Missouri, almost seventy-three years ago. He passed from earth life November 1, 1932. His family were arranging for his birthday the following week. Left to mourn his departure are his wife, Pauline O. Napier; two daughters, Mrs. Birdie M. Clark and Mrs. Pauline Napier Winslow; two grandsons, Napier Charles Clark and Alden William Clark. He was uncle of Mrs. Edna Wahl, Mrs. Hazel Blohm, Miss Orah Johnson, and Arthur Journey. There are other relatives in Saint Louis, Missouri. He made many friends and retained them. These also are left to mourn his departure. He was a home-loving man. No amount of duties at home were more than the desire of his heart. He took an active part in lodge work; being past grand officer of Industrial Lodge No. 157 of Odd Fellows and past chief patriarch of Pacific Encampment No. 2 I. O. O. F. He was active in church work, assisting financially and otherwise as his busy life allowed since his retirement as a stationary engineer with the Southern Pacific Company, of the city, where he served over forty years. The Odd Fellows conducted a beautiful service preceding the sermon by W. H. Dawson. Missionary Arthur Oakman sang "The Lord Is My Shepherd." This was a very large funeral. Interment was in Odd Fellows' Lawn Cemetery.

JONES.—Mack Herman Jones was born at McKenzie, Alabama, December 28, 1890. He grew to manhood in that community, and was married on February 3, 1911, to Miss Ruby Parker. This union was blessed with seven children, four boys and three girls: Bruce, Hugh, Gaynell, Mack, Hilda, Bonnie, and Hoyt, all of the home. He died of fatal injuries on November 3, 1932. Besides the wife and seven children who survive, are his aged mother, one brother, and three sisters. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints twenty-five years ago, being baptized by Elder T. C. Kelley. To this faith he remained true, and endeavored to carry out its principles in his family life. All who knew him recognized that in his home reigned a peace that only the gospel could motivate. The church and the community join hands to help carry on the work that Brother Herman so much loved. The funeral was held at the Pleasant Hill Church, with Undertakers Barrow and Mulleus, and Elder Lyle D. Flynn in charge. The sermon was delivered by Elder H. H. Wiggins.

LEWIS.—Evan Lewis was born November 4, 1865, at Dowlais, Glamorganshire, Wales, and passed from this life October 20, 1932, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Maude Lewis Hedgin, after an illness of three months. He married Miss Mary Ellen Prosser at Crumbach, Wales, in 1878, and to them were born nine children. Five survive him: William J. Lewis, of Archbald, Pennsylvania; Mrs. T. T. Jones, of Old Forge, Pennsylvania; Evan Walter and Albert Emyln, of Scranton, and Mrs. Maude L. Hedgin, also of Scranton. Besides his children there survive thirteen grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren. Four children and one grandchild passed away in infancy. His wife also preceded him in death in January, 1911. He accepted the gospel forty-seven years ago and was ordained an elder shortly afterward. He came to America in 1903, settling for a time in Lucas, Iowa. Then he returned East and established his home in Scranton, Pennsylvania, where he has been since 1906. Funeral services took place in the Saints' church at Scranton in charge of Elder Thomas Jones. The sermon was by Elder Richard J. Hawkins. Brother Lewis always bore a strong testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel. A humble and faithful Saint has passed on.

JONES.—Jacob Jones was born September 14, 1850, at Bradys Bend, Pennsylvania. Died October 31, 1932, at Sharpville, Pennsylvania. He married Elizabeth Davis, and to them twelve children were born. Left to mourn his departure are his wife, Elizabeth, five sons, and two daughters: David, of Conneautville, Pennsylvania; Fred, of Sharon; Jacob, of Sharpville; John, of Nutwood, Ohio; Mrs. Emma Ryhal, of Sharpville, Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Leah Winger, of Oil City, Pennsylvania; fifteen grandchildren; one great-grandchild; two brothers: David and John, of Sharon, Pennsylvania; two sisters, Mrs. Emma Artherhold, and Jennie Miller, of Sharon, with many other relatives and friends. He united with the church about forty-five years ago. Was a true, faithful member, and lived a clean, consistent, Christian life. He was loved and respected by all who knew him. Was a member of Sharon Branch. Interment was in Lakewood Cemetery, Sharon, Pennsylvania.

Bread

Day after day I see them going down the street with their baskets, selling bread. For the past week there has been snow on the ground, and biting winds from the north. Their faces are red with cold, and their hands chapped. The other night another storm laid down a deeper carpet of snow, the mercury dropped several degrees, and there was a sharper edge in the wind. But they continue to go about their work. I hope that they don't get the "flu" which has reached the proportions of an epidemic. I hope that they are warm, but when I look at their youthful figures plowing along through the snow, I can not be sure. I think they must be cold.

Last year they were at Graceland, and they made good records for themselves. Fine, earnest, hard-working youngsters—a credit to their families, a credit to the church, a credit to themselves. This year they didn't have the money to go back. They couldn't get the kind of jobs to which their talents and their partially completed training have fitted them.

They are regular church workers, steady and dependable. On special occasions, both of them have turned out some masterly little speeches. Church people already entertain great hope for their future services.

The selling of bread is an honest business at any time, rightly conducted. Under these circumstances I think that there is something noble in it. These two young people ought to be in college, and at their lessons. But they can't be, and they are doing the best thing they can find to do. And they aren't complaining.

They don't look like martyrs. They are always cheerful when you see them, and they know how to smile. The effort may be hard, but it doesn't make them discouraged.

I often feel ashamed of the social inequality that puts me into a warm place to work, and puts them out in the cold. I feel the reproach of offended justice when I pass them. I wish that they could be helped, but there seems to be nothing I can do at present.

One year—or even two or three—lost can not blight the hopes nor ruin the chances of such young people as these. To be out of school a year is disappointing, but it is not a disaster. Others have risen above such handicaps as that, and they will rise above it. The time will come when their talents and character will claim a better recognition of the world than they are now receiving.

Our faith in them, and their faith in themselves, will not be disappointed. Such people simply can not be kept down always.

Science tells us now that life began in a few puddles of hot water in a polar depression. And the depression and the hot water are still with us.—Boston Transcript.

Driving Home a Victory

"Drive it home!" is often the call of one builder to another, as the two of them, working on some structure, are erecting the framework. The first few blows of the hammer are tentative, until the workmen can see if the timber is in the right position. When they know that everything is going to be right, they apply the hammer full force to drive the spike "home"—that is, to its resting place—to completion.

Many ingenious plans have been suggested for paying the church debt, and for raising the budget. One of the most frequently suggested ones is: "Let every member pay ten dollars, and we will be out of trouble." The plan is nice, but it would be unjust: for a small but well-to-do family it would mean a payment of perhaps twenty or thirty dollars. For a large but poor family, in which several members would be young, it would mean a payment of fifty or sixty dollars. Not only unjust but impossible. In addition, these plans find no place in the financial law provided in the revealed word.

If the church is to be saved it must be saved by obedience to its existing laws; and in this case by the law of tithing. The officers of the church believe in that law, and that is why they do not regard any other plans with much enthusiasm. When the law of tithing is more fully observed by the people, the financial difficulties of the church will be on the way to removal.

"Tithe now and tithe regularly," is the admonition that comes to us from the Presiding Bishopric.

This is the plan which is a regular part of the gospel. It provides for now, and it provides for the future. When it is observed it will produce the steady income required for the growing work of the church.

We are the builders. We have found the law of tithing a good one because of its divine origin and because of its applicability to our needs and problems. We have given the tentative blows of the hammer and tested the soundness of the work. Now we are ready to drive it home.

Hit the nail on the head! Tithe now, and tithe regularly! Drive home a victory.

"Riches Untold"

An absorbing new serial story, "Riches Untold," by Florence Tracey, will begin in the Herald for January 4, 1933. This story will especially appeal to young readers, but we imagine that the older ones will insist on a chance to read it first! It will run for twenty issues of the Herald and ought to help solve the problem of what to do in the home as long as the bad weather lasts.

In this story the author takes a group of characters such as we may all recognize among the church members who live in Independence.

Frankly this is an experiment to see whether the great body of our readers will like stories in the Herald. All we ask is that you reserve judgment until you have read three chapters of the story. After that we shall be ready to hear from you.

Meanwhile—have you renewed your Herald subscription lately? Better look it up and make sure.

Unity Promoted

Adversity has always been a factor in promoting better religious and church conditions. In times of prosperity there is an inclination to rely too much upon our own strength; but in times when things go wrong we are brought to our senses and learn again that trust in God is of prime importance in our lives.

Throughout the church we are suffering from the hard times brought about by untoward industrial and economic conditions, but a finer spiritual condition is surely developing. Many signs of this appear. In church work as in other activities divisions occur, and mistakes amplified by stubbornness and perversity separate friends and multiply trouble. Bitterness may develop and the effectiveness of branch and even general church work be hindered, retarded, and offset by the resultant disunity. To see this always brings pain and sorrow.

Under the softening effects of times of trouble, these differences are often smoothed out, hard feelings melted, and unity once more established. One such instance we present to our readers. In a letter to the Presidency one who had just been reelected to the position of presiding elder writes as follows:

"This branch has for twenty odd years been divided into two main factions. An elder of the second generation of this faction and an elder of a third were chosen to be my counselors. These men are, in all other respects, preeminently fitted for the responsibility, but have resultantly been mal-adjusted most all of their lives. It was a beautiful sight to see these stalwart men, in the presence of one of the Twelve and me, clasp hands, and with tears streaming down their manly faces, adjust past difficulties and pledge to do all in their power to correct past wrongs and misunderstandings and try to unite all the Saints in the all-important cause of Christ. This was one of the happiest experiences I have had and I pray that a lasting and far-reaching benefit may come to this people."

What has taken place in this branch has in different ways been manifested in other places. There is still room for improvement in many places; but there is encouragement in the evidences that a spirit is at work among us making towards greater unity. Let us make all the efforts we can towards perfect unity.

F. M. S.

Myths grow up round famous people which it takes bold men to dispel. Loose opinions pronounced by irresponsible people are crystallized, and Samson himself would be helpless to pull down an edifice conceived in Vanity, based on Misconstruction, built on Rumor and cemented by Gossip. . . . Men must be judged by their characters and not their conduct, as no man's habitual self covers this whole nature.—Margot Asquith.

Holding to Our Standards

Recently there was a letter sent out by the secretary of the Iowa Creameries Association to the various members of that body. There are several things in the communication of interest to the creameries and to others, and one of these is here brought to the attention of our readers. Comment is made upon the "educational work" done by the Association which in cost runs into sums of six figures. After speaking briefly of the results of this work the following paragraph occurs:

"We know that farmers, generally, do not appreciate the value of advertising their products, but we are now convinced that the prospect of having a new competitor in the field, that of alcoholic beverages, particularly beer and wines, means a necessity for redoubling our efforts. We also have another competitor, and that is coffee. The Brazilian government is appropriating a million dollars to advertise coffee in this country this coming year. You must remember that every dollar spent for beer and wine, and for coffee, is going to cut down the amount spent for other foods, and for clothing."

We as a people can quite heartily indorse a movement to advertise dairy products rather than alcoholic beverages and coffee—and we might add tobacco. Much to the detriment of the people of the world the pernicious advertising of tobacco, liquor, and coffee, and some other things, there has been a tremendous consumption of articles which injure health rather than conserve it. By our teachings and traditions as a people we are opposed to the use of alcohol and tobacco and in a less emphatic way to coffee and tea. We should maintain this opposition. It is greatly to be regretted that some of our people, yielding to the subtle influences of the pernicious advertising and to the lowering of moral standards are showing inclination towards lower standards in the use of narcotics, liquor and tobacco. It is wrong. We should persistently maintain the higher standards to which we have so long clung, and as a result have earned a reputation for sobriety and integrity which we can ill afford to lose.

F. M. S.

We are living in one of the most interesting periods of human history. The marvelous discoveries of science are giving us an ever-expanding universe, but an ever-contracting world. We have been thinking in the past in the terms of countries, or continents, or nationalities. Now, we must think in world terms, for we are living in a world era.—Newton W. Rowell, K. C., in The Church in the Life of the Nation.

Honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God.

How Shall We Build on Our Foundations?

"Seek Ye First to Build Up the Kingdom"

Had we held all of the children born to Latter Day Saints we would now have a very large membership. Naturally, it is too much to hope that there shall be no losses. A certain percentage will drift away, even among those carefully reared. Yet it remains true, as stated in a former article, that the home is our first line of defense in this matter. The good Latter Day Saint home leaves an influence with the children that is remembered and may bring them back to the church even after they have wandered a bit.

Years ago President W. W. Blair took occasion to exhort me about my future work, and becoming confidential, said: "I expect all of my sons to engage in church work—though Fred will do the most important work." At that time some of his sons did not seem to me to be much interested in the church. Yet Brother Blair was supremely confident in his prediction. I made a mental note of it. In time I saw it fulfilled. Two of his sons became bishops, one a deacon, one a member of the Lamoni Stake High Council, another an able Sunday school leader. There is no question that the manner of home life led by President W. W. Blair and his remarkable wife Elizabeth, and their teachings along religious lines, held those five sons (and their sister also) to the faith of their father. We need other such homes now, many of them.

THE "CHURCH SCHOOL"

Of first importance in assisting the home in holding our children to the church is the church school. (You may call it the "Church school," the "Department of Religious Education," or what not. I prefer the title, "The church school.") The Sunday school began this work, and the church school in its present form is a development of the Sunday school idea—its projection on a larger scale.

I am aware that there has been some resistance to and prejudice against the church school in years recent and remote. This may have been due to various reasons. First: there has been misunderstanding of motives and objectives. These misunderstandings can be cleared away. Second: There were rather frequent changes in forms of organization and methods of administration during a period of transition, and incident also to times of stress within the church itself, and these confused and irritated some. That period we may hope is largely past. Third: There has been a feeling on the part of a few that the church school was usurping the prerogatives of the priesthood and trying to do their tasks for them. With the whole movement in most localities much more directly under the supervision and control of the local pastorate than the old time independent Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department ever were, this feeling should subside. Fourth: Some have felt that the movement was giving its time and energies to teaching some things not fundamentally Latter Day Saint. This criticism where valid may well be heeded; but it is my feeling that today the church school in many places is engaged in an intensive study and teaching of fundamental Latter Day Saint concepts in a way that the ministry may well admire and emulate.

THE SCHOOL IDEA FUNDAMENTALLY SOUND

If mistakes have been made in the church school project, it has that in common with the church itself, and with all human undertaking even when carried on under divine direction. The factors underlying the church school and giving it reason for being are logical, they can not be refuted. It is to be remembered that in some places (even among our own people) there was intense prejudice against the Sunday school in its beginning. It was deemed a worldly innovation. However, the Sunday school proved to be a vital force in building up the church, in holding our own children to the church, and even in interesting others. Many a branch had its beginning in a little Sunday school.

The Sunday school began because good men and women observed that little children were not being reached by sermons to adults. That fact still remains in evidence, and the observation applies also to those grown somewhat older, among those termed "young people." The "Students Society" of Lamoni (of which I was a charter member) endeavored to follow in the steps of the Sunday school and reach and interest those "grown somewhat older." Out of it came the young people's organization, Zion's Religio-Literary Society. The church school now is a composite of these and other formerly independent societies: Sunday school, Religio, Women's Auxiliary, etc. All have been united through a slow process of "coordination" until their work is now an integral part of the church work, administered with the sanction and under the direction of General Conference and locally in most branches under the local church organization. The conference of 1932 gave unanimous approval to the projected program of the church school. (See Church Objectives, pages 16-19.)

THE TASK

It is a fine thing for the Saints of all ages in a given locality to meet together at intervals. That should be done. But sit in any mixed audience that is listening (?) to the average sermon to adults and look about you thoughtfully, how many of the children understand what is being said? How many of the older children and young people are interested in the sermon? Yet these children and young people may be gotten together in groups and sermons be preached to them that they will understand and that will interest them. They may be gotten into classes and the message of the church be interpreted to them in ways that will hold their interest. This is the task (in part) the church school attempts.

A CALL TO YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN

Today in most of the districts and branches there is a great need for devoted leadership in such work. It is a work that calls for outstanding young men and women, those qualified morally and intellectually, in spirit and in character, and by training to become teachers and leaders. Children and young people are accustomed to class work. It is ground with which they are familiar. Many of our young people are qualified by training to teach. No finer field can they find for service than to interpret to classes of young people the message of the church, the religion of Christ. Certainly the world needs it, and in this time of stress the church calls them to this task.

Recently we received a letter from a young man who is a university graduate and is now faculty member in a State teachers training College. He wrote that he had been chosen leader of the church school in both district and branch and teacher of the Men's Bible Class in the branch. He brings to this task years of training and experience as a teacher plus a consecrated spirit and purpose. He is but one of several. Let others similarly equipped hear and heed this call.

A CONCRETE EXAMPLE

The field may seem small—just to teach a class of ten, or perhaps more. But its possibilities are unmeasured. Years ago Brother Will Bushnell taught a class of young men in Independence. Recently the pastors of our various branches in Independence were together, and it was discovered that four of them had been pupils together in Brother Bushnell's class. Four pastors in the "center place" carrying on the message that a teacher in the church school gave them years ago! (In the same class was our well known missionary, J. Charles May, who took the message to foreign fields).

With devotion and fidelity equal to that of our old-time missionaries our workers in the church school should go forward helping to build the youth of the church upon the foundation already laid for them.

CURRENT EVENTS

What Future for Medicine?

Two reports, diverse in their recommendations, are the outcome of five years of study by a distinguished committee which was organized under the leadership of Ray Lyman Wilbur, the present Secretary of the Interior, and supported by an association of eight foundations.

The inability of many to afford the high cost of medicine under the present individualistic system, has brought the attention of the world to its inefficiency and waste, as well as its fundamental inhumanity. The growth of preventive medical science recommends something more regular in medical service than the present remedial service to which most physicians are limited.

It is interesting that the larger number of doctors who are members of the committee should recommend what might seem to be radical measures in the organization of medical practice and its application to public needs. Only a minority were in favor of continuing the present individualistic system, and that on a modified basis.

Some of the recommendations of the majority report follow as reported in the New York Times for December 4:

First, that the medical and allied services should be unified and grouped around hospitals;

Second, that public and private health services should be made "available to the entire population according to its needs";

Third, that "the costs of medical care should be placed on a group-payment basis, through the use of insurance, through the use of taxation, or through the use of both these methods";

Fourth, "that the study, evaluation and coordination of medical service be considered important functions for every State and local community, that agencies be formed to exercise these functions, and that the coordination of rural with urban services receive special attention";

Fifth, that standards of professional education should be broadened, by emphasizing preventive medicine and social elements in medical practice; by restricting specialization to those actually qualified; by widening the scope of dental education; by improved training for pharmacists and nurses; by providing training for practical nurses and nurse-midwives; and by offering opportunities "for the systematic training of hospital and clinic administrators."

It is pure dogmatism to assume that miracles can not happen. The really scientific attitude is to say that it all depends on the evidence in the case. If the alleged facts are well substantiated, then we should accept them. No preconception should stand in the way of giving the same credence to human testimony on this point as on any other.—J. Elliott Ross, in Truths to Live By.

NEWS BRIEFS

Saint Joseph Girls Sacrifice for Church

A chorus of eighteen girls of First Church, Saint Joseph, Missouri, Far West Stake, presented a concert November 12, for the purpose of securing funds to purchase new robes. They made thirty dollars.

With this money in hand the girls and their director, Mrs. Ruth E. Haden, turned to the church and gave it all as a sacrifice offering from the chorus. The singers range in age from thirteen to seventeen years.

Apostle J. F. Curtis Is Recovering

Apostle J. F. Curtis is recovering from a recent operation at the Independence Sanitarium. He has been at home convalescing for a week, and is now able to be up and about the house.

After a summer and fall of intensive work in his mission field, North Central States, Brother Curtis returned home in November for medical treatment. He entered the Sanitarium the latter part of the month.

Apostle Curtis plans to be in Independence until after the meeting of the Joint Council (Presidency, Bishopric, and Twelve) early in January.

Elder William Osler Pastor at Edmonton

Elder William Osler, for nineteen years a General Conference appointee, but now released, is pastor of the thriving branch at Edmonton, Alberta. Under his leadership, interest and attendance at all services are increasing, and his excellent sermons are attracting the attention of friends of the church.

Things Are Happening

"It was like getting back home," says President Elbert A. Smith of his recent trip to California which he made on church business. Brother and Sister Smith went to California on their first mission thirty-two years ago.

Twenty-five have been baptized into the church at Saint Thomas, Ontario, this year, according to a recent report.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson conducted a special series of lectures at the Brooklyn, New York, church from November 27 to December 4.

Among recent visitors and helpers at Port Huron, Michigan, have been Apostle D. T. Williams whose sermon theme was "A God Who Speaks Today," and the district president, Elder B. E. Brown.

Record-breaking crowds were had at the Saint

Louis district conference at which President Frederick M. Smith was guest speaker and helper December 2, 3, and 4. More than three hundred participated in the sacrament service on Sunday.

Elder H. I. Velt Lectures on Ancient America

Elder Harold I. Velt continues to tell the story of ancient America to the people of the Northwest. He has taken his series of lectures and stereopticon lantern into many cities, attracting and holding the interest of the people.

The Sherwood Valley News (Sherwood, Oregon) of a November date, carries a press story of his lectures in the Sherwood Mission Hall. Brother Velt illustrates his theme, "The Riddle of American Origins," showing rare pictures of the remains of the ancient civilizations of Mexico, Central America, and Peru, and giving evidences of advanced culture in architecture, mathematics, astronomy, chronology, surgery, engineering, and agriculture.

Veteran Elders Baptize Ten

Elders Joseph Lane and T. J. Bell, both eighty-one years old, concluded a three-week series of services at the Downey Schoolhouse, Harrison County, Missouri, November 6, baptizing ten, eight adults and two children. They also blessed three babies. Their sermons on doctrinal principles challenged the attention and the investigation of a number. Both ministers have served the church long and faithfully. Their faith is strong, their zeal unabated.

Slogan for Spring River District

"Every Saint a tithepayer and the Saints' Herald in every home," was the slogan given by District President Amos T. Higdon for Spring River District during the coming year at the conference at Joplin a few days ago.

The district young people's organization took prominent part in this conference. General church officials present to help district workers in the program of the conference were President Elbert A. Smith, Apostle J. F. Garver, Brother Higdon, and Missionary Lee Quick.

After the conference Apostle Garver and Elder Higdon visited several branches in the district on their way to Springfield to attend the Southern Missouri conference December 2, 3, and 4. Brother Quick went to Carthage to begin a series of meetings.

"The Gentle Art of Growing Up"

By L. B. M.

THE more I see of men and women the more conscious I become of the need of us all for a greater acquaintance with the gentle art of growing up. At no time in its history has the world had greater need of men, full grown in body, mind, and spirit, well-balanced, kindly, generous, helpful, and honest.

Perhaps this need has existed in some measure since the world began. I am inclined to think it has. The actions of Adam and Eve were essentially childish. At least we know that the need extended back to the days of the early Christians. The Apostle Paul recognized it among the Corinthians and wrote in his first letter to them: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things."

True it is that Jesus himself exalted the state of childhood. He commanded his disciples to allow the people to bring their children to him that he might bless them, and he said, "Of such is the kingdom of God." And then he took the little ones in his arms and blessed them. In this little drama, one of the most beloved that the Scriptures record, Christ taught his followers the lesson that men must be as little children if they would receive the kingdom of heaven. They must enjoy and cherish the faith of childhood, the hope, the gentleness, the meekness, the loveliness.

Childhood is indeed one of the most attractive periods of the life span. The normal adult loves children and delights in their sweetness and innocence, but he expects, after a stated interval, that the child will change, will grow up. He expects children to be under twenty-five years of age and six feet in height. When children are small we take it for granted that they will act as children, but when they are grown, we expect them as Paul stated it, to "put away childish things."

Growing up is not an easy thing. When I mentioned my theme to a certain young fellow who is still engaged in the business of growing up, he said, "The gentle art of growing up?"

Growing up, the condition of approaching maturity from the pathways of youth, involves physical, intellectual, spiritual, social and economic adjustments and relationships which most of us never effect to our entire satisfaction. It involves continuous change in the direction of improvement, increased understanding, learning, and application.

At no time in his life can a person say, "Now I am fully and completely grown," and let it go at that. Instead we must all try to be big and understanding, kind and considerate, clean and neat; to control ourselves, and to do all those things which make us likeable, helpful members of society.

To be fully grown we must be the best kind of a Christian we can and the best kind of a Latter Day Saint.

Would that all of us might carry in our hearts at every hour of every day the words of Paul: "And when I became a man, I put away childish things." Would that every one of us might live with a clear vision of the Christ who "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." This applies to us in all our relationships. First in our homes. How much happier a world we should have if we remembered and taught our children by "precept and example" to bear in mind that home is not a dumping ground for all our grouches, ill feelings, and discourtesies. It applies in our club work, at choir practice, at play rehearsals, in our women's meetings, in class work, in community movements, and even in our priesthood work and meetings.

All of us supposed-to-be grown-ups are equally culpable of childishness. The artist, the musician, the writer, and others disguise theirs under the term "temperament." Men and women show their childishness in much boasting, in easily hurt feelings, in public pouting, in utter lack of self-control, in conceit, in selfishness, in helplessness, in succumbing to flattery.

Here is a man who gets a certain idea in his head. He really does not know anything about the subject, but he has an idea anyway. All the argument and all the proof to the contrary will not change him. He has no use for proof—figures can lie, you know. He hasn't the patience or the courtesy to consider logical argument. Instead he turns his face away and says: "I believe it is still so-and-so." Childish? Quite.

Here is a woman who is always left out, poor soul. When people do things they don't consider her; they don't ask her first—just go right ahead, and then her feelings are hurt. Childish? Also quite.

Here is a young person whose attitude is: The church doesn't care about us young people. It's against us and our interests. It caters to the old

The paper here presented is a summary of a discussion given by the author before the To-ko-lon Class of young people which meets in the Auditorium under the leadership of Mrs. C. C. Koehler. Economic Law and the Problems of Property

By James G. Maitland

Our purpose in this discussion was to discover, through a process of inductive reasoning, why it is impossible to maintain a state of economic equality and social justice in a society which countenances the institution of private property in land. We found the great cause of inequality in the distribution of wealth to be inequality in the ownership of land; for when we make it possible for the few to gain absolute control of the land upon which the many depend for subsistence, we give to the few the power to control the many. This truth is aptly exemplified by the conditions prevailing today in the coal fields of eastern Kentucky and West Virginia where the operators own everything above the surface and everything below the surface, and hence dictate to the people where they shall buy their merchandise; how they shall vote; what they shall be taught from schoolroom, pulpit, and press; and when they shall be allowed to work. So great is that monopolistic power that groups of visiting reformers and investigators are forcibly ejected with impunity and without recourse.

A DANGER IN PRIVATE PROPERTY

We learned that the institution of private property in land is a great wedge driven, not under the whole of society to lift it up to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, as our forefathers imagined; but rather through the heart of society to elevate a nonproductive group to a life of luxury and idleness at the expense of the producers, while it grinds the laboring classes farther and farther down the scale of living and condemns millions in the lower strata to a life of hopeless, helpless poverty and virtual slavery. The writers of our Constitution, better versed in political alchemy than in economic truths, sought to guarantee to man his inalienable rights, but in reality they defeated their own purpose by establishing a system that inevitably robs the laborer of the fruits of his toil. They guaranteed that we should be political sovereigns all right, but at the same time they doomed us to become economic slaves. There is no such thing as an inalienable right of any man to any portion of the land.

There is not a private title nor a private claim to a piece of land anywhere in the world that could be maintained in a court of justice—could we find a court that administered justice. They would all trace back to the right of conquest or to a conveyance through fraud or deceit. It is a matter of common justice that all titles based on fraud or force should be held invalid.

Now we may draw an analogy between a sick individual and a distressed society. The ill person may choose between the practitioner who diagnoses the symptoms and treats the effects, and the one who analyzes the case to determine the cause, then removes the same, and sees the effects disappear. And so it is with the suffering social organism. There is but one way to remedy an evil, and that is to remove its causes. Poverty deepens as wealth increases, and wages are forced down as productive power grows, because land, which is the source of all wealth and the field of all labor, is monopolized. To extirpate poverty, and to make wages what justice demands they should be, the full earnings of the laborer, we must therefore substitute for the individual ownership of land—a common ownership.

THE NEED OF JUSTICE

Thus, through immutable economic law we have gained a theoretical answer to our dilemma—but what of its practical aspects? First, in order to be consistent with our first premise we should define a term we have used several times and which we shall stress hereafter. Justice, as we use the term in this discussion, is synonymous with our concept of the terms equality, liberty and freedom, and means a recognition of the moral law of the universe. Such abstract terms are seldom adequately defined, but I like Plato's concept of justice. He declares that justice is the having and doing what is one's own. In other words, a just man is a man in just the right position for which he is qualified, doing his best, and giving to society the full equivalent of what he receives. A society grounded in

QUESTION TIME

Was Jesus actually of the "seed of David" as the prophets predicted of Messiah?

Matthew and Luke do not give all of the same names in tracing the genealogy of Jesus to David. One names Heli as the father of Joseph, while the other names Jacob. Three explanations of this are thought possible. One is that a mistake was made by some scribe in copying the scripture. Another is that the writer does not attempt to name every one in the ancestral line, the term "son" sometimes meaning ancestral descent. A third is that one of the writers names persons through the lineage of Mary, who was said to be Joseph's cousin.

The last named supposition seems to be supported by the Talmudic writings, in which Mary is called the daughter of Heli. In any event, it is believed that no real conflict in results would obtain, from the fact that both Mary and Joseph were said to be of the lineage of David. No objection to the records was made by the Jews of the first century, which would probably have occurred if there were a known error in the genealogy. As Joseph was in Jewish law the legal father of Jesus, his legal lineage would thus be established, as well as his real lineage by Mary. Paul was a learned Jew, yet he affirmed that Jesus was of the seed of David "according to the flesh" (Romans 1: 3).

If the saints shall inherit the earth, who shall occupy the new heaven?

When the new heaven and new earth, promised in Revelation 21: 1, shall appear, the first heaven and earth shall be "passed away." This indicates a new era and order of life to take the place of the old. Isaiah has foretold this same event, as follows:

For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.—
Isaiah 65: 17.

The Scriptures do not inform us of all the conditions that shall obtain in this new creation, but it seems reasonable to assume that those who are worthy will occupy. The angels of heaven will perhaps occupy the new heaven, and the saints who are worthy will inhabit the new earth. There will be this difference, that all will be righteous, hence God himself will dwell with men on earth; but this does not necessarily mean that God will never be anywhere else than on the new earth. Peter, after describing the work of destruction in which the earth and its works shall be burned up, declares:

Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.—
2 Peter 3: 13.

Before this event, however, will occur the millennial reign on the earth. For its destruction will be after the thousand years are ended. The "new heaven" therefore will appear after the millennial reign. Revelation 20: 4-12 shows that after the thousand years' reign with Christ on earth, Satan shall be loosed and go out to deceive. This will be followed by the overthrow of the devil and the final or "eternal" judgment of all men. It is after this that the events of Revelation 21: 1 are to occur. The Doctrine and Covenants states:

And my people shall be redeemed and shall reign with me on earth; for the great millennial, which I have spoken by the mouth of my servants, shall come; for Satan shall be bound; and when he is loosed again, he shall only reign for a little season, and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; and the earth shall pass away so as by fire.—
43: 7.

What was the worship of Baal, against which the Jews were warned?

The Hebrew word means "the lord, master, or possessor." The term by itself seems not so much at variance with the designation of God, but the worship was idolatrous and was accompanied with images, and sometimes even children were sacrificed. The Tyrian Baal was apparently one of the heavenly bodies or the astral spirit supposed to reside in it. In connection with the goddess Ashtoreth, worshiped by the Zidonians, Philistines, and by some of the Israelites during the reign of the judges, Baal was the corresponding male divinity (Judges 2: 13).

Various temples were erected to Baal, and incense and offerings were employed in the worship, which involved an extensive priesthood, divided into prophets and priests. The temple of Baal at Baalbek was an enormous structure, of which a single stone in one of the walls was 64 feet long and 13 feet high. A place called Baal is the first reference found in scripture (Numbers 22: 41), about 1450 B. C.

The Work of the Church

The Christmas Sacrifice Offering

By C. B. W.

Two more weeks to complete the Christmas Offering for 1932. With commendable zeal and self-denial all through the year, the Saints, young and old, have consecrated their spare change to the work of the church through the Christmas Offering. This custom has grown in the past for we have learned that the pennies, nickels and dimes given in this way, perhaps some every week, have not been seriously missed, while we have continually rejoiced in the consciousness that with others we have shared in self-denial in a worthy cause. Now, near the end of the year, we are most happy that our previous gifts have been made. It remains only to make our final effort that the total Christmas Offering shall really represent our love and willing sacrifice.

These weeks mark the closing of the Sacrifice Period in which every effort is made through the regular financial channels, to close the year with as fine a showing as possible. The Bishopric are urging, as the law contemplates, that our first duty in contribution to the church is to pay our tithing. Were we all now to file our inventories and make such payment as we can on the tithe now due the income of the church would soon be quite sufficient to meet our obligations and to move forward in the constructive work to which the church is called. Clearly our first duty is to make consistent payment of our tithe, even when it requires a greater self-denial and personal sacrifice than we have hitherto known. Then from our nine tenths we may make a further offering in real love and desire to serve, a genuine sacrifice offering.

The Christmas Offering, given at this time, is such a sacrifice. Throughout the country and around the world the depression has demanded its toll. The greed and folly of humanity must be compensated. Salvation may come only through living the righteous laws taught and demonstrated by the Christ and revealed in the gospel. Surely, if slowly, we must learn the important lessons so necessary if as a church we are to demonstrate God's way in our world.

The Christmas Offering is a sacrifice offering. Primarily it is an offering sponsored by the Sunday school, but it is one in which all can participate. Funds given through the Christmas Offering reach exactly the same goal as if sent under any other name, and are credited to the local branch toward its quota of general church expense. Let us encourage the boys and girls to give through setting the example and helping to swell the local Christmas Offering.

Let us give through the Christmas Offering.

Junior Notebook Contest

Helen Cramer, Topeka, Wins First Place

By Charles B. Woodstock

A church-wide contest among Juniors of the church school was conducted during the past year. The second-year Junior quarterly was devoted to a study of incidents in the life and work of the Christ and suggestions were given in the quarterly lessons for notebooks with weekly assignments to be kept by each of the students. These called for stories, pictures, and illustrations, all to be worked out and prepared by the children themselves. The plan provided for much extra work in connection with the lesson done either in church school time or on Sunday evenings or at home.

About one hundred Juniors were enrolled in eleven states. Probably many others kept notebooks but did not enroll at headquarters. Fifty-two weeks is a long time for a Junior to stick to a single task, and at the end only eight books were sent in for judging. But these books were excellent! Each contained the Christ story beautifully told, and some were real works of art. Pictures and sketches made every page attractive and interesting.

Each notebook was the individual work of a Junior and expressed his or her personal appreciation of Jesus as our Savior. Some of the titles were "The Life of Our Savior," "The Light of the World," "The Good Shepherd," "My Story of Jesus," "Jesus, My Hero," "Jesus, My Savior," "The Story of Jesus Christ," and "Our Savior."

The books were judged by a competent committee in Independence. First place was awarded to Helen Cramer, Topeka, Kansas. Second and third places went to Gerald Hays and Wendell Kelley, also of Topeka, Kansas. Others in the order of their ranking were as follows:

Frances McFarlane, Oelwein, Iowa.

Luella Bignell, Pipin, Wisconsin.

Tressa Sherman, Escatawpa, Mississippi.

Trula Sherman, Escatawpa, Mississippi.

Prayer and Testimony

Prayer

By F. W. Brose

Prayer is not a set formula or a ritual—that must be performed a number of times each day because our heavenly Father requires it of us. But prayer is rather a gift—a means placed in our hands, by the Lord, for our own benefit. Prayer is a petition to the Throne of Grace for our requirements. Through faith we express our thankfulness in prayer to God for his daily blessings bestowed on us. Prayer is a blessing in itself, granted to the children of men by God, through which by faith, we hold and use this prerogative to intercede with our Father for all our just needs. Further: Prayer is a promise from God to us, that if properly used, will find consideration by God and acted on, with the proviso, however, that we as God's children strive to live by his laws that are given us in the scriptures.

The Supreme Worth of the Church

By Willard A. Atwell

On the ninth of last July I rounded out my fiftieth year as a member of the church. I thought some might be interested in hearing from me through the columns of the Herald, to learn what I think of the church as a divine institution and the program for our present and future benefit. I want to say, however, that if I am permitted to express the experiences of my connection with the church and my understanding of stewardships and the Lord's storehouse, I shall do so as correctly, and intelligently as I am able so to do by the use of the English language.

To me the church is a divine institution of God's right-hand planting. I have searched the universe for something better, but failed to locate it. There is something inspirational about this church which is not found elsewhere. It is that truth spoken of by the Savior when he made the request to his Father wherein he said, "Sanctify them through the truth, for thy word is truth."

The better we become acquainted with the gospel, the more appreciative are we of its truthfulness, and its beneficent results. It has served for more than fifty years as a secure anchor to my soul. I have given it a thorough test under many circumstances, and it has proved its supreme worth amid all these conditions. It has been my present comfort in life, whether on the mountain or in the valley. Its lasting influences have carried me through numerous trials, and difficulties, and lead me to drink at the fountain of all righteousness. It has given me an abiding hope beyond the grave.

These have been practical experiences to me, yet I long for a more practical demonstration of some of our real needs and requirements with which we should build our present-day structure.

In this I am going to speak of stewardships and the Lord's storehouse, their establishment, and operation. I want to see the Herald so full of this kind of news from the members of the church, that the priesthood and membership of the church will become so saturated with their necessity that they will not refrain from preaching, and writing of it until it has become an actuality.

In Doctrine and Covenants 77:1, the Lord says: "The time has come, and is now at hand; and, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, both in this place and in the land of Zion, or in other words, the City of Enoch, for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven."

Paragraph 3: "Behold, this is the preparation wherewith I prepare you, and the foundation, and the ensample, which I give unto you, where-by you may accomplish the commandments which are given you, that through my providence, notwithstanding the tribulation which shall descend upon you, that the church may stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world, that you may come up unto the crown prepared for you, and be made rulers over many kingdoms, saith the Lord God, the Holy One of Zion."

I wish the Saints to note that the above revelation commanded that the church establish the storehouse now! And that we have let that now run from 1832 to 1932, and yet we have no sign of a storehouse, and according to the revelation, some of the things the storehouse was to accomplish were, for benefit of poor, for equality, for salvation, for a place in the celestial world, for a crown, and for rulers over many kingdoms.

Question: Are the purposes and promises for the establishment of this storehouse worth our efforts in beginning its accomplishment now?

Here let me call your attention to a former revelation showing the manner in which the Lord's storehouse should be conducted, Doctrine and Covenants 57:4: "And again, verily I say unto you, Let my servant Sidney Gilbert plant himself in this place [Zion] and establish a store, that he may sell goods without fraud, that he may obtain money to buy lands for the good of the Saints, and that he may obtain whatsoever things the disciples may need to plant them in their inheritance. And also let my servant Sidney Gilbert obtain a license (behold, here is wisdom, and whoso readeth let him understand), that he may send goods also unto the people, even by whom he will as clerks, employed in his service, and thus provide for my Saints, that my gospel may be preached unto those who sit in darkness and in the region and shadow of death."

The above revelation was given in 1831. They were told the specific purposes for the storehouse to sell goods without fraud, by the hand of clerks or agents, that they might buy land to plant the Saints in their inheritances.

Question: Is not this good advice today? When I walk around the square in the city of Zion, and count the number of chain stores, and see the enormous business they are doing, and realize how these opportunities, and benefits, were offered to our people, and the wonderful amount of good the church could have accomplished, and think we have shrunk from our duties, done nothing about it, sacrificed our opportunities into the hands of our enemies, I sometimes wonder if God will bear with us just a short time longer, and allow us just one more chance to fulfill his law.

In a vision I called at the home of one of the latter-day prophets. The midnight hour has passed. It was very early in the morning. I came into the home unannounced. Some of the younger boys were reveling. That seemed about the nature and extent of their concern. Others were asleep, but it was very noticable they were working men. One was so overcome with sleep that my presence failed to awaken him. On coming into another room, I found another of the sons asleep in a big rocking chair, I noted he was a hard-working man, and he finally awoke. I had a conversation with him. He assured me that the time is here when we must exercise our privileges and heritage. The acceptance of stewardships and practical demonstration of our program for the building and establishing of Zion must begin without further delay. The Spirit indicated that we should use the means that were available, and I was reminded to consider the unoccupied office room, and basement of the Auditorium. Here we were to establish the Lord's storehouse; use the godly men of the church, those who had commercial training, and who would use it as a stewardship, and let them handle the office work in a manner that would astound the methods of the railway exchanges.

Prayer and Testimony

Let the basement be used as a temporary storage room for the products that the members of the United Order of Enoch would be able to produce, and send in from Zion and her borders, until the storehouse became an asset to the church. This plan would offer employment to our many members and eliminate all our competitors, and our commerce would develop into such a wonderful magnitude that it would pay off the church debt, restore confidence, captivate the commercial element, and stand independent of all other creatures beneath the celestial world.

Saints, can you think of this wonderful privilege we have of beginning now to accomplish the work of the Lord, without shedding tears of joy? Yes, our privilege to give to the world a practical demonstration of its present needs, all for each and each for all.

I can see the Saint manufacturer, and the Saint farmer in the outlying stakes of Zion, and throughout our country sending his merchandise up to Zion to his commercially trained brothers, the Church Exchange, to dispose for him. I imagine I see the large corrals full of livestock, and the cars loaded with hay, lumber, coal, and other goods, sent up to Zion to be passed on to customers both within and without the church. Yes, this one grand thing will give our people recreative employment; every man's willingness to do something will find ready expression in dealing through the agents of the Lord's storehouse in Zion. The chain stores will have to surrender, or join us for the emancipation of liberty and equality.

The Presiding Bishop of the church would hail the movement with gladness for the profits will take care of the church debt, fill up the coffers of the church, return the missionaries to their missions, buy land for the Saints, elevate us above the beggarly element, fulfill the designs of God, and accomplish all that he has designed it should do.

Are you not able to see the steward in the field, the shop, and in all of the vocations of life, working hand in hand to establish Zion, no more to be thrown down or given to another? Then we can sing and offer our gratitude as a collective family in the following poem:

"Let all who herein shall discern
Their Shepherd's fond appeal,
Give heed and at the single shrine
Of His appointment kneel,
And fill the lingering interval
Of moments that remain
With evidence that clearly proves
They have not heard in vain."

Benefits of Prayer

By Lottie LaGrange

I have derived so much spiritual benefit from your department of prayer in the Herald, that I wish to add a few words of praise to our Great Physician and thanks to my brothers and sisters for their many prayers in my behalf. These prayers God in his great mercy and compassion has seen fit to answer.

The following verses on prayer by Grace Crowell, are so splendid that I believe they will bring as much good to Herald readers as they have to me.

"SOMEONE HAD PRAYED"

"The day was long, the burden I had borne Seemed heavier than I could longer bear,
And then it lifted—but I did not know
Someone had knelt in prayer.

"Had taken me to God that very hour,
And asked the easing of the load, and He,
In infinite compassion, had stooped down
And taken it from me.

"We can not tell how often as we pray
For some bewildered one, hurt and distressed,
The answer comes—but many times those hearts
Find sudden peace and rest.

"Someone had prayed, and faith, a reaching hand,
Took hold of God, and brought him down that day!
So many, many hearts have need of prayer—
Oh, let us pray."

Requests for Prayer

George A. McNutt solicits the prayers of the church in behalf of his wife who has been ill a number of years and is at present in the hospital. They are isolated from church privileges, but wish to continue faithful.

DOVER COURT, ALBERTA, CANADA.

Mrs. Luthera Lofton requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her daughter, Mrs. Virgie Derthick, who is ill all the time, that she may be healed of her suffering if it is the Lord's will.

TYGH VALLEY, OREGON.

Mrs. Minnie Brown wishes prayers that she will not lose her sight. Her eyesight has been failing for some time, and prayer and administration have seemed to avail little. Sister Brown was baptized at Hilo, by Elder A. M. Chase about five years ago when she was sixty-two years old. She feels that she is in need of prayer in a spiritual sense, too. Her husband does not belong to the church and frequently drinks. For him she also desires prayers.

HILO, HAWAII, 1099 Kilauea Avenue.

Mrs. William Hudson, seventy-two years of age, asks the prayers of her brothers and sisters. Her husband passed away in death some time back and she is lonely.

BORING, OREGON, Route 1, Box 118.

Two Christmas Worship Programs

These alternative programs are entirely suggestive. Either may be used just as it is, or may be adapted as a whole or in part. Our purpose in publishing them is not to impose a set order of service, but to make suggestions to aid pastors who are pressed for time and materials.

I.—Christmas Program for Larger Churches

Instructions

As this is a Christmas sacrifice service the spirit of sacrifice should characterize the occasion. Provision is made for the taking of the sacrifice offering in the early part of the service. It is this offering which is presented by the Three Wise Men, expressive of love and self-denial, to be consecrated to the work of Christ in the church.

The scenes are merely posed groups; there is little action. The whole platform may be used, or a large picture frame may be built and the scenes arranged behind it. For this latter very thin unbarred mosquito netting may be stretched across the frame to soften the scene. For an even better effect theatrical scrim may be tacked across. It should be sized with a very thin solution of flaked glue (about one half cup soaked and melted in two quarts of water). Then the frame and scrim may be painted with radiator gold paint.

Living scenes are much to be preferred, but if for any reason they are not possible, pictures may be used if great care is taken with the lighting, or slides may be thrown on the screen.

Christmas Gift Service

Prelude: "I heard the Bells on Christmas Day," new Hymnal, 141.

Call to Worship: Luke 2: 8-14.

Song: "There's a Song in the Air," new Hymnal, 138. (Organist repeats the last line very softly.)

Prayer: Thank God for the gift of his Son and for our privilege of sacrificing for Him who has done so much for us. Ask that He recognize the gratitude of our hearts and lives and accept the offering we each seek to bring this day. We join with all the church in this special sacrifice offering, that His work may go on to bless the world. Ask that His Spirit may be present in the service thus acknowledging His acceptance of our gifts.

Offering: This is the special sacrifice offering for the church. The baskets may be passed as usual by the deacons or by others chosen for the occasion, perhaps four girls dressed in white. The offering should then be placed in three baskets or containers, later to be carried by the Three Wise Men and consecrated as a gift to the Christ Child.

Scripture Reading: Mosiah 1: 95b, 97-103.

Song: "We Would See Jesus," new Hymnal, page 155. Verse 1. Curtains part revealing Joseph, Mary, and Jesus in the stable. Typical Christmas picture.

Reader: Matthew 3: 1-8.

Action: Three wise men, dressed in Oriental costume, enter from the rear, bringing the gifts of the offering to be presented. As they enter they sing the first verse and chorus of "We Three Kings of Orient Are" (in One Hundred One Best Songs), the music being played softly. They remain standing reverently before the Child, but half-facing the audience, while they sing the second verse and chorus, kneeling at its close to present their gifts. At this point the pastor may step upon the scene and in a brief prayer ask acceptance of the offering and a blessing upon its use. The organ may play a soft amen as the wise men arise. They sing the chorus again softly as they go out.

Reader: Matthew 3: 12 (Curtain. Music stops.) Matthew 3: 13-15, concluding with "And they returned to Nazareth

... and the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, being filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon him." (Luke 2: 40.) Music of the following hymn is played softly until the scenery is in place for the following picture.

Song: "We Would See Jesus," verse 2. Curtains part revealing the boy Jesus in the carpenter shop.

Poem: "The Carpenter," by G. A. Studdert-Kennedy, in Quotable Poems.

I wonder what he charged for chairs at Nazareth.
And did men try to beat him down
And boast about it in the town—
"I bought it cheap for half-a-crown
From that mad Carpenter?"

And did they promise and not pay,
Put it off to another day;
Oh, did they break his heart that way,
My Lord, the Carpenter?

I wonder did he have bad debts,
And did he know my fears and frets?
The gospel writer here forgets
To tell about the Carpenter.

But that's just what I want to know.
Ah! Christ in glory, here below
Men cheat and lie to one another so;
It's hard to be a carpenter.

(Curtain.)

Reader: Alma 5: 17-22.

Meditation while music plays softly. (Either following song, or "Father, when in love to thee," page 151.)

Song: "We Would See Jesus," verse 3. Curtains part revealing Jesus, a white shrouded figure, side toward the audience, standing and people seated on the ground about him apparently listening.

Reader: 3 Nephi 5: 45, 50-59, 66-68. (Curtain.)

Solo or Quartette: "Jesus Calls Us," new Hymnal, page 337, verses 1-3.

Poem: Read verses 3 and 4 of "Draw Thou My Soul," Saints' Hymnal, page 316.

Song: "We Would See Jesus," verse 4. Curtains part revealing Jesus, his hands laid in blessing on the head of one who kneels before him, two or three cripples near.

Reader: 3 Nephi 8: 5-9. (Curtain.)

Challenge: "And who shall say that Jesus Christ did not do many mighty miracles? And there were many mighty miracles wrought by the hands of the apostles. And if there were miracles wrought, then why has God ceased to be a God of miracles, and yet be an unchangeable being. And behold I say unto you, He changeth not; if so, he would cease to be God; and he ceaseth not to be God, and is a God of miracles." (Mormon 4: 79-82.)

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." (James 5: 14.)

"And . . . he that has faith in me to be healed, and is not appointed unto death, shall be healed; he who has faith to see shall see; he who has faith to hear shall hear, the lame who have faith shall leap; and they who have not faith to do these things, but believe in me, have power to become my sons; and inasmuch as they break not my laws, thou shalt bear their infirmities." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 13.)

"Behold I say unto you, that whoso believeth in Christ, doubting nothing, whatsoever he shall ask the Father in the name of Christ, it shall be granted him; and this promise is unto all, even unto the ends of the earth. For behold, thus saith Jesus Christ, the Son of God, unto his disciples who should tarry; yea, and also to all his disciples, in the hearing of the multitude. Doubt not, but be believing, and begin as in times of old, and come unto the Lord with all your heart, and work out your own salvation with fear and trembling before him. Be wise in the days of your probation; strip yourselves of all uncleanness; ask not, that ye may consume it on your lusts, but ask with a firmness unshaken, that ye will yield to no temptation, but that ye will serve the true and living God." (Mormon 4: 84, 85, 93, 94.)

Song: "We Would See Jesus," verse 5; (all standing). Curtains part revealing only a large cross, twined with greenery.

Reader: And as Christ commissioned his disciples, so I, too, commission you: "Keep my commandments in all things; and if you keep my commandments and endure to the end, you shall have eternal life; which gift is the greatest of all the gifts of God." (Doctrine and Covenants 12: 3.)

Benediction: "Now unto him who is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen."

Postlude: "I Would Be True," new Hymnal, page 294, or "Oh, Come All Ye Faithful," new Hymnal, page 145.

II.—Christmas Program for Smaller Churches

The following service is adapted from a service under this title prepared by Elder Roy Cheville and published in The Departments' Journal, December, 1929. It still is but suggestive and should be modified to meet local conditions. The responsive reading should be typed in sufficient quantities for all to be supplied. Perhaps the entire program may be printed and placed in the hands of worshipers as they enter. Soft music should precede the program and a reverent quiet should lend opportunity for meditation and worship.

A Christmas Vesper Service

Piano voluntary: "Prelude," Chopin.

Processional hymn: "While Shepherds Watched," Saints' Hymnal, 22, new Saints' Hymnal, 137, choir. The congregation will join in singing the last two stanzas.

4. Thus spoke the angel; and forthwith
Appeared a singing throng
Of angels praising God: and thus
Addressed their joyful throng:

5. "All glory be to God on high
And to the earth be peace;
Good will is shown by heaven to men
And nevermore shall cease."

Violin solo: "Largo," Handel.

Hymn: "O Come, All Ye Faithful," new Saints' Hymnal, 145.

1. O come, all ye faithful,
Joyful and triumphant;
O come ye, O come ye to Bethlehem;
Come and behold him, born the king of angels.

Chorus:

O come let us adore him,
O come let us adore him,
O come let us adore him,
Christ the Lord.

2. Sing, choirs of angels,
Sing in exultation;
Sing, all ye citizens of heaven above;
Glory to God in the highest.

3. Yea, Lord, we greet thee,
Born this happy morning,
Jesus to Thee be glory given,
Word of the Father, late in flesh appearing.

The prayer:

The Lord's prayer (the congregation joining).

Response: "Our Father," Saints' Hymnal, 112, new Saints' Hymnal, 315.

Responsive Reading:

Leader: "The voice of one that crieth, Prepare ye in the wilderness the way of the Lord. Make straight in the desert a highway for our God."

Congregation: "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low";

L.: "And the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain";

C.: "And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

L.: "O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion, get thee up into the high mountain";

C.: "O thou that tellest good tidings to Jerusalem, lift up thy voice with strength."

L.: "Lift it up, be not afraid, say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!"

C.: "Behold, the Lord shall come as a mighty one, and his arm shall rule for him."

L.: "And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night."

C.: "And lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them";

L.: "And the glory of the Lord shone round about them."

C.: "And they were sore afraid."

L.: "And the angel said unto them":

C.: "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."

L.: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David"

C.: "A Savior which is Christ the Lord."

L.: "And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying,"

All: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Sermon-Talk: The Mission of Jesus.

"I am the Light of the World." Tell the story of Christ as the Son of God and his mission in the world as the Savior of men; Jesus the babe in Bethlehem, the boy in Nazareth, the Carpenter; Jesus' baptism, his ministry, his suffering and death; his resurrection, subsequent ministry, and ascension; the Atonement, the gift of the Holy Spirit, and Eternal Life.

Solo: Selected.

Hymn: "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing," Zion's Praises, 169; new Saints' Hymnal, 136.

The congregation will rise for the hymn, being seated at the close and remaining in place until after the recessional.

Recessional Hymn: "Silent Night, Holy Night," Saints'

Hymnal, 88; new Saints' Hymnal, 147, choir.

Postlude: "Consolation," Liszt.

Programs for January

The Church School

Worship Programs for January, 1933

(Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges.)
General Theme: "The Vision of Opportunity."

JANUARY 1, 1933

Theme: "Self-examination"

Prelude

Call to Worship: Hebrews 2:1-3. 2 Corinthians 13:5.
 "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves."

Response: Psalm 13: 2a, 3a (Inspired Version). "How long shall I take counsel in my soul, sorrowing in my heart daily? Consider me, O Lord; and hear my cry, O my God; and lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the death of the ungodly."

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 16, 17, 20, 22, 24. (Begin: "Call upon me while I am near; draw near unto me, etc.")

(S) Song: New Saints' Hymnal, 323, "O thou God, who hearest prayer."

(S) Meditation: (The following suggestions may be offered by the leader. There should be a moment of silence after each during which the group may think on these things.)

Let us think of God's goodness to us during the year that is past—of his protection and of his loving kindness.

Let us think of our activities. Sometimes we have fallen short of our highest goal; sometimes we have rendered service that we knew was acceptable.

Let us think of our qualifications for service. Of the many ways we have used our talents, of the many ways we can use them.

Let us think of God's goodness to us in giving us opportunity to assist him in this great work.

Our Father, as we examine our hearts help us to see ourselves as you see us that we may make our lives beautiful in thy sight in all ways. Guide us, we pray. In Christ's name. Amen.

Talk: Taking stock spiritually. (Honest thinking about ourselves is wise. How have we succeeded? Where are we going? By what are we judging ourselves? What are our major desires in life? What do we most like to do? Are these the things we should do? Do we like to do the things we ought?)

Song: "Come, let us anew our journey pursue," page 433.

Group Prayer: Psalm 19: 14.

(S) Stand.

Picture: Cornicelius: "Christ tempted by Satan."

JANUARY 8, 1933

Theme: "Seeing the Need"

Prelude: (Instrumental) "Take time to be holy," page 322.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1.

Group Response: Read verse 3 of "Lead on, O King Eternal," page 181.

(S) Song: Verses 1 and 2 of "Lead on, O King Eternal."

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 43: 5, 6, 8.

Meditation: (Leader may suggest: Shall we bow our heads and think for a moment of the conditions that are in the world today—of the wars that are in progress, of the unemployment that is causing such suffering, of the sickness that is so prevalent.)

Prayer: (For wisdom that we may understand the mission of the church more clearly, for enlightenment and strength that we may not fail in carrying out Christ's great commission to "establish my Zion.")

(S) Song: "Look for the Beautiful," page 209.

Talk: (In preparing to make this talk the speaker should read Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4, 6, 13, 14; 97: 4; 102: 2. The time has come when men's hearts ARE failing them for fear of those things which are coming upon the world. Do we have anything to offer them? Should we have? What changes must be brought about in our own lives? What is our great commission?)

(S) Song: "May we who know the joyful sound," page 98.

(S) Benediction: Jude 1: 24, 25.

(S) Stand.

Picture: Flandrin: "Christ Mourns Over the City."

JANUARY 15, 1933

Theme: "What is My Calling?"

Instrumental Prelude: "Jesus is calling," page 332.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1, 2.

(S) Response: Song, "Break Thou the bread of life," p. 70. Conclude with piano "Amen.")

(S) Prayer: For guidance that we may see our specific calling more clearly and that we may be able to do the will of God more fully.

Scripture: John 21: 15-19.

(S) Song: "Jesus calls us o'er the tumult," page 337, verses 1, 2, 3.

Talk: (We are called to witness for Christ, to build up Zion, to become lights to the world. All are to give their lives. Some may be called upon to make the supreme sacrifice and die even as Peter died. Are you ready to answer the call no matter what the cost?)

(S) Song: "Jesus calls us o'er the tumult," page 337, verse 4.

(S) Commission: Ether 5: 41. "And now I would commend you to seek this Jesus of whom the prophets and apostles have written, that the grace of God the Father, and also the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost, which beareth record of them, may be, and abide in you for ever."

(S) Benediction.

(S) Stand.

Picture: Zimmerman: "Christ and the Fishermen."

JANUARY 22, 1933

Theme: "Answering the Call"

Instrumental Prelude: "Jesus call us o'er the tumult," page 337.

Call to Worship: 3 Nephi 12: 34, 35. "Verily, verily I say unto you, This is my gospel; and ye know the things that ye must do in my church; for the works which ye have seen me do, that shall ye also do; for that which ye have seen me do, even that shall ye do; therefore if ye do these things, blessed are ye, for ye shall be lifted up at the last day."

(S) Song Response: Verse 1, "Dear Lord and Father of mankind," page 243.

(S) Prayer: (Suggestive thoughts: "Our Father, we hear thy voice. It has come to us many times through various channels. In the voice of beauty, in the tone of judgment, in the quiet places of our lives, by the still small voice of thy Spirit which calls us from within. Help us to be obedient to our better selves and to thee.")

Scripture Reading: Luke 18:18-30.

(S) Song: Verses 2, 3, 4, "Dear Lord and Father of mankind," page 243.

Talk: (Suggestions: We have been asked to respond to the petition of a friend who gave his life to show us that God's way is the best way. He has challenged us to go on with his work. How are we going to respond?)

(S) Song: Verse 5, "Dear Lord and Father of mankind," page 243.

(S) Commission: 1 Corinthians 15: 58. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

(S) Benediction: 2 Corinthians 13: 14. "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen."

(S) Stand.

Picture: Zimmermann: "Christ and the Fishermen."

JANUARY 29, 1933

Theme: "Accounting to God."

Instrumental Prelude: "Father, in thy mysterious presence kneeling," page 101.

Call to Worship: (Doctrine and Covenants, 101: 2.) "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments, for it is expedient that I the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures."

(S) Response: "Behold my soul delighteth in the things of the Lord; and my heart pondereth continually upon the things which I have seen and heard."

(S) Meditation:

Let us think of our past experiences with God.

Of what he has asked from us during these experiences.

Of what we have wanted to do for him when under the influence of these experiences.

Of just how much we have responded, and what God yet requires of us.

(Conclude the period of meditation with the prayer hymn, "Be with me, Lord," page 305.)

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants. Selected from sections 101; 119; 58. "All are called according to the gifts and callings of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and he that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work, labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all. Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteounness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good they shall in no wise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."

Talk: Theme: Man's accountability to God. Materials can be found in the Parable of the Talents, Matthew 25, and in the story of the rich man, Mark 10: 15-21.

(S) Song: "Let us be Brothers," page 287.

(S) Benediction:

(S) Stand.

Picture: Von Gebhardt: "Christ and the Rich Young Man."

Carrying Out the Worship Service

Notify those who are to take part well in advance and then remind them at least once. No worship service can be carried out successfully by participants who are unprepared.

In this series of services there are two periods of meditation suggested. These must be handled carefully. The suggested thoughts must be read slowly and distinctly and a moment of complete silence should follow each.

All hymns are taken from the New Saints' Hymnal. If the hymns are new they should be taught to the group previously and an appreciation of them developed.

The prayers should be specific, and not long.

One picture may be used for the whole series of services if preferred. In that case the picture, "Christ Tempted by Satan" (Cornicelius), will probably be the most suitable. In it the eyes of Christ are most outstanding. He is looking ahead into the future, wondering which course he shall choose. Can he by accepting Satan's offer of the kingdoms of the world best fulfill his mission, or must he renounce it and be content to have only a few humble followers? Our vision of opportunity for the coming year holds a question that is much the same: In answering the call of the church are we going to demand the acclaim of the group, or are we going to be content to sacrifice and serve in ways that perhaps only God will see? An appreciation of the picture grows on you as you study it, and such study is well worth your time.

Be sure that you clearly indicate the points at which the group should stand. Confusion will ensue otherwise.

The Children's Division

Worship Programs for January

Prepared by Mrs. Nellie Blackmore

FIRST SUNDAY, JANUARY 1, 1933

At the sacrament service the children will join with the adults. This is a service of consecration and blessing where we come to renew our covenant with God.

The Service of the Lord's Supper

As the Roman soldiers were required as far as possible to return to Rome at least once a year to renew their pledge of allegiance to their emperor and superior commander; so we as followers of Christ meet at the table to renew our pledge of allegiance to our leader.

"They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength" (Isaiah 40: 31). "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name: bring an offering and come before him: worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness" (1 Chronicles 16: 29). "And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of men" (1 Corinthians 11: 24, 25).

SECOND SUNDAY, JANUARY 8, 1933

Theme: "The Opportunity of the New Year."

Prelude.

Call to Worship: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth" (Psalm 121: 1, 2).

Hymn: "Holy, Holy, Holy," New Saints' Hymnal, page 39.

Scripture Reading: Psalm 23.

Hymn: "I Love to Tell the Story," New Saints' Hymnal, page 306.

Offering (Appropriate music): "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights" (James 1: 17). "Freely ye have received, freely give" (Matthew 10: 8).

Sermon Talk: The Opportunity of the New Year.

Text: "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months, it shall be the first month of the year to you" (Exodus 12: 2). "For ye have not passed this way heretofore" (Joshua 3: 4).

The children of Israel were about to cross the Jordan when they received the instruction to carry the ark just ahead of them, "for ye have not passed this way heretofore."

The ark was the symbol of God's leadership to them. The ark helped them to find new paths. All life is new and strange. Every day is a new untried path. The New Year is an opportunity for each one to decide to follow the pattern of Jesus more closely.

The New Year is an opportunity for us to draw closer to Christ by following him in the paths of humble service where he would lead us. The New Year is an opportunity for us to forsake the undesirable things of our past life and turn to a better way of living. The new year brings its opportunities for doing more good. The chances of life are open again to us.

"But this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before" (Philippians 3: 13).

The New Year

"The New Year come! Its pathway lies
Hid by the mist of days unknown;
Faith sees bright stars illumine its skies,
Hope bids each heart arise, press on.
The Old Year gone! The New Year come!
Thus speed the years till pathways blend,
Till old and new greet lustrous dawn
Of fadeless day, where time shall end."

—C. F. McKoun.

Story: "The Man He Wanted to Become," from Stories for the Junior Hour, by Demerest.

Hymn: "I Would Be True," Hymnal, 294.
Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, JANUARY 15, 1933

Theme: "The Golden Rule"

Prelude: Instrumental Music.

Call to Worship: "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another.

"Add to godliness, brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness, love."

Response, in unison: "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers of it only."

Hymn: "Jesus, My Shepherd," New Saints' Hymnal, 272.

Prayer.

Hymn: "Onward, Christian Soldiers," New Saints' Hymnal, 212.

Scripture Reading: Luke 10: 25-37.

(The picture of "The Good Samaritan" might be used with this reading. Another appropriate picture to use is "Christ Among the Lowly," by L. Hermitte.)

Sermon Talk: "The Golden Rule." This talk or sermon should not be over ten minutes in length. It should be concrete rather than abstract in material and suggestions. Some life situations would form the ideal message.

Hymn: This may be by a member of the junior congregation, or the entire group.

Story: "Where Love Is, There God Is," found in Knights of Service, by Bradshaw.

Hymn: "The Old, Old Path," New Saints' Hymnal, 260.

Benediction.

(A class or group of juniors may be appointed to dramatize the Good Samaritan for the next Sunday service. The dramatization should begin after the man has been wounded. The scene opens with him lying on the ground in distress. One of the teachers should assist the children in this effort.

FOURTH SUNDAY, JANUARY 22, 1933

Theme: "Sharing God's Gifts"

Prelude: Instrumental Music.

Call to Worship: "Holy, Holy, Holy," New Saints' Hymnal, 37.

Hymn: "Come Learn of the Meek and Lowly," New Saints' Hymnal, 258.

Scripture Reading: Matthew 7: 1, 2.

Prayer.

Hymn: "Oh, Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," New Saints' Hymnal, 213.

Dramatization of the Good Samaritan, by the group selected last Sunday.

Sermon Talk: "I Must Share." (The Good Samaritan practiced "I Must Share." How? Show how each child can share his daily blessings with others less fortunate than he.)

Hymn: "Never Pass Them By," Zion's Praises, 42.

Story: "Not What We Give, But What We Share," taken from Knights of Service, by Bradshaw.

Hymn: "Love Divine," New Saints' Hymnal, 131.

FIFTH SUNDAY, JANUARY 29, 1933

Theme: "Accounting Unto God"

Prelude.

Call to Worship. Leader: "And who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" (1 Chronicles 29: 5.)

Response: "Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands. Serve the Lord with gladness: come before his presence with singing." (Psalm 100: 1, 2.)

Hymn: "A Charge to Keep I Have," New Saints' Hymnal, 201.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

Sermon—Text: "That every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him."

Accounting to God for one's time.

Accounting to God for one's talents.

Accounting to God for one's money.

Accounting to God for one's life.

Hymn: "I Need Thee Every Hour," New Saints' Hymnal, 314.

Offering: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Solo: "My Task" (Sheet music published by Lorenz, Dayton, Ohio).

Story: "Parable of the Talents," Matthew 25: 14-29.

"Parable of the Rich Farmer," Luke 12: 16-21.

Hymn: "Praise God, From Whom All Blessings Flow," New Saints' Hymnal, 14.

Benediction.

Our Economic Folly

An economic order built on the assumption that profit should be primary and service secondary is showing signs of inherent weakness. There must be something wrong when the more we produce the less we have and "the better we do things the worse off we are." Woe unto us if we fail to see that what is fundamentally wrong is just the fact that we have been trying to achieve greatness through profit-seeking instead of through service, and still stands that ancient saying: "Ye know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great ones exercise authority over them. Not so shall it be among you: but whosoever would become great among you shall be your minister: and whosoever would be first among you shall be your servant; even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many."—Ernest Fremont Tittle, in "We Need Religion."

"He Ain't Heavy -- He's My Brother!"

An article reprinted from the "Kiwani Magazine" with a comment by Bishop C. A. Skinner.

A member of the Kiwanis Club told the following story at luncheon:

"I was walking down the street one day when I noticed coming toward me a spindle-shanked boy carrying his big fat baby brother on his shoulder and staggering toward a neighboring park when I met him. It was such a load for such a small boy. It reminded me of a small tug warping a big liner into its dock, or a small ant dragging a grub home to his hill.

"'Pretty big load for such a small boy,' I said as I met him.

"'Why, mister,' he smiled, 'he ain't heavy, he's my brother.'

"I belong to more lodges than Heinz has pickles. In every one of them we work out beautiful degrees intended to impress the great lesson of the brotherhood of man. But none of these degrees ever made such an impression on me as that remark—'He ain't heavy, he's my brother.' I have heard some of the greatest pulpit orators of the day, and attended the meetings of some of the world's greatest revivalists. These educated, eloquent teachers have expounded the laws of God, and praised the universal brotherhood, but none of them ever moved me as that snub-nosed boy with his matter-of-course answer, 'He ain't heavy, he's my brother.'"

Hard-headed business men join Kiwanis Clubs. The mellowing influence of the brotherhood in our organization changes them from cold, calculating men, almost machinelike in their eternal digging for the pile of dollars which they try to accumulate, to warm enthusiasts of our under-privileged child work. But we who have to be educated gradually to become human again have missed the biggest thing in life which this simple, unaffected boy had growing in his heart. "He ain't heavy, he's my brother."

Would that we, too, could feel as strongly as this little codger. We, too, have to carry the burden of some of our fellow men. We, too, have to struggle along the uphill path of life with some of the other fellow's weight on our own spindling legs. And we all fret and quarrel a bit at the weakness of the other fellow we lug along when he can't make his own legs carry him. Sometimes he laughs when we help him and then we think he has no business to be happy while he is a burden on us.

But from this time on I am going to whistle as I lug him. It's a joy!

"He ain't heavy, he's my brother."

So I shall try to be more grateful and less grouchy, try to look around a little more to see if I haven't missed some places where I could drop a friendly dollar or a happy smile which might give some chap a lift. I intend to remember that spindle-legged urchin and if I have set down even the half of his unconscious sermon you will also not forget:

"He ain't heavy, he's my brother."

Evidently some one who had the gift of writing poetry caught the spirit of this story, for in the next issue of the Kiwani Magazine appeared the following poem:

"HE AIN'T HEAVY; HE'S MY BROTHER"

Mister, what ye lookin' at?
Think I'm tired and all of that?
Can't ye see the stones is goin' to hurt his feet?
He's barefooted, I got shoes,
And it's hotter than the deuce
For him if he has to walk along the street.
Makes no difference 'bout the weather,
Me and him must go together,
And he knows I ain't a-gin't' drop him nuther.
When I get there he will be Standing along the side of me.
Ah, no, mister, he ain't heavy; he's my brother.

Let ye take him for a while?
Why it's only half a mile
Till we get where the grass is soft and green.
Then ye ought to see him run,
Gee, we'll have a lot of fun,
Me and him, the bestest time ye ever seen.
I am big and tall and strong
And I like to have him 'long,
'T won't be long I have to pack him nuther,
'Cause some day he's going to grow,
Then we won't have to go so slow.
Ah, no, mister, he ain't heavy; he's my brother.

Maybe I could get there quicker
If I just would let him flicker
And would set him down and leave him here behind;
But he needs me, I ain't goin'
To run away 'cause he is growin'
And holds me back. No, sir, I ain't that kind;
It's a lot of fun to hold him
On my back, and once I've told him
I would take him, why, I would somehow or t'other;
See, he's laughin', not a-cryin'
And I ain't half a-tryin';
Go on, mister, he ain't heavy; he's my brother.

Can not we, too, learn a wonderful lesson from this true story? What is it that made this boy's burden light? What was it that made him not only willing but happy in his big task? Just one thing—and that was the love for that baby brother. And how true to life this is. No sacrifice is too great for us to make for a loved one; no burden so heavy that we will not stagger along beneath it when actuated by love.

It was love for mankind that moved the Father to give his only begotten Son. It was love for His fellow man that moved Christ to give his life for them. It was love for the cause they had espoused that made the disciples of Christ willing to give their lives for that cause.

Love for the Latter Day Restoration caused Joseph and Hyrum Smith to give their lives that it might live. No less was the love of Glaud Rodger, Charles Derry, and a host of others who did not die for the cause but lived and spent their lives at a great sacrifice that the church might be carried on to its goal. They said by their actions, "It ain't heavy; it's my church."

How much do we love our church, and just how anxious are we to help carry the load?

Just now the missionaries and their families are staggering under the load of $85,000 which represents eleven months back allowance due them. Are we helping carry this load? Are we paying our tithes and offerings? Are we willing to make a self-denial or a sacrifice that a portion of the load might be lifted? If we have love for them we will. "They ain't heavy; they're our brothers."

It is easy for us to think and say, "I just can't help this year," but if we really love this church and want to help, the most of us can find a way, and "It won't be heavy; it's our church."

In conversation with a brother recently he said: "I am aware of the tremendous load the church is carrying, and have desired to help, but my wages have been reduced three times, we have had much sickness in the family during the year, and otherwise we have played against hard luck, but from this time I expect to help carry the load. I'm going to deny myself some of the things I thought I could not get along without. For three years I have needed a new overcoat, the old one is worn threadbare and is faded, but it will answer the purpose, so I expect to wear the old one again and give the price to the church. I want to help carry it along." (It ain't heavy; it's my church.)

"I really need a pair of gloves this fall, I usually purchase a new pair once a year, but I have decided that I can get along with the old ones and have that much more to help pay the missionaries' back allowances.

"Each day at noon I go to a cafe and buy my lunch but during the balance of the year I shall bring a lunch from home and save 25c per day and give this amount towards the church debt.

"It has been our custom to take a pleasure ride occasionally, but now instead we will get the kiddies together and take a walk to a near-by park, the saving will amount to $1 or $1.50.

"Once per month we attend a movie or some other form of pleasure, which costs us on an average of $1 but from now on we will deny ourselves that pleasure and give that amount to help reduce the burden." (It ain't heavy; it's our church.)

"In totaling the amount of the possible saving per year it amounts to $83.80."

What this brother can do in the way of saving for the church by making a little self-denial I am sure 20,000 members out of a membership of 111,000 could do. That would amount to $1,676,000 per year. At least 10,000 other members could contribute one half that amount, that would be $419,000; in five years there could be brought into the coffers of the church $10,475,000. Too much! Impossible—you say. Oh, no! Another church organization that is no larger or stronger than our own raises nearly that much yearly. And we can do it, and will do it when we come to love the church as that spindle-legged boy loved his brother. It won't be heavy; it's my church.

ECONOMIC LAW AND THE PROBLEMS OF PROPERTY

justice and equality is one in which each member functions most efficiently in the capacity for which he is fitted, in cooperation and harmony with every other member, and receives the full measure of his productive power. Is it not evident then, that the economic law is in harmony with the moral law? And that a combination of the two gives us the law of all human progress—association in equality. Association brings the economies of division of labor and frees mental power for progressive purposes; while equality—or the recognition of the moral law, prevents the dissipation of these grains in fruitless struggle. And as we judge civilization by these laws, we shall discover that they are not only in harmony with, but find their fullest expression in, the inexorable laws of God. And because they reflect truth, it could not be otherwise.

Imperfect though it was from our point of view, for the people were more responsive to the whip than to the leash, the first divinely appointed constitution in history, designed for the government of man, the Law of Moses, recognized the inherent right of all men to the land on which, and from which all must live. No exclusive rights in perpetuity were granted, for the tenure of land was for use only, and reallocation was made every fifty years. Under the stimulus of the freedom vouchsafed in this divine instrument, Moses led the Hebrews out of Egyptian bondage and made of them a race of conquerors. And so they continued until inequalities of property and power sapped the vital forces of progress and a great nation fell—the victim of its own iniquities, at the hands of its less oppressed neighbor from Babylon.

Those homogeneous groups of agriculturists along the Nile, under the impetus of the liberty they enjoyed as free tillers of the soil, reared a magnificent civilization, only to see it petrify and decay with the growth of slavery and even grosser forms of inequality which impelled a hundred thousand men to toil fifty years to build a tomb for one of their own mortal kind.

Groups of free Italian husbandmen on four-acre farms, formed the nuclei of a civilization whose splendor was then unparalleled in the history of the world and whose influence is indelibly impressed upon our own. Yet at the height of her glory Rome reaped the harvest of her iniquities when her legions, once free and equal but subsequently doomed to slavery for the support of a pleasure-loving class of nonproducing landowners, fell before the fiery onslaughts of those hordes of freer barbarians from the north.

The full light of liberty, justice, and equality illumined the American continent fifteen hundred years before its discovery by the old world. Under the tutelage of the Great Teacher a mighty race of people set up economic and social institutions which recognized the inherent right of all men to enjoy in common with their fellows the free bounties and opportunities of a generous Nature. All of the widespreading social ills which everywhere oppress men amid advancing civilization, and which spring from a great primary wrong—the appropriation, as the exclusive property of some men, of the land on which and from which all must live, were unknown in this glorious Golden Age of Nephi. For nearly two centuries these freemen enjoyed an unsurpassed era of peace, happiness, and prosperity. But the seeds of decay and disintegration were sown and germinated when the avarice and greed of some led them to appropriate the rights and property of those who were at a relative disadvantage. Inequalities of ownership and power were increasingly thrust upon the weak by the lust of the strong, and from this fundamental injustice flowed all the injustices which inevitably distort and endanger the development of civilization. And thus another great civilization sank into oblivion through its violation of the laws of human progress.

In the light of social experience and the history of civilization, we should expect any plan presented under divine direction to make the necessary adjustment to preclude the possibility of these degenerating influences gaining root. And so it is with the plan provided through latter-day revelation. The cardinal principle of common ownership of land is given primary consideration and the avowed destiny of man is that each should live under his own vine and fig tree and that one should not sow and another reap. The genius of the Beneficent Creator is evidenced by the plotting off of Zion into squares for the inheritances of his people, not to be held in perpetuity, but for use only and for the duration of good behavior. Easily do we now recognize the wisdom of the unheeded command, "to buy the land lying west,"—not as a selfish, speculative proposition, but rather that it might be held in common for the satisfaction of the wants of all.

May we not here remember the admonition of the apostle who said, "Take heed when ye think ye stand, lest ye fall." What is the status quo of our civilization?

EVIDENCES OF DECAY

Are not the evidences of decline and decay of our wonderful civilization everywhere apparent though we yet seem to be turning the wheels of progress ever forward and upward? We need but to open our eyes and behold. Millions of our fellow citizens have been for years existing at the very level of a mere animal existence, especially in our great cities and industrial centers. Has not our political system proved inadequate and archaic, as evidenced by the scandal and corruption in local, state, and national governments that is daily aired through the columns of our newspapers? Has not our law enforcement machinery and our judicial become a joke and a disgrace to our sense of decency? Has not democracy broken down when millions of our free and equal citizens have nothing of value but their votes which they are glad to sell to the highest bidder?

We but deceive ourselves if we think our civilization is not trembling on the verge of disintegration. How may we avoid the catastrophe? We might attempt to solve unemployment with unemployment insurance. We may provide destitute old age with old-age-pensions. We may limit unearned incomes by increasing the surtaxes, and trim down large estates through inheritance taxes. But all such measures merely treat the effects, they never will remove the cause of inequality. This is the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, and Jesus says, our righteousness must exceed that of the scribes and pharisees, or we shall have no part in the building of the kingdom, which is the only way to remedy the present evils.

THE NEED OF THE KINGDOM

Well may we understand why Jesus admonished us to pray first that "Thy kingdom come," and second, "give us our daily bread." For under present conditions, until his kingdom does come, the chances are ten to one that our daily bread will fall into the hands of the privileged class and we shall be fortunate to pick up the crumbs that fall from their tables.

But present conditions need not, nay they shall not continue, for the promise of God to us is, that "the mountain of the Lord's house shall be built in the high mountain." Prophetically speaking "mountain" signifies government or kingdom; so we are given to understand that the kingdom of God is to be built within another great government. That the "high mountain" refers to America there can be no doubt, for what government, past or present, has wielded the influence among the nations of the world as has ours? Let Isaiah answer.

"Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of His government and peace there is no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever." And how shall this be accomplished? Again the prophet answers: "The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this." And the reason is obvious—there is no other way. No society in the history of the world has ever approached a state of social justice except it were permeated with a strong and definite religious faith. The spirit of equality burns dim within the human breast that ceases to recognize his responsibility to his fellow man and his accountability to his God.

And so our investigation has led us to the inevitable conclusions that the great law of human progress, the moral law of the universe, and the immutable laws of economy are but correlaries of, and superseded by that higher law, the gospel of Jesus Christ which is indeed the power of God unto the salvation of all mankind; that the kingdom of God is not only the crying need of the world, but the only hope of the world; and that the opportunity is ours to become imbued with a burning passion to see the government of God effective in the affairs of men and thereby to assist in its establishment.

Maybe This Is Meant For You

folks, and there isn't anything for us to do! Childish? I leave it for you to say.

Day after day some of us seem to get nowhere. But if we try hard enough, one day we shall find ourselves acquiring something of the art of growing up. The educator talks of levels of learning. Let us climb toward a higher level every day, and then one still higher.

As we grow up from childhood to youth and then to maturity, we outgrow our clothes. Most of us have put away in our treasure chests little garments that we wore years ago. Just so should it be with some of our habits and character traits. As we grow let us put behind us as we do our childhood garments, the littlenesses and the misunderstandings of years gone by; let us forget to whine and pout and complain because we are too busy acquiring the gentle art of growing up.

From London, England, came a very fine story, unusually well written by a Junior girl. Her teacher sent the book and told us the little girl had been taken ill, and was in a hospital for treatment, but asked that her book be sent. Due to illness her work was not complete, but it showed careful work and expressed most beautifully her appreciation of her Savior. We all join our faith and prayer that she may be speedily restored to health if it be the Master's will.

A beautiful and appropriate book has been sent by our former Junior editor to be awarded to the one winning first place. This will go to Helen Cramer and the members of her class, two of whom all but tied with her for first place.

The contest has demonstrated what fine work Juniors can do with the co-operation of interested parents and teachers. It has also proved the great value of work of this kind to supplement the quarterly lesson. No church-wide contests are proposed for the coming year, but Junior teachers will do well to consider the use of notebook, posters, maps, dramatization, and the like to provide interesting and helpful activities to expand the time and effort usually put upon the lessons.

Weekly Health Letter

Questions and Answers

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

OBSTRUCTED NOSE—(WISCONSIN)

"I would like to ask why I have a sore chest and stoppage of the nose which is worse in the spring and damp rainy weather?"

REPLY: A too narrow air passage will stop up the nose which may be due to enlarged turbinated bones, polypus, deviated septum and various other causes previously described in these Health Letters. Self medication is not likely to do you any good. Consult a specialist and have the obstruction removed.

CHRONIC NOSE INFECTION—(ILLINOIS)

"For several years I have been expectorating a dark, thick, heavy mucous, otherwise I am strong and healthy, never have sore throat, no obstructed breathing, always careful to breathe through my nose, and sleep in a well ventilated room. Am inclined to catch cold easily, but have no throat trouble of any kind."

REPLY: The dark colored mucous is of no consequence. It is caused by inhaling smoke and dust in the air. It is not likely to do you any harm. Suggest you use equal parts of ordinary baking soda and salt dissolved in luke warm water with the head well bent over the wash basin. Snuff this solution up the nose, being careful not to let the water get into the eustachian tubes—the tubes that lead from the throat to the ears. Do not use the salt and soda solution strong enough to cause irritation.

MOUTH BREATHING—(IOWA)

"Is there any harm in mouth breathing? Have been told by some that it does not amount to anything. I am constantly catching cold. What can I do about it?"

REPLY: Mouth breathing is a very serious condition and the obstruction should be removed. One thus affected is subject to infections of the throat, bronchi, and lungs. Frequently the glands of the neck become involved, causes snoring and changes the facial expression in children with contraction of the palatal arch.

BLOOD SPITTING—(MICHIGAN)

"I have had my lungs examined by different physicians and they say they can find nothing wrong with them. I spit blood occasionally and have almost constant pains in my shoulders, chest, and back."

REPLY: You should have a careful examination of your nose and throat by a competent specialist. You may have sinus trouble or some other pathological condition of the nose and throat. Such bloody secretion does not necessarily mean tuberculosis, but suggest you have a microscopic examination of the "sputum." The teeth should be examined by a dentist. A careful search should be made for the cause of the trouble.

MOUTH BREATHING—(ILLINOIS)

"Is there any way to correct the habit of mouth breathing, a habit I have contracted recently? My wife says I smoke a great deal."

REPLY: Mouth breathing may be a habit often produced by sleeping on the back. One should sleep on the right side. You may have polypus-tumors frequently found in the nose, ear, etc. If you have any obstruction it should be removed.

MOUTH BREATHING—(OKLAHOMA)

"Is there a preventive to keep one from breathing through the mouth? As soon as I fall asleep I have contracted this habit."

REPLY: In previous Health Letters I have explained to some extent the physiology of the nose. Ordinarily a normal nose is one that has an unobstructed breathing channel. If obstructed there is a cause that should be removed. It is rarely due to habit.

"My Eightieth Milestone"

A Poem by Joseph Luff

(Editors note: We present in this column a metrical composition by Brother Joseph Luff, written on his eightieth birthday anniversary. He sent it to me accompanied by the following characteristic note: "Dear Brother Fred: Nothing pedantic or aught set down in vanity in this, but just a simple spurt of brain and pen, evoked by study of my whereabouts, and handed to you because of a sudden, unexpected and unaccountable impression to do so that came to me while thinking of other unassociated things as I lay in bed early this morning, November 3, 1932. Was it just a freaky thought?")

We are glad to present this to the Herald readers, who will see in the deep religious spirit of the poem a reflection of Brother Luff's loyalty to the church.—F. M. S.)

"MY EIGHTIETH MILESTONE"

By Joseph Luff

I'm passing a milestone today—
The time-chiselled digits whereon
Proclaim that my pilgrimage here
(As measured by years ago)
Has reached fourscore and passed the line
Where most men quit the clay and hence
On spirit pinions fly to find
Imperishable residence
Where faith to knowledge bows its head
And vision is reality—
Where mortal shadows are unknown
And life means immortality
Where hope its glad fruition finds
In heavenly fraternity
And love its bliss disseminates—
God-pure—through vast eternity.

This milestone solemnizes thought
And I'm wondering today
If I've been too slow in ripening
And the sickle thrust's delay
Betokens mercy shown, that I
By added days may make more sure
The harvest that is requisite
God's final "well done" to secure.
If so, may wisdom's rule indite
The programme that shall hence engage

My brain, my tongue, my hands, my feet,
And fill life's yet-remaining page
With voiceful entries in the terms
Of grateful adoration
And thus, from fountains of my soul
Pour forth appreciation.
May the moments while I linger—
Waiting summons to depart—
Each be filled to overflowing
With the outgush from my heart,
Shaped in words and deeds of kindness,
In the fellowship of love—
Saturate with that sweet essence
Inlet from the realms above.
Living only for promotion
Of the interests that stirred

God's choir to come and sing the song
That Judean shepherds heard:
That song those angels learned in heaven
To fitly celebrate the birth
Of Him whose mission was to bring Good will to men and peace on earth.
A mission held in estimate
By heaven's King—creation's God—
As worth such sacrifice as coursed
The gory path Immanuel trod.
O, in me may like appraisalment
Of that mission yield its fruit
In discipleship engagements—
Pure—unceasing—absolute.
May this full, though frail, oblation—
Patterned by the Nazarine—
Find acceptance and by Him
Be sanctified and made a sheen,
Reflective clear and scintillant,
In some measure, of the glow
That in such dazzling brilliance shone
Throughout his matchless course below.
May the purpose of Jehovah
In the outstretch of my days
Find its goal and thus, completed,
Add an anthem to his praise.

What We Like

By B. S. Lambkin

Jesus taught that we should treat every one as we would like to be treated. We all like to appear at our best, so we like to be advised as to when to expect the priest to visit us. Such notice may also save him a fruitless trip. We enjoy meeting and talking with people that we feel are at least our equal in education and culture. If the priest would do his best work with us he should at least be trying to study and practice to be the equal of those he wishes to help by his visits.

Most of all we like to meet with people who by their faith and cheerful outlook on life seem to lift us up and out of darkness and distress and leave us feeling refreshed. Even a priest can not give what he has not got, so if he would give us what we seem to need, he should have experiences which make his faith strong, and such contact with the Comforter that he feels cheerful even if things are not all that they should be.

We want a man in whom we can have faith so if we ask him to pray for us in his secret chamber we can believe he will really make our cause his cause. And we do want a man who comes more than two or three times during a life-time.

May we all try very hard to express Jesus Christ in all that we do and say, and carry to those who are hungering for the gospel a living example of that message. Let us have implicit faith in God and his Son Jesus Christ.—Mildred Menzies.

Outstanding Missionary Effort by Aged Ministers

Joseph Lane and T. J. Bell Baptized Ten at Conclusion of Series

A successful series of meetings, held by Elders Joseph Lane and T. J. Bell, both eighty-one years of age, was brought to a close November 6, at the Downey Schoolhouse, Harrison County, Missouri.

The meetings were begun by Elders Joseph Lane and Amos Berve, but after one week's preaching, bad weather set in and a temporary halt was forced upon the workers. Then Brother Berve was obliged to leave for Independence. After the roads had dried sufficiently Brother Lane secured the assistance of Elder T. J. Bell, of Lamoni, Iowa, and they carried on the work for three more weeks. The men preached alternately, speaking to full houses of interested listeners.

Factors contributing to the success of the meetings were numerous. Mr. J. D. Snethen's home gave hospitality and care to the two aged preachers, and the host did much to interest and personally invite his neighbors to the meetings. Again the brothers were divinely assisted in preaching, both testifying to the wonderful power of the Holy Spirit enjoyed in their efforts.

Some opposition was encountered, but being met kindly yet firmly with Scripture evidence of the promises and work of God, it did no harm; rather it confirmed the truth of the message delivered, and created interest for the speakers.

The first principles of the gospel were the topics of the sermons delivered, and Brother Bell especially dwelt on the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead and the laying on of hands.

At the close of the series ten were baptized eight of whom were adults, and three children were blessed. These baptisms united the heads of three families in the church, and brought two other heads of families into the work.

Brother T. J. Bell first attended a General Conference at Plano, Illinois, in 1875, and was ordained an elder in 1880, by Alexander H. Smith. For over fifty years he has served faithfully in his office and has striven to magnify his calling. During this half century he has been a member of the fifth quorum of elders; also presided over the quorum for two years, and has spent eight years under General Conference appointment.

Brother Bell gives his testimony in these words: "As I entered this work, I obtained a testimony and evidence of the truthfulness of the gospel and the divinity of the Church. Through the years my convictions have become stronger for I have seen the sick healed, the lame made well, the blind receive their sight, and the mercy of a loving heavenly Father extended to weak and erring humanity."

Brother Joseph Lane has seen service in priesthood capacity as a priest, an elder and a high priest. He was baptized at Cainsville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1868. He was pastor of Pisgah Branch for nineteen years and served in the presidency of the Little Sioux (now Northwestern Iowa), District for eighteen years. His testimony is, "This work is divine. It was begun by God, and will finally be victorious. Every man should do his duty and put his shoulder to the wheel in every possible manner. All we are, and all we ever shall attain to we owe to the mercy of God. We belong to God."

Honolulu Saints Observe Birth- day of Elder G. J. Waller

Members Praise His Ministerial Labors

An event long to be remembered by many of the people of Honolulu was the large gathering of Saints and friends at the Main Branch on November 9. The occasion was to celebrate the seventy-third anniversary of the birth of Elder G. J. Waller.

It has been the happy custom for many years thus to remember the one who is affectionately called "Father" Waller, a name truly appropriate, for not only was he one of the first to sow the gospel seed among the people of these islands, but for over forty years he has watered and cultivated the vineyard, resulting in the conversion of hundreds and the erection of several nice houses of worship. The Honolulu Main Branch is one of the most ideally located of any in the whole church. His close contact with things spiritual and his thorough knowledge of the three books has made him a minister and teacher second to none. Brother Waller has been the greatest human factor in the spiritual and temporal development of these people. Always has he put the church and the needs of the Saints above his own interests. Whenever there has been need of his ministrations as a devoted servant of the Lord or his advice and assistance, as a leading and successful business man, in solving their financial and domestic problems, they look to him as the one eminently qualified by nature and training to help them.

This year the celebration was under the auspices of the priesthood of the Hawaiian, Japanese, and Chinese Branches. Invitations were sent to the Saints and friends, and a large and happy crowd gathered to honor this beloved brother. From the beginning with the organ offertory through to the closing prayer, every feature of the program was a fitting tribute to a life spent in loyal Christian service.

The following which comes from those who have known him all of their lives, represents their love and esteem.

Thomas M. Keli, an elder of the Hawaiian Branch and prominent government employee, says:

"Brother Waller has always put the law above the people. Even though often his sympathy and love of mercy have strongly favored the individual, the law of the Lord must be kept and mercy can not rob justice; a just judge in Israel."

Miss Winifred Piltz, president of the department of recreation and expression of Hawaiian Branch and a senior at the University of Hawaii expresses these sentiments:

"In my short life time I have met many, many people, a great number of whom are good Christians, law-abiding citizens, general church-goers, but none of them has impressed me so much as one man in particular. Almost everyone who comes in contact with him wonders what it is that sets him off so distinctly above other human beings. If you really want to know one reason why he is individualistic and peculiar in a kind way, sacrifice a football game, or a tennis match or the golf tournament or what have you, and spend a few hours with Brother Waller on a Saturday afternoon. I can assure you that those hours will be spent most profitably, without regret. You, will come close to the Savior, know Him, talk with Him, listen to Him, perhaps feel that you have been in His presence and satisfied your curious and questioning soul with an intangible happiness that no one can take away from you.

"I can still remember how, on that first Saturday, while visiting the tubercular patients in Leahi Home, my soul was humbled and touched as I followed Brother Waller from one place to another. As we entered the wards, those who were accustomed to his visits, turned their melancholy faces into such happy smiles that I was astonished at the power of his presence. As he extended his hand and they took it, there appeared in their eyes that glow of gratefulness which seemed to say, 'How happy your visits make us feel!' One inmate, a Chinese, always made me feel very happy. Even though we did not know anything about him, did not even know his name, he smiled continuously and bowed his head several times to show his appreciation when Brother Waller shook his hand. (I suppose he could not speak English.)

"I have followed Brother Waller to the bed-sides of many and heard him pray for the sick, and those prayers have been inspiring, simple, sincere, soothing to a weary soul, and effective as manifested in the expression of gratitude in the patients' faces. They look up as if Christ himself had come to take their ills away, and in order to show how much they appreciate Brother Waller's visits, some of them voluntarily give what they can afford, five cents or ten cents, as an offering to the church.

"I used to enjoy sitting at the bedside of one girl patient, listening to Brother Waller teach her from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the book of Doctrine and Covenants. I learned many things that I had never heard before and slowly, and gradually our three books became alive in my life. What opportunities, promises and blessings I had missed by not studying the books, and how delightful are my Saturday afternoons now! From one individual, the class of pupils has grown to nine, including both men and women, and the eagerness and attentiveness with which they listen to the gospel story pouring forth from the lips of Brother Waller would surprise many a Latter Day Saint. Sometimes they are simply amazed at the good news, and so am I. As I sit and watch these people, many a time do I think: Here is this silver-haired man, giving up his time for the Lord's work, bringing the gospel to these sick people, making them happy with his presence filled with cheerfulness, friendliness and the kindness that exists in Christ himself, serving others to make himself happy. Why can not there be more people like him in this world? Why can not I, and others in our church, try to be like Christ as Brother Waller has been and is?"

Keizo Tsuji, a priest and alumnus of the University of Hawaii, recently of Honolulu but now residing in Hilo, speaks thus, in a recent letter to Brother Waller:

"I always think of the Saints of the Japanese Branch. I think of your kind, fatherly ministrations in connection with the growth of that branch. I like to see you standing there before the Saints, full of love, teaching them the gospel of Christ. I like to watch you going from one Saint to another, from the youngest to the oldest, gently patting the little ones, kindly shaking the hands of the older ones. One feels the welcome invitation of the Master in your tender greetings; the warm benediction of the Savior as you bid them good-bye! You have indeed been the 'good shepherd' these many years, and may God bless you abundantly that you may continue to minister unto His people."

David Kumada, a priest and holding a responsible position with a large local meat company, is an enthusiastic worker and shows his appreciation in these words:

"The members of the Japanese Branch are proud and happy to have as their shepherd and leader Elder G. J. Waller, for he has shown by his many, many years of untiring and unceasing efforts in the service of the Lord that he is a true and loyal soldier of Christ and also a tender, loving and kind father to the sheep and lambs of the flock, especially the Japanese people.

"It has been Brother Waller's desire to see a Japanese Branch established and be presided over by officers of the Japanese race and today, after years of patient and diligent work, his dreams are coming true. We have at present in the Japanese Branch, a priest, teacher, and deacon, all of whom are Japanese. In the Sunday school department we also have officers who are all young Japanese, and they are carrying on this department very well."

Samuel A. Lee, recently ordained a priest of the Chinese Branch and prominent young business man, says:

"Brother Waller has been and is a brother, father, and friend to those who have made his acquaintance. In the short space of time that I have been associated with this brother in the church work in the Japanese and Chinese Branches, I have found him to be of great comfort and consolation and also an inspiration to me and other members of the church. Often I marvel at his vitality and on different occasions in accompanying him in his visits and different church services, though less than half his age, I have found it not very easy to keep pace with him. Realizing this, I have come to the conclusion that this, our brother, is immensely blessed of God. My words can not do justice in expressing the praise I have in my heart for our beloved Father Waller."

How many men in the church have as active a program and manage a large business as well? This is Brother Waller's weekly schedule:

Monday night, he visits Hawaiian Branch members with a Hawaiian priest. Tuesday night, he visits Japanese members, teaches a class in the Book of Mormon and afterwards attends Japanese prayer meeting. Wednesday night, he attends prayer meeting with Hawaiian Saints. Thursday night, he visits members of Chinese Branch and attends afterwards, the Chinese prayer meeting. Friday night, he attends meeting of the department of recreation and expression of the Hawaiian Branch and also visits members. Saturday afternoon, he visits members; also the patients at the large Territorial Tubercular Home. Sunday, his activities commence at 8.30 a. m., with teaching a class at the Japanese Sunday school. Afterwards he preaches. Then he goes to the Chinese Branch where he preaches. Next, to the Hawaiian Branch where he preaches or presides over the meeting. Sunday afternoon, he either visits or prepares sermons. At 6 p. m., he attends Japanese recreation and expression meeting, teaching a Bible class. Concludes day's work by preaching to the Hawaiian Saints. For about forty years, Elder Waller has been in charge of this mission and as bishop's agent, has had charge of its finances. Is there any wonder he is called Father Waller?

Saint Thomas, Ontario

Twenty-five Baptized This Year

The young men's class of the Sunday school had charge of a recent Sunday evening's service which was a great success. Hopes were expressed that these young fellows would again do their part. Elder Percy Farrow was the speaker, and his sermon was much enjoyed. A young brother and sister were baptized by Brother Farrow, bringing the total of those who have this year united with the branch, up to twenty-five.

The Sunday school is progressing. Attendance averages about ninety. The pupils are now preparing for the Christmas entertainment.

The Religio is holding meeting each week and interest is good.

The young women's club is preparing a play to be given soon.

The building committee is hard at work, finishing the new basement. These workers have just completed the decorating of the church parlor. Such improvements are much appreciated by the members of the branch.

The women meet each week for sewing and other activities.

The Jiggs supper recently held at the church was most successful. The lower auditorium was beautifully decorated, and there were a number of the cartoons of Jiggs to make the atmosphere more realistic. Mrs. N. Kelley and Mrs. Preston Ford were in charge of the tables. Food was excellent, and the wish was expressed that the women make this a more frequent occurrence rather than an annual event. Mrs. I. Kinsman, president of the department, also convener of the supper, was much pleased over the response given to the supper. About three hundred were served.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The ministry of the stake met at three o'clock Sunday afternoon, December 4, at Central church and Stake President C. E. Wight gave a blackboard outline of the subject, "The Enlarging of Our Loyalties." He stressed the fact that the aspiring person, who sincerely, perhaps zealously, labors to build up a department according to his own plan rather than by the plan adopted by the church, is manifesting disloyalty. Loyalty outside our own task was urged upon the priesthood.

The quorums, also others of the ministry, will meet together the third Sunday of each month at 3 p. m. for an hour of study or a lecture, then the quorums will adjourn to their rooms for a half hour of additional study or the transaction of business. The plan is to accommodate all the groups of the ministry with one session a month rather than two as are conducted at present.

The special drive for funds to liquidate the general church debt is now in progress, there being a corps of some sixty special solicitors at work. Results will be checked at a later date, according to State Bishop C. A. Skinner.

Argentine Church

The sacrament service, December 4, was well attended and a worshipful spirit prevailed. In the evening Bishop F. B. Blair gave an instructive discourse, using as a basis of his talk Matthew 7:34. "Does Death End All?" was his topic.

Gladstone Church

C. A. Selbe, pastor since the organization of the Gladstone congregation, died November 21, after an illness of about one year. Brother Selbe had served faithfully for many years in Kansas City Stake, having been pastor of Bennington Heights and North East Groups before his appointment as pastor at Gladstone. He was a student of all good books, especially the Doctrine and Covenants, Bible, and Book of Mormon. His many friends who went to him for counsel will miss him. The group at Gladstone desires to live up to his example.

Incidents in the life of Joseph Smith III and some of his favorite hymns were sung in observance of the centennial anniversary of his birth.

The evening of November 27, Elder W. E. Shakespeare, of Independence, brought his lantern and slides and gave an enjoyable lecture. He showed pictures taken on Indian reservation, and related experiences had while laboring among the Indians as missionary of the church.

Bennington Church

The funeral services of Brother C. A. Selbe were held at Bennington Heights November 23, Stake President C. E. Wight preaching the sermon. He died at his home, 1212 Bennington Avenue, after a year's illness. He was the first pastor of Bennington Heights Church, and also a member of the stake high council since its organization in 1916. Was also pastor for several years of North East and Gladstone Churches just prior to his death. He is survived by his wife and son. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

Bennington Heights church won honorable mention for costumes and the manner in which they worked together in the play tournament of Kansas City Stake conducted November 28, 29, and 30. Though they did not succeed in winning the cup, they gained many helpful experiences.

Bradner, Ohio

All Departments Going Forward—a Visit From G. T. Griffiths

Local members are strong in the faith and active in the several departments of the branch. The prayer meetings are inspirational and well attended. Under the leadership of Elder Franklin Slye, Bradner Branch is progressing. Elder William Smith, the leader of the department of recreation, is doing a good work. The Sunday school is always well attended. Sister E. L. Ulrich is superintendent and she has the gift of leadership. Each Sunday the program is varied, and interests young and old. The young people are very active. They have organized and under the leadership of their teacher, Elder F. Slye, they have planned to do much for their Master and the branch in the coming year.

Sylvania Branch entertained the Northwestern Ohio conference November 26 and 27, which was a representative gathering. Business session opened promptly at 2 p. m., Patriarch G. T. Griffiths in charge. At four o'clock Apostle C. F. Ellis arrived and took his place on the platform.

Elder R. F. Slye, of Bradner, was elected district president; Harry Ries, Sylvania, secretary; Roy Yeager, also of Sylvania, treasurer; Sister Brandon Smith, Bradner, musical director.

Brothers Ellis and Griffiths gave splendid talks and encouragement.

At five-thirty Sylvania women served a fine meal in the basement of the church, and in the evening a program was presented in which the following branches were represented, Saint Marys, Oak Harbor, Toledo, Bradner, and Sylvania.

That night the host branch members cared for visitors in their homes. And on Sunday the eight-thirty prayer service was in charge of Patriarch G. T. Griffiths and Elder Clarence Holmes, of Toledo. The morning sermon was by Apostle Ellis. Then came dinner at the church. At two-thirty in the afternoon William Bryan Cramer was ordained to the office of priest by Brothers Griffiths and Elder Holmes. At three o'clock Brother Griffiths used "Experiences" as the theme of a good talk.

Brother Griffiths accompanied Bradner Saints home and remained until Thursday morning.

The district held a young people's convention at Bradner in September. This was well attended, and the visitors were given a hamburger fry Saturday evening near the river, and entertained in other functions.

Fanning, Kansas

Elder J. W. A. Bailey Gives Lecture Series

The last few weeks have been busy ones for Fanning Saints, and the unusually pleasant weather added to the pleasure of various activities. Elder J. W. A. Bailey, of Independence, Missouri, held a series of meetings lasting from November 25 to December 4. Brother Bailey gave some interesting lectures on Bible themes, using charts and pictures to make his lectures more vivid. Each night found the attendance a little larger than that of the night before until on his closing night, Sunday, when he gave his illustrated lecture on, "Solomon's Temple," the church was filled.

On November 15, the branch gathered at the church for a farewell party for the James A. Thomas family who left the following week for Atherton, Missouri, to make their home. Following a short program an oyster supper was served. Brother and Sister Thomas have been faithful and sincere workers and they will be greatly missed.

Velma and Nellie Wiley entertained the young people's class on Thursday night, November 17. The group voted to present a three-act play again this winter, and they will begin work on the play soon.

Elder Samuel Twombly was called to Blue Rapids, Kansas, November 15, to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Verna Fenner Howland, daughter of Brother and Sister George Fenner, of Blue Rapids.

November 18, Brother Twombly conducted the funeral services of Mrs. Emma Holton at the Christian Church in Sparks.

The December sacrament service was in charge of Elder Samuel Twombly assisted by Elders William Marsh and J. W. A. Bailey. The prayer and testimony meeting was dispensed with in order that the congregation might listen to another sermon by Brother Bailey.

Other recent speakers besides Brother Bailey have been Elders William Marsh, Samuel Twombly, William Twombly, and James A. Thomas.

Young People Take Prominent Part in Spring River Conference

President Elbert A. Smith and Apostle J. F. Garver There

From a historical standpoint the Spring River district conference is over, but workers believe the spirit and encouragement received there will continue to bring forth fruit in the lives of the people for years to come.

As is the custom of the district the opening session was held on Friday evening with the district young people in charge, President Albert Cobb, of Webb City, presiding. The Joplin Orchestra rendered several selections during the evening, and the three-act play, "An Old-fashioned Mother," was presented by Joplin young people under the direction of Sisters Grace Lohr and Carrie Gray; also a vocal solo by Dorothy Mottet, of Webb City. This provided full two hours of entertainment.

Saturday morning a prayer service was presided over by District President Amos T. Higdon and Elders Alvin Smith, of Miami, Oklahoma, and Ira O. Waldron, of Webb City.

This was followed at 10 a. m. by the first business session of the conference in charge of the district presidency, President Elbert A. Smith, Apostle J. F. Garver, and Brother Higdon. Among other suggestions made by the district presidency for the coming year's work, Brother Higdon gave the following slogan, "Every Saint a tithe payer and the Saints' Herald in every home."

At the close of the regular routine of reports and business, the following persons were called on for short talks: Mrs. Carl Hobart, Webb City, district women's leader; Mrs. A. N. Deaver, Webb City, district chorister; Norman W. Gray, Parsons, Kansas, bishop's agent; Raymond Troyer, Joplin, Missouri, publicity agent; Frank Kyser, Miami, Oklahoma, branch president, of Cardin, Oklahoma; Lee Quick, Mapleton, Kansas, district missionary.

A petition to Congress protesting against the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States was presented by Ira O. Waldron, of Webb City, for signatures. The papers were both well filled.

Spring River District voted to waive all interest on church bonds between now and date of maturity. At the close of the afternoon business session President Elbert A. Smith and Apostle John F. Garver gave short talks. Elder Lee Quick preached Saturday evening.

Sunday morning the young people's eight o'clock prayer service was in charge of Brother Higdon, assisted by Brother Kyser and Brother Farris, of Joplin.

District and local officers presided over the church school at nine-thirty. District Supervisor Ronald G. Smith, of Pittsburg, Kansas, delivered the address. Brother Waldron also gave a fine talk, and there was a reading by Miss Dorothy Kyser, of Miami.

Apostle Garver presided at the eleven o'clock hour and introduced the speaker, President Elbert A. Smith, of Independence, Missouri. Those who have heard Brother Elbert, or who read the Herald, know better than can here be expressed the appreciation of Spring River Saints for the opportunity to hear him.

A special ordination service was arranged for two o'clock Sunday afternoon, the following men having been called and provision made for their ordination: Elmer Harpham, Verona, Missouri, elder; Norman W. Gray, Parsons, Kansas, elder; Arthur Laymon, Parsons, deacon; Roy G. Oehring, Webb City, Missouri, priest. President Elbert A. Smith gave the charge to the men, and the right hand of fellowship was extended them by District President Amos T. Higdon. President Smith then introduced Apostle Garver who gave a splendid discourse.

In closing Brother Smith gave a short history of the hymn, "Let Us Shake off the Coals From Our Garments," written by his father, David Smith, when a boy of nineteen years. The hymn was then sung by the conference.

At 4.30 p. m. a musical program was in charge of the district chorister, Sister A. N. Deaver, and at the close of this service visiting young people were entertained by the young people of Joplin at the home of Brother and Sister C. T. Sheppard until church time. About seventy-five were there.

Elder Amos T. Higdon preached the closing sermon Sunday evening.

The next conference will meet at Miami, Oklahoma, in May, 1933, by the unanimous vote of the body.

Fine meals were served the conference by the women of Joplin. They deserve credit for their work.

Apostle Garver and Elder Higdon visited several branches in the district on their way to Springfield to attend the Southern Missouri district conference December 2, 3, and 4.

Brother Quick went to Carthage where he began a series of meetings leading up to the Carthage Home-coming Sunday, December 4.

Edmonton, Alberta

10545 Eighty-first Avenue, South
Edmonton

This northerly outpost of the church is continuing in the gospel work and doing all in its power to keep the faith. In common with the church at large local activities have been affected by the past two years of depression, but the Saints are not discouraged.

The branch membership has increased chiefly by transfer, and all new members are taking an active interest in the work. Elder William Osler, who for nineteen years was a General Conference appointee but is now released, is the pastor. His leadership and sermons are resulting in larger attendance and added interest at all services. He is planning special sermons and illustrated lectures for the remainder of the winter season.

The church school is ably led by the well-liked superintendent, Lee Roy Allen, who is assisted by a loyal and capable staff of teachers. The senior young people's class under the care of Sister Ruth Osler is assisting in the leading of the branch.

The Saints were glad to welcome back to Edmonton Brother and Sister Robert A. Allish and family after an absence of two years. They were in Toronto.

Christmas preparations are now under way. The entertainment this year promises to surpass all previous records.

Local Saints are earnestly endeavoring to liquidate present indebtedness and start 1933 free of all incumbrances.

Edmonton Branch will soon be twenty years old, and is continually growing stronger in the faith of the restored gospel.

The pastor's address is 11012 University Avenue, and that of the church 10545 Eighty-first Avenue, in South Edmonton. The Saints are always glad to welcome visiting members.

Los Angeles, California

East Church

At present this little branch is bubbling over with activity. The women have eagerly responded to the S. O. S. sent out by President F. M. McDowell. Their goal is set for seventy-five dollars for the general church, and they expect to reach this goal, having devised various plans for raising the money.

This congregation has a well-filled storehouse under the supervision of Sister Anna Jasper, which has been a great help in these times of stress.

During the last few months the young people have progressed under the leadership of Brother and Sister Leneve. They enjoyed many trips during the summer both to the mountains and seashore; also visited Lennox Mission and Santa Barbara Branch.

The opening of school in September found attendance below the usual number, but at present the average has been built up to about twenty members.

The most outstanding activity was a Halloween party October 29. Young people from Long Beach, Lennox and Santa Barbara were invited. About seventy were present.

In the latter part of October Sister Laura Packard came here to assist in directing the young people. Since there was a great need for a dramatic leader in the branch, they have derived much benefit from her coming.

The Saints were happy to have Apostle E. J. Gleazer here two evenings, and hope to have him for a series of meetings in the near future.

September 29, LaVerne, four-year-old son of Sister Vivian Foster, was struck by an automobile and seriously injured. He was taken to the hospital where it was found he had concussion of the brain, skull fracture, and a broken leg. He lay in a state of unconsciousness for a week. Brother J. C. Stuart administered to him the night of the accident, but hospital conditions made it impossible for further administration, so the Saints and neighbors of Sister Foster made it a subject of prayer, that if it was the Lord's will the little one should be healed. The day he awakened his mind was clear and he began rapidly to recover, much to the amazement of doctors and nurses. He is still in the hospital, but seems to be healthy and happy. Owing to the seriousness of the injury, the hospital authorities have taken every precaution that no complications arise. They have kept a traction on the broken limb, and it has adjusted itself. They marvel at this fact. The Saints thank God for his tender mercy toward them.

Oelwein, Iowa

District President E. R. Davis Holds Services

Fall activities in this branch began with the annual business meeting for the election of officers. This meeting held September 30, was followed by the installation services October 9. District President E. R. Davis came from Cedar Rapids where he was holding special meetings, and had charge of the installation service which was impressive.

Graceland College Day was observed October 23 and the usual offering was taken for the Graceland Scholarship Loan Fund.

The centennial anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith was celebrated with an appropriate program in charge of Sister Charles Shippy. The program left the Saints the desire to carry on for the sake of one who did his best for his people and proved noble to a great cause.

Elder E. R. Davis held special services the latter part of October for several evenings. Brother Davis always has much to offer the Saints. He is "ever on the job" and sets a splendid example to those about him.

The branch had the privilege of hearing Brother Walter Woodward, of Cedar Rapids, who drove to Oelwein one Sunday with his wife and baby, Grenfell.

The Saints enjoyed a Halloween party at the home of Brother and Sister Adna Clark. An appropriate setting and program made the party an enjoyable one.

The Emma Burton Circle, under the direction of Sister George McFarlane for the new year, held a bake sale and netted seventeen dollars which was turned in as sacrifice offering to the general church. The women were so pleased at the results that another bake sale is to be held the day before Christmas. The members are asked to donate three articles, cakes, pies, cookies, etc., and a "batch" of candy.

Preparations are now under way for the Christmas program.

Independence

An epidemic of flu has swept Independence and vicinity for the past two weeks. Pneumonia has also been prevalent. There is much sickness at present among the Saints. Elder John F. Sheehy, pastor in Independence, has been very ill for eight days at his home, and was especially mentioned in the prayers for the sick at the Stone Church Sunday morning. But despite illness in their homes the workers are carrying on routine activities, and plans for Christmas are going forward.

At their sixth weekly meeting, December 5, the women of Independence collected a sum of $206.05, which makes the present total of their sacrifice gift to the church, $1,530. President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker at this meeting, and the Laurel Club was in charge of the program. Bishops G. Leslie DeLapp and J. S. Kelley and Pastor Sheehy were also present.

Stone Church

Deep snow and near zero weather gave the Stone Church a foretaste of Christmas on Sunday. But many were unable to attend services because of sickness or cold.

The speaker Sunday morning was Elder Ward A. Hougas, president of Far West Stake, who is now making his home in Independence and acting as business manager of the Herald Publishing House.

Music was by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig; Robert Miller was at the organ. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder Ephraim Brown.

In the evening the Cantanina Chorus or "Singing Girls" gave their annual Christmas concert under the direction of their leader, Mrs. Bertha Burgess. Their chorus work on some of the world's favorite Christmas carols, "O Come All Ye Faithful," "Sleep, Holy Child," and "The First Noel" was excellent, and the congregation also appreciated special vocal contributions by Miss Marcine Turner, Miss Verna Kelsey, the Brackenbury sisters, and the Shupe sisters, all members of the chorus. Miss Doris May, accordionist, played, "O Holy Night," and "Joy to the World," and Miss Elinor Smith, harpist, played "The Nun's Prayer," by Oberthur, in addition to accompanying other numbers. "On Wings of Song," a piano solo, was played by Miss Joy Harder. Miss Erma Quick is the accompanist of the chorus, and the singers were assisted in their program by Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee, organist.

Six years ago Mrs. Bertha Burgess organized this group of singers as part of her teaching routine. During the past two years this three-part chorus of young women from fifteen to twenty years of age, has had much success in musical work. Every Sunday evening the chorus may be heard over KMBC at six fifteen, and over the western chain at six forty-five.

Sister Frank O. Thomason, sixty-four years of age, died December 8, at the Sanitarium. She had been in poor health for months, but had been seriously ill only a short time. She is survived by two sons, Neal Thomason, of the home, and Berdett Thomason, of Denver, Colorado, and a daughter, Miss Gladys Thomason, of Oakland, California. The funeral was held from the Stone Church Monday afternoon.

Second Church

An organ prelude played by Mrs. Gladys Inman opened the sacrament service December 4. Following the invocation by R. C. Conyers, Pastor William Inman read the Scripture lesson, Luke 10:25-38. Elder S. M. Inman talked concerning the oblation and its uses. A talk on the communion by Pastor W. N. Inman was followed by a period of meditation during the preparation of the sacrament. Simplicity and order marked the entire service.

The seven thirty service opened with the number, "Lead Thou Me On," composed by Joseph Smith. The second song, "Beneath the Darkest Cloud," was also composed by Brother Smith. Pastor W. N. Inman offered the prayer, and Elder C. E. Miller gave an instructive illustrated lecture on the life of Joseph Smith. "We Thank Thee, O God for a Prophet," was the closing song.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Collins lost their infant son through death. The burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery Sunday, December 4.

The congregation is planning its Christmas program and quite a number of contributions have been received for the children's treats.

Walnut Park Church

Unfavorable weather conditions held attendance down at all church services Sunday. Apostle J. A. Gillen was the speaker in the morning and Elder Ward A. Hougas occupied the pulpit at the evening service.

The Galilean Class of the church school, Brother Imal Burke, teacher, is sponsoring two worthy enterprises at the present time. The women's department canvassed the district recently and discovered that there are eighteen families of Saints who will have very little Christmas this year unless they have outside help. The Galileans have undertaken the task of organizing the facilities of the congregation to see that none are deprived of the things which help to make Christmas merry.

A series of missionary meetings, Elder

George Jenkins speaker, is also being conducted under the sponsorship of the Galilean Class. These meetings are being held each Thursday evening at the home of Brother and Sister W. B. Haskins, at the corner of East Sea and Haden Streets.

A new young people's class in the church school was organized Sunday morning. The Swastika Class had become too large for effective work, and it was thought best to divide it. The junior members have formed a new class with Brother O. L. Athey as teacher. The senior members will continue as the Swastika Class, under their present teacher.

The following program was presented at the Religio session Sunday evening: Cornet solo, Harold Dillee; reading, Patty Lou Campbell; vocal duet, Beatrice Butterworth and Dorothy Countryman; reading, Wanda June Crandall; two violin quartets by Orlando Nace, Maurine Nace, Bethene Barnhardt and Martha Phillips; and a talk by Brother Imal Burke.

An unfortunate accident occurred to one of the members of the Walnut Park congregation on Wednesday evening, December 7. Sister Lillie E. Davis was struck by a Missouri Pacific passenger train as she was crossing the tracks at Alton Avenue. Her left foot was so badly injured that it was found necessary to amputate it later that night. She was taken to the Sanitarium, where she is reported to be improving. This accident is very much regretted by her friends at Walnut Park.

Enoch Hill Church

Saints of this district were saddened by the death of a faithful member, Sister J. F. Campbell, who passed away November 27. Though she had been in ill health for some time, she regularly attended church services and was always among the first to offer her testimony. Surviving are her husband, James F. Campbell of the home; three daughters: Mrs. Hortense Hilton and Mrs. Beulah Gow, both of Chicago, and Miss Edna Campbell, of the home; three sons: Lewis Temple, Lincoln, Nebraska; Arthur Campbell, and Irvin Campbell, of Independence. The funeral at the church November 28, was in charge of Elder Harold Hattey, jr.

"Peace on Earth, God's Will Toward Men" has been selected as the theme of the church school worship period for the month of December. On December 4, Pastor H. L. Barto gave a short talk on how we may help in bringing Christmas cheer into the homes of those out of employment. This was followed by a song by the intermediate girls, "Give and It Shall Be Given Unto You."

Preceding the evening service the choir, under the direction of Mrs. A. E. Allen, gave a short missionary program. They sang, "Win Them One by One," and "The Little White Church on Enoch Hill," after which "Hello" was read by a member of the choir. At the opening of the services the choir sang, "There Is Home at the End of the Road," and Miss Pearl Chrestensen sang, "Dream of Paradise." The speaker for the evening was Elder Harold Hattey, jr. Brother Hattey, now pastor at Bates City, is a former member of this branch. For a theme he took, "Choose Ye This Day Whom Ye Would Serve."

The Dorcas Class held their last meeting at the home of Mrs. Henry Hartman. This class has been holding monthly meetings for a year, and attendance is usually one hundred per cent. Their theme at this last meeting was, "Patriarchal Blessings," and each one told how much her blessing had helped her.

On December 11, Elder H. E. Winegar gave an interesting talk at the church school hour on the theme of the month, and William Worth, jr., sang, "Come Sweet Comforter."

Elder C. B. Woodstock occupied the pulpit, and the choir sang "Loyalty Unto Christ."

"What Was Witnessed in the Heavens," was sung by Millard Pace and W. T. Shakespeare at the opening of the services Sunday evening. The choir sang "Onward Christian Soldiers," and Richard Bullard sang "Onward to Zion." Elder George Jenkins was the speaker.

Spring Branch Church

The women's department is very busy. The members meet each Thursday, and are piecing quilt blocks, tying comforts for people who need additional bedclothes this cold weather, gathering up and repairing toys for needy children at Christmas time. They plan to hold a bake sale December 17, at Brother Andy Goode's store.

The prayer meeting at the church last Wednesday night was in charge of Robert Fish and Jessie Smith. There was also a prayer service at the C. J. Dixon home attended by several who had not been out for some time. This latter meeting was in charge of Jake and Sam Andes.

On Sunday morning at the prayer meeting Brother Alma Tankard recalled early scenes of the camp of the Saints at Fishing River. Nearly everyone of the many present took part at the hour. Charles D. Brewer assisted Brother Tankard in charge.

Sister Latta gave a talk at the Sunday school hour.

Brother J. S. Andes took his Sunday school class to visit the Watson Memorial Methodist Church Sunday school last Sunday morning.

Bishop R. T. Cooper was the speaker at eleven o'clock. Brother J. A. Holsworth occupied the stand in the evening. At both preaching services there were musical numbers by local singers who are faithful to help.

At the night church school session Brother Andes's class furnished the program.

Seven Baptized—Young People Organized

Forward to Zion is the spirit that has been left in Philadelphia Branch by President F. M. McDowell and Apostle Paul M. Hanson.

The young people's council met at the church the evening of November 20, to elect officers. The following were chosen: President, Violet James; secretary, Eleanor Lewis. The council will meet at the church the first Wednesday of each month. The organizing of the young people of the branch has been an important step toward keeping them together.

On Thanksgiving Day a prayer meeting was conducted by the pastor, Brother J. L. Livingston, at nine-thirty in the morning. A wonderful Spirit was felt and many testified of the goodness of God to them. A Thanksgiving offering was taken up for the general church.

On Wednesday evening Sister Beckman and her class of girls took charge of getting the baskets ready for Thanksgiving Day to be distributed among the needy.

The Sunday evening service when seven new members were born into the kingdom through the waters of baptism, was beautiful. Pastor J. L. Livingston officiated.

The K. U. Club of this branch has been busy. Its activities started with a buffet supper given at the time of the young people's convention. Then the club was asked to take charge of Thanksgiving baskets. Not long ago the club gave a miscellaneous shower for Miss Katherine Schafer who is to be married December 19. The shower, which was a complete surprise to Miss Schafer, took place at the home of Sister Ruth Beckman. The K. U. Club has been honored with an invitation to be hostesses at the wedding reception.

The Clover Club met at the home of Sister Jennie Lewis on a recent Wednesday evening. This group is taking up the study of the Book of Mormon for credits. Brother Hanson's lectures have been a great help to these students. The club has always served refreshments, but for the present the members have decided to forego these, donating the money generally spent for food to the general church as one of their contributions toward sweeping away the debt. Members have also decided to sell magazines and turn over their profits to the general church fund.

The sacrament service December 4, was well attended, and a good spirit prevailed. There were seven confirmations of candidates baptized the previous Sunday, and four babies were blessed.

The young people's prayer meeting at six-thirty in the evening was well attended. Brother Samuel Worrell, leader of young people, was in charge.

Our Departed Ones

JAMES.—Mary Ellen Williamson, daughter of Thomas and Mary Elizabeth Williamson, was born at Market Deeping, Lincolnshire, England, June 26, 1849. She came to America with her parents when she was three years of age. The family settled in Pittsfield, Pike County, Illinois. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints July 26, 1863, by Elder Hugh Lytle, and was a faithful and devoted member all her life. February 18, 1869, she was united in marriage to Thomas James, and to them five children were born. Harriet, the second child, died at the age of two and one half years; Orville L., the first born, died as the result of an automobile accident in 1927; Frank A., the fourth child, passed away in 1910. Two daughters, Mrs. Amy Wells, and Edna Esgar, five grandchildren, and one great-grandchild survive together with one sister, Mrs. Frances Hilliard; two brothers, W. H. Williamson, and Charles Williamson, many other relatives and friends. Her husband, a Civil War veteran and postmaster in Independence during the administration of Benjamin Harrison, died in 1903. They came to Independence in 1883. She was a woman of refinement, noble character, and unswerving devotion to duty. By precept and example she inspired her children and other loved ones to make right judgments and to be loyal to the faith which she had espoused in her youth. She was stricken with a serious illness more than a year ago, but rallied and was enjoying a good convalescence when she fell and fractured her hip. Death released her from pain and suffering November 6, 1932, at Independence. President F. M. Smith was in charge of the funeral from the Stahl Funeral Home, November 8, and preached the sermon. He was assisted by Patriarch F. A. Smith.

GREGG.—Ida Florence Harrington was born at Audubon, Audubon County, Iowa, October 15, 1865, and died at her home at Valentine, Nebraska, October 22, 1932. Her death was caused by heart trouble. She was married to Thomas Jefferson Gregg at Great Bend, Kansas, September 20, 1884, and to them seven children were born: Claude Gregg, Mrs. Peter Kesselring, Mrs. Harry Bowdish, Mrs. Frank Anderson, John Gregg, and George Gregg, all of Valentine; also Grover Gregg, of Bulk, Idaho, and Henry Tienken, of Kansas City, Missouri, a son by a former marriage. These survive to mourn the death of a honored and respected mother. There are also two sisters who survive, Mrs. Eli London, of Ellsworth, Nebraska, and Mrs. Dick Gregg, of Wagner, South Dakota; one brother, Marshall Harrington, of Rapid City, South Dakota; twenty-nine grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. She moved with her husband to Valentine in 1915, and had lived there most of the time since. Early in life she united with the Christian Church, but on Thanksgiving Day, 1921, she joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Funeral services were conducted by the Reverend T. A. Barton, October 24, from the Wilkinson Funeral Home, and interment was in Mount Hope Cemetery. Just one week before her death she was administered to by M. A. Peterson, of Neligh, Nebraska, at which time she received a blessing both spiritually and physically.

KENDALL.—Blake Kendall, son of Mrs. Addie Kendall, of Valentine, Nebraska, was born June 15, 1910, and passed away October 30, 1932, at Beatrice, Nebraska. He leaves to mourn his death, his mother, three brothers: Parker, Morris, and Levi, and three sisters: Evelyn, Esther, and Virginia. His mother and sisters are all members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. M. A. Peterson, of Neligh, conducted the funeral services at the home of the family in Valentine. Interment was in Mount Hope Cemetery, Valentine.

HARLOW.—Olive Harlow, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Wyant, was born May 10, 1858, near Sabula, Iowa. She married Benjamin E. Harlow about the year 1875. To them were born four daughters: Joye Viola, Jessie Lee, Gladys Irene, and Naomi Ray, and two sons, Victor R. and Ben R. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints about twenty-eight years ago, and lived a devoted member. Died November 12, 1932, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lee, of Shreveport, Louisiana. She is survived by her children, six grandchildren, and many friends. The funeral was held at Wilkerson Funeral Home, De Queen, Arkansas. The sermon was by T. B. Sharp, assisted by A. M. Baker.

RULEY.—Victoria Ruley was born at Nelsonville, Athens County, Ohio, February 22, 1847. She died October 9, 1932, at Parkersburg, West Virginia. She was married to Charles Granville Ruley in 1865, and to them ten children were born, three sons and seven daughters. Surviving are nine children: Charles Ruley, Minnie Young, Nellie Davis, Addie Shutts all of Parkersburg, West Virginia; Ida Elexander and Olive Rush, of Akron, Ohio; Clara Manier, of Pennsboro, West Virginia; Joshua Ruley, of California; Joseph Ruley, of Chillicothe, Ohio; two brothers, and one sister. Her husband and one daughter preceded her in death. She was baptized into the church fifty years ago by D. L. Shinn at Cabin Run, West Virginia, and was a true Latter Day Saint. The gospel was her daily theme. The funeral sermon was by J. C. McConnaughy, and interment was in Mount Olive Cemetery, Parkersburg, West Virginia.

LOWRY.—Mary M. Lowry was born in Carroll County, Missouri, March 3, 1850. Died November 2, 1932, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. A. Atwell, Independence, Missouri. She was the wife of Richard Lowry, a Civil War veteran. They were married August 19, 1866. To them were born eight children, six of whom survive their mother: two daughters, Mrs. Atwell and Mrs. Iva Smith, Hensley, Arkansas; four sons, O. R. Lowry, Shoshone, Idaho; Art Lowry, Portland, Oregon; Roy Lowry, Denver, Colorado, and Will Lowry, Kansas City, Missouri. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Rich Hill, Missouri, April 23, 1893, by Emsley Curtis. One daughter preceded her in baptism, and another followed later. She remained faithful to the church and died with a full assurance of a glorious resurrection. The funeral was conducted from Carson and Sons Undertaking Parlors. The sermon was preached by Elder E. A. Davis, assisted by Elder J. M. Baker. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

KISSINGER.—Dora Hilton, daughter of James and Jane Hilton, was born in Morrow County, Ohio, January 17, 1861, and departed this life at her home in Angola, Indiana, November 23, 1932. At an early age she moved with the family to Steuben County, Indiana, where she spent the remainder of her life.

December 25, 1883, she was united in marriage to Charles Kissinger who survives. To this union were born three daughters, Katie, who died in infancy, Birdie, and Hazel. They established their home in Scott Township and through untiring industry became substantial citizens of the community. Following the discussion at South Scott, between Elder S. W. L. Scott and the Reverend Clark Braden, truth dawned upon her mind, and she with her husband and others, united with the Reorganized Church, remaining true to the gospel the rest of her life. She lived a long and useful life and was the personification of saintly graces, devoted to family, friends, neighbors, honorable, and exemplary. Left to mourn are her husband, two daughters, Mrs. Virgil Metz and Mrs. Guy Henry, three grandchildren, one brother, three sisters, and other relatives and friends. The funeral, November 26, was conducted from the South Scott church, a large concourse of people attending. Elder S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, preached the sermon. The committal service was conducted across the highway from the church.

PHILLIPS.—Charlot Carter Mathis was born at Provo, Utah, August 21, 1898, died November 15, 1932. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in childhood and lived a consistent member until her death. Married Fred D. Phillips in 1915. To this union five children were born. Her husband and one child, a babe, preceded her in death. Of her family there survive the grandfather, Donnicus Carter; the parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Mathis; four children: Alfred, Dorothy, Earl D. and Ralph; five brothers, Robert, Allen, William, Clarence, and Milton Mathis, three sisters, Mrs. Minnie Wooden, Eleanor and Fay Mathis, with many other relatives and friends. The funeral was November 17, from the Masonic Temple in Provo, Elder S. S. Holm in charge and A. M. Chase, speaker. Interment in Provo City Cemetery.

CURTIS.—John T. Curtis was born November 26, 1860, in Crawford County, Illinois, was tutored in the Christian Church from childhood. He was baptized into the Christian Church in 1881, lived to the best light he had until 1891, then under the influence of God, through the preaching of a cousin, Emsly Curtis, was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Moved to Independence, Missouri, in 1905. He was ordained to the office of teacher; served in that capacity until 1910, then Second Church, Independence, was organized, and he was ordained a priest. In that capacity he served until November 1, 1928, when he was ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood under the hands of F. A. Smith and R. J. Lambert. He was united in marriage to Mary E. Boyd December 24, 1880, and to them eight children were born: three boys and five girls. One daughter, Nellie, preceded him in death. He leaves his wife, seven children: Alfred, Ira, and Ray Curtis, Celia Boyd, Goldie Wisemore, Virgie Fulk, Flossie Crane; twenty grandchildren, four great-grandchildren, and a host of other relatives and friends to mourn his departure. He died November 26, 1932. He was a man who governed his life after these two mottoes: "Our service to others is the rent we pay for the space we occupy in this life," and "The test of a man's worth is what he has done for his community." He was a father to Second Church congregation. He donated the lot on which the church building stands, contributed many days of labor to erecting the structure, and also gave financial support. He tried to live the financial and spiritual law of the church. The funeral was conducted at Second Church as nearly as possible according to the arrangements Brother Curtis himself had requested and made, and was very largely attended. Elder T. A. Beck was in charge, and Elder George Jenkins preached the sermon. The pallbearers were his three sons and three of his sons-in-law. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SAGE.—George Henry Sage was born in England, May 12, 1859. He departed this life November 17, 1932, leaving to mourn, his wife, Alice, one son living near Tucson, Arizona, and four daughters all living in Seattle, Washington. Four of his children preceded him in death. For many years he suffered from asthma, and during the last year of his life, was unable to get about very much. He was faithful to the covenant he made with God in the gospel and was willing to pass away, his only regret being that he must leave his companion behind. The funeral was conducted from the Riley Funeral Home by Elder W. P. Bootman.

MATTESON.—David Eugene Matteson was born February 2, 1861, in Wisconsin. Died November 17, 1932, at his home in Joyfield Township, Benzie County, Michigan. He leaves to mourn his departure his wife, one daughter, three sons, three brothers, and several grandchildren. The funeral was held in the Joyfield Church, November 19, sermon by Elder B. H. Doty, of Traverse City, Michigan.

ELLEGE.—Janet Ann Menzie was born May 21, 1890, at Scranton, Kansas. She died November 15, 1932, at Osage City, Kansas, leaving her husband; one son, James; one sister, Mrs. Nell Heath, of Emporia, Kansas; and six brothers: Dan and James, of Burlingame, Kansas; John, of Saint Louis, Missouri; Joe, of Manhattan, Kansas; Will, in Colorado, and Walter, in Texas. The funeral service was in charge of the Reverend H. P. Basquin, Methodist preacher of Scranton. Interment was in Scranton Cemetery. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints April 23, 1900.

NELSON.—Carl Christian Nelson was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, February 26, 1848. He came to America in 1870, and united with the church in 1872, being baptized by Elder William Powell, of Ravenwood. Married Miss Martina Nelson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Nelson, sr. To them were born nine children. Mrs. Christena Beck, W. T. Nelson, Earnest, Cora, and an infant son having passed on. Those living are Mrs. Elsie Barraclough, of East Saint Louis; Alma Nelson, of Guilford; Mrs. Emma Breit, of Conception Junction, Missouri; Mrs. Bertha Hawley, of Ravenwood, Missouri. His companion died November 13, 1920. In 1921, he married Mrs. Marie Hansen, who survives him. There are also left to mourn, eighteen grandchildren, five great-grandchildren, many other relatives and friends. After uniting with the church he was an active member, serving as an elder for many years. Always he aided the church until old age made him nearly blind and deaf. He took great consolation in studying and contemplating the beauties and hopes of the gospel. His daughter, Mrs. Barraclough, was with him constantly for about eleven weeks before his death.

SILVEY.—William Clayton Silvey was born in Scott County, Illinois, March 2, 1842, and passed away at the home of his son, where he was spending the winter at Wichita, Kansas, as the result of a paralytic stroke November 25, 1932. He served throughout the Civil War in the seventy-seventh Illinois Infantry. At the time of his release from the army he married Miss Jane McCarty at Mason City, Illinois, and four children were born to them.

"Uncle Billy," as he was familiarly and lovingly called, was a man of sterling worth. He lived with his nephew, Wallace Silvey, near Piedmont, Oklahoma, where the family became interested in the church through the work of Hubert Case and H. K. Rowland. Was baptized a member June 1, 1930, at Oklahoma City, by Z. Z. Renfroe. There survive Mr. Silvey, one son, of Wichita; a sister, Emeline McCoy, of Oklahoma City; a brother and sister, George and Ora Silvey, of LaVerne, Colorado, and another sister, Mrs. Mary Springer, of Perry, Oklahoma, as well as many other relatives and friends. The funeral sermon was by F. Ed. Dillon in the Baptist Church at Piedmont, Oklahoma, November 27.

BENTON.—Adonis Gwendolyn Sellers was born at McKenzie, Alabama, August 14, 1910. She grew to young womanhood in that community, and was graduated from the McKenzie High School, class of 1927. After graduation she attended Troy Normal School at Troy, Alabama. She was married to Louis A. Benton, June 6, 1931. This union was blessed with one child, Roderick Earl, born November

4. She passed away at her home in McKenzie the evening of November 29, 1932. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at the age of eight years, being led into the waters of baptism by her uncle, Elder G. O. Sellers. To this faith she was true; her husband joined her about one year ago. She leaves to mourn her departure, her husband, her infant son, her mother, one brother, and two sisters, as well as a community of relatives and friends. The church and the community join in sympathy for those who are left to carry on, and praying that God will bless. Funeral services were held at the Pleasant Hill Church at McKenzie, with Undertaker Mullins in charge. Elder Lyle D. Flynn delivered the sermon.

MILLIKEN.—Don Carlos Smith Milliken, firstborn son of Arthur and Lucy Smith Milliken, was born at Saco, York County, Maine, October 13, 1843, and died November 26, 1932, at Hamilton, Illinois. His mother was sister of Joseph Smith, the first Prophet of the Restoration. When a small boy he lived with his parents at Nauvoo, and witnessed the burning of the temple there. His entire life was spent in Hancock County except from 1856 to 1873, when he lived at Colchester, McDonough County, Illinois. He has lived at the present home, seven miles northeast of Hamilton, since 1876. He was married three times, first to Sophia Gridley. To them were born four children, Arthur and George who died very young; Clara A., wife of Caleb Smith who lives at Shamrock, Texas, and Mary F. Fluckey, of Keokuk, Iowa. His first wife died April 17, 1881. In 1886, he married Mary Elvie Durfee who died in 1899. In September, 1900, he married Miss Emma Smith who survives him. Mr. Milliken served his country during the Civil War as a member of Company H, Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic of Hamilton. He was baptized June 21, 1873, by his cousin Joseph Smith III, and remained a member of the Reorganized Church until his death, having a strong faith in the gospel and its power to save as restored by his uncle, Joseph Smith. He was also a member of the Montebello Lodge No. 697 Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Hamilton. Besides his wife there survive two daughters already mentioned; two sisters, Clara I. Hendel, of Colchester, Illinois, and Sarah M. Nichols, of Portland, Oregon; three grandchildren, three great-grandchildren, other relatives and a host of friends. In a biographical review of Hancock County, published in 1907, this is said of Mr. Milliken: "He is now accounted one of the enterprising and leading agriculturists and citizens of Montebello Township and is a representative of one of the most historic and prominent families of Hancock County."

KUHNERT.—John L. Kuhnert was born in Germany April 12, 1843. He came to America when twenty-six years old, and engaged in building and contracting until fifteen years ago. With his wife he lived happily for fifty-three years. She preceded him in death December 28, 1931. He passed away in Saint Louis, Missouri, November 15, 1932, leaving to mourn one son, one daughter, one grandchild, and many friends, members of the church and the Saxon Verstoosten Verin. He was a member of the church and society for many years. Another of earth's good men has gone to his reward. Interment was in Mount Zion's Cemetery. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder T. J. Elliott.

MADDEN.—Florence May Madden was born September 19, 1907, at Mitchell, Oregon. She was baptized by her father, May 5, 1918, at Hermiston, Oregon. Died November 8, 1932, at the Eastern Oregon Tuberculosis Sanatorium at The Dallas, Oregon. Leaves to mourn, her father and mother, one sister, Mrs. Ray Cook; one brother, C. H. Madden, all of Hermiston, besides a host of friends. She was loved by all who knew her and especially by the children where she taught. Graduated from Graceland College, taught one year at Perry, Iowa, and was teaching at Underwood, Iowa, when she became ill and was forced to return home in the West. She soon entered the Sanatorium where she spent eighteen months when death relieved her suffering. She had a smile for everyone and spread cheer and sunshine wherever she happened to be even when she was ill. The funeral was held from Rood-Marshall Funeral Home, Hood River, Oregon, the sermon being by Elder M. H. Cook. Interment was in Idlewood Cemetery, at Hood River.

Mr. Pastor:

We Need 5,000 More Subscribers for The Herald. YOU Can Help! Here's The Plan!

- First: Select some dependable and enthusiastic worker in your congregation who will sell Heralds for us each week at 5c each.
- Second: Help the one you select make a survey of the number of families who do not read the Herald.
- Third: Find out how many of these families will buy a Herald each week at five cents per copy.
- Fourth: Order enough to supply your needs. Allow a few extras for other probable sales.

Here's What We Will Do to Help You:

- First: We will mail you each week the number of copies you can sell.
- Second: We will allow you one cent per copy (20 per cent) on all you sell. This commission may be retained by the salesman in cash or used to purchase extra copies for families who can not afford the Herald.
- Third: We allow you credit for all unsalable copies. We insist, however, on the weekly return of certain portions of the cover on those not sold. After the first few weeks the exact number needed can be determined.

Branches Will Be Expected to Remit Promptly the First of Each Month

Mr. Pastor: There are some things that you can't do that you would like to do to help the Church. This is one thing that you CAN do that will help. The Herald subscription list is nearly double what it was five months ago. Help double it again. It will be if all the pastors help. Get your orders in at once.

The Pigeonhole

Good Work!

Not many months ago one of our large church choirs was still badly in debt for a new set of robes, contracted for in better times. With the striking of the depression, the choir organization found itself facing difficulties in liquidating its debt, as many of the members were from homes in which the breadwinners were unemployed.

One of the officers was seriously concerned as to what she personally could do to help the situation. She had had some business experience, but at the time was devoting her full time to the care of her home.

She came to a decision. She would sell some standard article and turn the profits to help clear the debt. After some thought she decided to sell hosiery, and made an arrangement with a manufacturer to purchase at wholesale rates. She would solicit orders in person and by telephone as she had opportunity.

Business turned out to be better than she expected. She contributed $135 to the choir robe fund, by which time the entire debt was paid. Then she turned the profits to a fund for new music for the choir, as there had been no new music for several years. Now, since the women of the branch are making a special effort to sacrifice and help the general church finances, she is turning her profits in with their weekly fund.

It seems to us that this takes a great deal of continuous and practical devotion. Quite a record for just stockings!

Good Work, Sister!

"Too Busy," and the Tingling Pinfeathers

"It makes my pinfeathers fairly tingle," ruminates the Pigeon, "to hear one of these fellows who is 'too busy for words.' He doesn't have time to be courteous; he doesn't have time to rest; he doesn't have time to think of anyone but himself. Everybody asks him to do everything! And how he glories in his martyrdom! Yet I've noticed that almost all men and women, no matter how rushed they are, have time to do the things they want to do."

Giving

There's nothing worth while but giving,
Giving of self and of love;
It's service that makes life worth living,
A gift from the Master above.
It's pleasure to give others pleasure;
It's wealth to give money away;
It's honor to give others honor—
It blesses you all through the day.
You only follow your Savior
Who taught "'Tis more blessed to give,"
When you make your rule of behavior,
"Living that others may live."

—Philip George Van Zandt.

An Opportunity

In the columns of the Herald in recent weeks there have been presented to the church members by the general financial officers, the problems which confront us in money matters. And there has been presented information of some of the methods adopted to meet the situation. To the study of our finances and the best ways to deal with our creditors and meet our obligations, the men of the Presiding Bishopric have given careful and prayerful attention, and the tasks with which they have been burdened in administering the affairs of their department have been onerous and wearing. They have patiently and courageously continued at their post despite trying times and many discouragements. Through it all they have manifested a faith in God and the church which has been a support to them and a heartenment to their fellow-workers. To administer the affairs of the office of Presiding Bishopric impartially, faithfully, and wisely is a task and a burden to which only a fine devotion could hold these men. The members of the church can well afford to show their appreciation by standing helpfully by. And to do this, a fine opportunity is offered.

The time from Thanksgiving to Christmas or the Holidays has been set aside as a period in which special efforts are to be made by all, culminating in a church-wide act of giving and having as the special object in view to close the fiscal year without deficit in actual operating expenses. The whole budget, which included a reduction of interest-bearing debts by a large sum, seems now beyond our reach, but to raise enough money in the period designated to assure the running expenses and thus meet the obligations falling due the first month of the year, 1933, seems quite within the reach of the Saints. To do this is now the call which the officers of the church are making to the people.

This is our opportunity.

It demands our concerted effort, an effort the Bishopric are quite sure the Saints will make. Suggestions are being issued to local workers on methods to be used to guarantee that every Saint will have opportunity to do his full share. To these suggestions we call the attention of our workers, and say again, here is the opportunity to show our devotion to the church. Let us match the devotion the men of the Bishopric are displaying.

presentation to classes. They offer the foundation for a series of educational sermons that any pastor would do well to present to his congregation. While the author has approached the study in a scholarly manner, and has written in an excellent style, there is also the unmistakable evidence of the presence of spiritual power in the thought that is presented. We believe these chapters will stand long in our church literature. There is no better statement of the law in contemporary language.

Let Us Be Thankful

For the Spirit of Christmas and the Gladness It Brings

Let us be thankful that around Christmas and its activities are gathered some of the best ideals that humanity at large is able to understand, that in this season the poor are remembered, and that all men renew friendship with acts of charity and kindness.

Recent trials have taught us to be humble, and to be thankful for the little, common things and comforts that go to make life pleasant. We are not asking so much of life as we did, and it takes less to make us happy.

Many are suffering, and will be suffering this year who have never suffered before. This arouses our great regret and sympathy. We are sad that we are powerless to remedy all the want, the woe, and the pain that there is in the world. We can not be satisfied with our kind of world until it prevents these things. The teaching of Christ inculcates this kind of discontent.

But we are genuinely grateful for what we have and for what we can share. And we shall hold with that gratitude a determination that welfare and happiness must in the future be more equitably distributed among all men. This is the ideal of Christ, the ideal of Zion.

Thank You!

Pastor at Long Beach, California, Would Have Herald in Every Home

It was expected that the change in the style of the Herald would produce reactions both favorable and unfavorable. But we went ahead with plans that seemed, after careful study and consideration, to be for the best interests of the church and the readers.

We have been happily surprised at the number of comments of a friendly and encouraging nature regarding our effort. These letters have been a real help to us; we appreciate the spirit of the writers.

A recent letter from J. L. Milner, pastor at Long Beach Branch, is especially kind. We thought our readers would be interested:

"A word about the new Herald. I am one of the pastors who have found it extremely difficult during the past to subscribe to and read all three of the publications. I have tried to read the Herald regularly, feeling it my duty to keep up with the official program of the church. It has also been a pleasure to read it. I am more than pleased with the present publication. I feel we can well afford to be proud of this paper. I am sure it will meet favorable comparison with any other church paper published.

"We are cooperating with Brother Hougas in an effort to get the Herald into every home under our supervision. Certainly, no pastor can be ashamed to urge his flock to read such a worthy paper."

The Price of War

(A Selected Reprint)

During the last war the nations spent roughly one hundred eighty-six billion dollars in direct money costs. The indirect money costs are more difficult to reckon. Reckoning three thousand dollars for each life (and that is not dear, is it?) and making allowance for the cost of industrial chaos, it has been estimated that the indirect money costs were about one hundred and fifty-two billion dollars more. We of America spent a paltry twenty-three billion dollars as our share, but that was enough to have paid all the expenses of our government for one hundred and twenty years prior to the war's outbreak. This was the trivial end of the bill. There were millions of desolated homes. There was the sowing of the dragon's teeth of new wars. There were whole peoples fed on a diet of mixed truth and lies miscalled propaganda. There was hatred deliberately injected into the veins of people normally humane.

Heroism? Yes, of a truth! An incredible and heartbreaking heroism before which we bow in reverence, as those "bought with a price." But the worst indictment of war is that it takes such heroism for a purpose of destruction when, harnessed to constructive tasks, it could remake the world.

Preparedness, we are told, will assure peace. It never has! From the foundation of organized life peoples have prepared for war, but peace is still far to seek. Certain of the warring nations in the last great conflict were measurably prepared. Why did not they escape the impact of war? "Ah," comes the retort, "they lacked the will to peace." Then why do our militarists not tell us that preparedness is a curse if we lack the will to peace? For the hundreds of thousands under arms ready for war, how many thousands are assigned under government funds to seek the causes of war and to devise the machinery of peace? For all the millions spent on war, what government has recently assigned one million to promote international good will? Instead, there was in New York City on the Saturday of Holy Week—the day between the day of the Cross and the day of the Open Tomb—a war parade, with hundreds of school children in the procession. We thought we saw Him on the sidewalk, watching. We wondered if He preferred His "funny little Cross." A preacher can not be silent in face of this appalling curse. If he, the ambassador of Christ, is silent we should confess ourselves bankrupt both in brains and morals, and ask God to cleanse the planet of so wayward and cruel a race.—George A. Buttrick in Jesus Came Preaching.

Fight the Saloons

Words are not originally bad. It is the things they represent that make them bad. The word saloon was not bad until Americans called their grog-shops by that name. Then the word became offensive.

The Wets don't mind if we fight with a word. They will get another name. But a liquor dispensary in private hands will be an evil, no matter what you call it. To paraphrase Burns: "A saloon by another name would smell as sour," and do as much damage. The Wet interests made the saloon what it was, and they have made the speakeasy what it is. No matter what they are allowed to make, it will be bad. The people of this country ought to know that the Wet interests can not be trusted to live up to any decent standard, because their business is not decent.

We must fight the return of the saloon, or anything like it, no matter what they name it. It has been a long time since we have seen the wholesale poverty and misery that the saloon caused. We have foolishly forgotten what it was like. In the light of our experience our national conduct has been positively silly within recent times.

The War Debts Again—And Yet

It is an interesting comment on national morality that France, who has all along demanded the last drop of Germany's blood in reparations money under the Versailles treaty and the Young Plan, and who in insisting on her demands has been a great stumblingblock to world peace, has been a most unsatisfactory creditor for the United States to bring to terms. And now, refusing Premier Herriot's plea for upholding the honor of the country by paying the debts of war, it seems that the parliament of France will continue in its course of repudiation under the leadership of Boncour.

France, it is said, can afford to pay—but won't. England can not afford to pay, but will, though under protest. Each country shows its true character in time of crisis.

It would be a bad thing, in many ways, for the United States not to collect the war debts. But it would be a far worse thing to collect them under the conditions that they will have to be collected. The return of that money will do the country and the masses of the people very little good. It will not go to them. And it will impose a condition of acute suffering upon the masses of the other nations.

If England had only her own real debts to pay, she might meet them. But in her effort to stop a foe that threatened the world, she borrowed for others, and guaranteed the debts of other nations who had not the credit to borrow for themselves. England went on their notes. Now they are ready to repudiate their debts, and England is asked to pay. What to do is not clear, but we should not be an agent to impose injustice on England.

Mighty Specks

True it is that this earth is one of the tiniest specks in the universe, an infinitesimal grain of sand. On that molecule of matter dwells a creature called man. He is incomprehensibly small compared with the Intelligence who holds the cosmos in the palm of His hand. But that grain of sand is as great as the universe; that man is of a kind with the unlimited Ego. For he has a divine essence—his personality and his independent reason. He can vision his own planet in definite relation to the systematic cosmos. Where he has foothold in the universe he can see, analyze, measure, classify, and coordinate the ultramicroscopic midgets and the stellar giants of creation. The few ounces of man's gray brain outweigh the myriad, myriad milliers of suns and star-dust. The human soul, upright and facing God, has the inalienable rights of hypostatic selfhood.—Charles Hall Perry, in Scribners.

The invention of the means of being comfortable and the pursuit of comfort as a desirable end—one of the most desirable that human beings can propose to themselves—are modern phenomena, unparalleled in history since the time of the Romans. Like all phenomena with which we are extremely familiar, we take them for granted, as a fish takes the water in which he lives, not realizing the oddity and novelty of them, not bothering to consider their significance. The padded chair, the well-sprung bed, the sofa, central heating, and the regular hot bath—these and a host of other comforts enter into the daily lives of even the most moderately prosperous of the Anglo-Saxon bourgeoisie. Three hundred years ago they were unknown to the greatest kings.—Aldous Huxley, in Proper Studies.

President F. M. McDowell Visits Many Branches of the Church

President F. M. McDowell returned home to Independence December 16, after a six-week itinerant East and North. During this time he took part in conventions, institutes, all-day meetings, and regular services, being personally in charge of class work and presenting sermons and lectures to the number of forty-eight besides presiding at sacrament and other services.

His forty-two day trip took him to the following places: Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Washington, D. C.; Brooklyn, New York; Boston and Attleboro, Massachusetts; Toronto, Saint Thomas, London, Chatham, and Windsor, Ontario; Detroit, Port Huron, Flint, Saginaw, Bay City, Grand Rapids, and Lansing, Michigan, and Hammond, Indiana. He spoke every night except four, and averaged five meetings a Sunday. At all these places he represented the interests of the church publications.

Everywhere Brother McDowell was given a warm welcome by the Saints. He found them much interested in and concerned about the welfare of the church, and feels that he has been in touch with hundreds of devoted and consecrated members.

A. M. Chase Plans Christmas Treat for Utah Saints

Elder A. M. Chase, president of Utah District, has thoughtfully arranged a Christmas treat for the several branches of the Reorganized Church in the district. He has secured the stereopticon pictures of Ben Hur, the book by Lew Wallace, which he will present one night in each branch with the story of Christ and the Holy Land.

Summer in Australia

Let all who are shivering in the grip of winter in the Northern Hemisphere, remember that it is summer now in Australia.

This item comes from Wallsend Branch, New South Wales, in the Gospel Standard of November 1: "The rains have made our gardens very green and healthy looking, and we can look for sunshine in this little corner of sunny New South Wales.

News from Australia is that they are having "perfect" weather, and the Standard goes on to tell how happy the Saints of Balmain Branch looked in their "picnic finery," on a cloudless Monday not long ago, and how they crowded the launch which took them to Bradley's Head.

Offsprings of Old Buffalo Prairie Branch

Joy and Millersburg Branches, Illinois, where the latter-day work is growing, are offsprings of Buffalo Prairie Branch, seventy years old last April.

The church edifice of Buffalo Prairie Branch was the first building to be dedicated in the Reorganization. The gospel was brought to that community by the Wentworth Holmes family from the Maine sea coast in 1857. The old church building is being preserved by the Saints of the community, and lately received a new roof and two coats of paint. Meetings are no longer regularly held there except the annual September home-coming and funeral services. In the quiet churchyard lie many of the early workers. Such stalwarts as Alexander, Joseph and David H. Smith, Zenos H. Gurley, W. W. Blair, John H. Lake, F. G. Pitt, and John T. Kinne-man have spoken in that building.

English Saints Hold Memorial Services for Joseph Smith III

At their services November 6, commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of his birth, the Saints who worship at Gospel Hall, Manchester, England, recalled Joseph Smith as they remember him on his visit to England in 1903, the inspired man of God and Prophet of the church. Morning, afternoon, and evening meetings were dedicated to themes centering about the life and work of Brother Joseph, and speakers, singers, and other helpers did their parts well.

At the morning service the little choir, the oldest member of which is thirteen years of age, contributed to the spirit of song and reverence which prevailed. Elder G. W. Leggott is pastor of this branch.

The Spirit of Christmas

By Willard W. Hield

TODAY all the world is celebrating, or is about to celebrate. What are we celebrating? Is it "Xmas" or Christmas? "X" has been used almost universally to represent the unknown quantity. Christmas means little to many people except an excuse for unusual self-indulgence, a festival rather than a holy day. The winter solstice was ever a time for jovial celebrations. At this season the Swedes used to light fires on the hills in honor of Mother Friga, their Goddess of Love; the Romans indulged in their licentious Saturnalia. The Greeks lit torches on Helicon for Dionysius, the Persians celebrated the birth of Mithras while the Hindus of India sang songs to Vishnu. All these were mainly carnivals much given to corruption, excess and license. With the coming of Christ came the Christmastide, a season of sanctification and lovely prompting of the best in man. With Christ an unknown quantity the day reverts to a mere pagan festival.

For centuries our homes and churches in song and story have heralded the birth of the Prince of Peace. The angels message was glad tidings to all people, peace on earth, good will toward all men. Jesus came teaching men peace by loving one another, and good will by doing unto others as you would have them do unto you. These were the principles which were to replace the ancient law of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. Today the real Christmas is a "Christ Mass" in which we re-dedicate ourselves to live by His new standards that peace may cover the earth and good will be among all men.

Peace in the home, in the community, in the nation and in the world can not come if we insist upon what we see as our rights. We are usually too limited in vision to be able to know all of the right. If we insist upon nothing more than justice there can be no peace, but only unending perpetuation of conflict by each person, group, or nation seeking retribution in the name of justice. There can be no peace if it must wait for the righting of all wrongs and the balancing of all accounts. Grievances, wrongs, menaces, oppressions, and injustices are too many, too complex, too completely unmeasurable, and too colored with emotion and prejudice ever to be solved, even by a convention of Solomons. Only by forgiving and forgetting can peace come—by a new beginning which will not settle old scores, but which will overcome them with good works in the light of this new day. If we want the Christmas spirit it can come only when we as individuals and in our cliques, clubs, clans, or concordats of nations exercise good will returning good for evil. Some say, "But it won't work in business or in politics." Does the eye for an eye standard work better?

We thought not long ago that we had prosperity. Sudden and unexpected growth of organization and mass production brought unprecedented prosperity but lacked a moral level in the hearts of men to insure its full benefit. Technological improvements increased the production of machines, but reduced the need for workers. Direct gains to owners of industry were obvious. Indirect costs to society in men thrown out of work and in the failure of previously sound investments were not so quickly detected. Good will would have spread the gains as widely as possible throughout society in lowered prices and better products. Selfishness took the largest possible profit and then was mystified when prosperity vanished. Good will concerns itself primarily with what it can produce; selfishness with what it can acquire. The recent wave of speculation centered attention on acquisition and not on production. Good will thinks of service, selfishness primarily of profit.

The World War was the fruit of selfishness, ambition, hatred and suspicion, all the direct opposites of good will. Now follows the economic war, fought for the same motives. During the Peloponnesian War Aristophanes pleaded for harmony among the Greek peoples in these words as translated by Nairne: "From the murmur and the subtlety of suspicion with which we vex one another, give us rest. Make a new beginning. And mingle again the kindred of the nations in the alchemy of love, and

Junior Stewardship for 1933

By C. B. Woodstock

The idea of stewardship responsibility is an essential in the gospel of Christ. It is fundamental in the building of a Christian character, and to the building of a Christian community which we call Zion. Such is necessary in the work of the church today and it must be included in our program of religious education.

For some years in the past boys and girls of the church have been encouraged to become Junior Stewards, working in groups under adult leadership, to learn and to practice the principles of good stewardship. A Junior Steward is a boy or girl between the ages of eight and fifteen years who agrees to try to learn and to obey the financial law of the church. An important part of the work of a steward is the keeping of a careful record of one's receipts and expenditures in his partnership with the Lord.

For purposes of the educational project and for the convenience of the Junior Stewards and their sponsor, a neat record book has been prepared under the direction of the presiding bishopric. This book contains several pages of carefully worded explanations of terms and methods used in keeping a financial record and in fulfilling the financial law of the church. Two pages are devoted to a sample month's record of an average boy, showing how the record is kept. Then there are twelve double pages, ruled for convenient record keeping, one for each month, with a convenient tabulated form for a monthly summary of accounts and the calculation of tithing.

The entire project is handled for the presiding bishopric by the Department of Religious Education. Local sponsors work under the advice of the pastor, the church school director and the local bishop's solicitor. Often the solicitor himself is happy to serve as the sponsor, for Junior Stewardship is recognized as one of the most valuable ways of education and training in the keeping of the financial law.

In today's mail came a letter from a church school director in the Northwest ordering eight Junior Stewardship Record Books to be presented to a group of eight boys and girls at the time of their confirmation. What an opportunity for a splendid start in church membership! We understand these young people have already filed their inventories, they are baptized into the church, and, on the occasion of their confirmation, they are presented with these record books and encouraged to enter at once upon the responsibilities of stewards before God. Surely this gives promise of real Zion-building material!

Perhaps the redemption of Zion has been delayed, in part at least, because men and women of the church have not been wholly converted to the gospel plan. One must do more than give verbal acknowledgment that he believes the gospel. He must be anxiously concerned in the building of the Kingdom, to which cause Latter Day Saints are called. A sponsor in reporting says: "My group of juniors started to keep their records with much interest and real desire, but they found little encouragement at home for most of the parents were not even trying to keep any records, and but few were paying tithing. I'm afraid we can't persuade the children to try what their parents are unwilling to attempt to do."

But other sponsors report more encouragingly. One bishop's solicitor writes: "The idea of Junior Stewardship is splendid. Not all of our boys and girls have kept their records for the full year, but it has given me an opportunity to explain to them in a simple, concrete way the principles involved in determining the tithing due, and they are learning the finest kind of lessons in good bookkeeping. I have taken occasion to make several talks on Junior Stewardship before our church school, and even before the branch. Record keeping and the advantages of frequent paying of the tithe are easily explained to adults through the junior plan. I have visited the houses of Junior Stewards and am able to talk to parents who could not be reached in any other way. Most of our juniors are paying some tithing and are gaining practical experience in the keeping of the law."

Recently report blanks were sent out to all Junior Stewardship sponsors for the past year. It is quite essential that each one send in his report, for on the basis of this year's experience we must plan for the coming year. We have record of some 500 books in use in 40 different branches. In 1930, 57 sponsors reported the use of 501 books—227 junior tithe payers in six months paid $335.04 tithing. Of this number 133 were making oblation offerings, and 144 had savings accounts.

One of the best parts of the 1930 report was the fact that the 57 sponsors had 224 personal talks with juniors, 144 talks with groups of junior stew-

Tithing

By L. F. P. Curry

VI

There is a homely question sometimes asked about a public man, "What does he stand for?" This means not only what principles are supported, but also of what significance is the man to his time. Of tithing we well may ask, What is its significance? How important is it in the body of principles composing the teachings of God? Men do not struggle and sacrifice for unimportant things. They will give all for something that is deeply significant. The significance of tithing is such that this principle deserves its place in the divine plan.

The first reason for the significance of tithing is that the principle is a continuing mechanism in the financial structure of the kingdom of God. The work of the church has always entailed expense. In a simple society, this expense may have been small, but it nevertheless existed. In a complex society, such as that of our time, the expense is proportionately greater. God has freely provided the plan whereby men may be saved, if they obey it, but Christ paid a tremendous price in making that plan effective. Of their own free will men commissioned of God may preach the gospel, and of their own free will others may receive and obey it, but God has ordained that those who believe must assume in their due proportion the cost of evangelizing and shepherding which organized religion entails. Tithing is the most important element in meeting the cost. The principle worked well in the day when men's commercial life was carried on by a system of barter, and it works today when we rely upon a money medium of exchange. In the practice of tithe paying one may misrepresent or withhold the tithe due, or one may ignore the principle altogether. These evidences of human imperfection do not alter the plan one whit, for it continues as a vital element in God's work, linking human activities to heavenly purposes.

Not only this, but tithing is also a factor in stewardships. The steward requires some form of universal application which will enable him to turn over to the church the material evidence of his diligence. Stewardships are not an end in themselves, but a means to the larger end of developing the togetherness that should exist between man and God. Tithing is a common bond, uniting all men in its observance, furnishing to all a common method for sharing their increase with the church for the furtherance of the aims of the church which represents the brotherhood of man. It is a regular, orderly way for sharing the benefits accruing to those thus united, and of warding off or mitigating the evils which might assail some. There are probably many different ways by which a steward might render his increase to the Lord through the church, but there is only one way that bears the stamp of God's approval, and the chief item in that way is tithing. Attempts to apply men's way would be divisive; but to apply God's way makes for unity. Thus tithing in stewardships is significant both for its purpose and its effect.

A third reason for the significance of tithing is that it represents a factor in equality. Interest in equality is not new.¹ Plato was interested in it in the fourth century before Christ. More, in the sixteenth century after Christ, was equally so. During the eighteenth century, writers considered equality as a moral issue, but with the rise of socialistic thought in the early nineteenth century the question was approached from an economic point of view. It is apparent that interest in equality was keen about the time of the Restoration in 1830, an interest probably attributable in the main to the new type of social problems growing out of the industrial revolution. Discussion swung about material possessions.

The answer of the Restoration movement to the question of equality was entirely typical.² Equality was not alone a moral problem, nor alone an economic problem; it concerned both. Every man was entitled to his just wants and needs, and was obligated to render his best effort to society. Only those who had grasped the significance of God as a father, could conceive the question in its real terms, namely that it was an issue in establishing fundamental brotherhood wherein spiritual equality grew out of and rested upon material equality in provision of the just wants and needs referred to. The problems raised by the present economic depression show rather conclusively that the question of establishing equality is not an academic matter, but instead one of great practical importance in the lives of millions of people. No solution proposed by others compares with that offered by the church, a statement which reflects the magnitude of our responsibility in these times.

Tithing in its strict sense of the tenth of the increase, and the broader meaning of surplus furnishes us with a mechanism whereby equality may be brought about, an end made permanent by the establishment and continuance of the practice of stewardships.

These three things for which tithing "stands" are important. There remains one more reason for its significance, namely that the principle is a spiritual rite in a spiritual life. There are those who regard tithe paying as a form of heavenly fire insurance. They are well advised in this, for although we may dress tithe paying in the aspect of free sharing of a common burden, there still remains the explicit and frankly uncompromising edict of God: ". . . he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming)." In other words, if any man would share in the distribution of God's blessings he may do so only upon God's terms; we ourselves may not dictate those terms according to our own desires. If, however, one tithes merely as a measure of defense, and not with the earnest desire to bring forth the fruits of righteousness, it may be found that the result is disappointing.

Truly, tithing is a required measure in the law, stated with considerable sternness, but the principle nevertheless represents God's best thought as to this aspect of the financial law. Our obedience therefore enables us to share in a rite which develops the generosity of our souls, gives us an efficient channel for contributing to the carrying on of the work of God among men, and brings us to a more complete understanding of the meaning of brotherhood. In a word, we may thus become partners in pushing forward the spiritual plan of salvation for mankind. If we obey, as well we should, in the spirit of hopefulness, with earnest faith in God's purposes, and with an ever growing love for humanity, then, indeed tithing is significant as a spiritual rite in a spiritual life, which hallows the cash contributed, strengthens the church and aids to reveal God to mankind.

Ponder for a while these reasons for the significance of tithing.

²This is not meant to imply that the principle human factor in the restoration of the gospel, Joseph the Martyr, was attempting to set up solutions to the puzzling problems confronting England and France. The question of equality as a subject of controversy was not at that time acute in America, and he may not have been aware of the situation abroad. The explanation is not to be found in coincidence, but rather in the fact that the gospel offers solutions to many of the fundamental problems of mankind, and its restoration went far to fulfill the prophecy of Isaiah 29: 32 (Inspired Version), that "They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine." It is fair to infer that this understanding covered more than the field of religion. Certainly since 1830 the understanding of the world has swept forward in almost every field by leaps and bounds.

Since the Lord has been so emphatic about the payment of tithing, it is only prudent to inquire how the amount of tithing due may be ascertained. There are three ways in which the question may be answered. The amount may be ascertained by guessing, a quite unsatisfactory method not recommended. It may be found by estimating, thus perhaps securing a fairly accurate approximation. But the third, and better, way, is to make an accounting. In the formal accounting some element of guess and estimation may enter, for we are men before we are bookkeepers, but the conscientious person will endeavor to arrive at the amount of tithing due in as accurate a manner as possible. He will do this not only because the highest degree of accuracy possible more nearly fulfills the law, but also because thereby the maximum contribution will be made.

Accounting in these days in which we live, quite as much as in any other period, is called for by the dictates of common sense as the only way in which the correct answer may be had. It is also called for in the law, and repeatedly emphasized. In numerous references in the Doctrine and Covenants to the principle of stewardships, of which tithing, as pointed out in a preceding paper, is an element of expression fundamental in character, the accounting is demanded. By accounting the results of the stewardship are ascertained, and thereby also the amount of tithing is determined.

"Every man shall be made accountable unto me . . . (a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration. . .)" 42: 9.

Again it is written:

". . . it is required of the Lord at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and eternity." 72: 1.

The references in sections 69: 2, 70: 1, 72: 4, and 101: 2 are equally explicit. The necessity for an accounting is clearly implied in 106: 1, for it is impossible to ascertain how much may be set aside as a surplus if the total wealth is unknown; and it is equally impossible to ascertain the annual "interest" or increase without keeping records which will permit a proper accounting at the year's end.

The Lord leaves us with no excuse in this matter of the accounting. The exercise of obedience in connection therewith is a preparation in the branches for the higher standing which should, but as yet may not, characterize the stakes, and it is a necessity if one is to remain in the stake in the best standing before his conscience and God. ". . . this shall be an ensample for all the extensive branches of my church . . .", reads section 72: 4; and section 106, already mentioned, gives equal emphasis to the subject in the stakes, for in that reference Far West stake was involved. Young People in Action

By C. B. Woodstock

The call of the church today, as ever in the past, is for united action. Economic conditions of depression effect us chiefly because in the past and up to the present we have not learned to be united in our purposes and in our action. The world surges about us as men try to unite temporarily on the basis of some selfish achievement. The objectives of the church are to be attained by a people who unite unselfishly with full faith and vigor to follow the plan God has given that shall produce a Zion of latter days—a place of peace and security because a demonstration of God's truth and his power to bless those who live in harmony with his will.

To the task of helping to achieve these purposes the young people of the church are called. Perhaps as never before in our history, do the conditions of the present economic crisis emphasize the need of the church for the active, loyal, earnest support of her young people. And as never before do young people need and appreciate the stabilizing, hopeful and saving influences found in the church and in her services.

The following, gleaned from recent correspondence, indicates some of the ways in which our young people are uniting their efforts with the general church to attain its objectives. Young people and their leaders are urged to study the needs of the local congregation in the light of the total program of the church and find the things which they can best do to advance the Kingdom of God among them. In consultation with the pastor they seek to understand their duty, they find their opportunity for service, they organize their forces, and with a prayer for divine direction, they enter with the vision and strength of youth to accomplish the tasks they have set.

This is the way of Zion's redemption. Youth wishes to share in the work before the church. Youth must look to those older in years for advice and cooperation, but youth enjoys the consciousness of responsibility and the sense of achievement. Team work is essential, and the young people can be depended upon to carry their part of the load.

Long Beach, California, reports twenty-eight young people, all active in church work, with an estimated attendance of 95% at preaching services, 80% at prayer meeting and 98% at church school. Some fine experiences are in store for such a group.

At Madison, Wisconsin, the young people with their sponsor arrange and conduct one of the regular church services each month. Several of their number are active in the priesthood.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, reports thirty-one young people in attendance at the services of the church, two thirds of whom are not members of the church. Does this mean that some one is doing a lot of good missionary work, or is this a most unusual opportunity, or both?

Sperry, Oklahoma, has fifty-three young people, a fine group to be set at work in the church. A training class is being organized for the winter under the leadership of Elder O. A. McDowell.

Lincoln, Nebraska, has twenty-eight young people between 12 and 20 organized in a "La Da Sa" (L. D. S.) club which undertakes all sorts of happy and helpful experiences for the young folks. The club is sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. Francis Shrunck with Miss Rogene Anderson, young people's supervisor. Aside from frequent recreational games and stunts, the club has put on plays, debates, the pageant "Milestones," special music, and assisted in serving conference meals. Regular meetings are held at six thirty Sunday evenings.

Holden Stake young people, under the leadership of their Young People's Council and with the cooperation of the stake presidency and bishopric, are planning to make a concerted effort to assist the church financially during the present "sacrifice period." Special inventory meetings are to be held where the purpose and principle of the inventory and annual tithing report will be explained, and opportunity given for an immediate compliance with this essential feature of the gospel.

A young people's institute and convention is being planned for Holden Stake in March.

Barberton, Ohio, with twenty-one young people, reports an active, organized group. Four of these have already filed their inventories and entered upon systematic payment of tithes. Among activities are listed: several programs, two plays, cleaned the church building, sang for a sick member, several early Sunday morning prayer meetings.

At Joplin, Missouri, with sixty-five active young people, dramatic work is popular and successful. They also have an orchestra of seven string and six band instruments.

On Sunday, November 27, the young people of four branches in Southwestern Iowa met at Crescent to plan a district organization. A convention is in prospect early in May.

First St. Joseph, Missouri, Branch with fifty young people reports a series of interesting activities. In addition to the stake quarterly young people's gatherings, there are local social meetings every two weeks, a special young people's early Sunday morning prayer service each month, and one Wednesday night a month is recognized as young people's night at the general prayer service. At present the young folks are entering heartily into the efforts of the sacrifice period and are expecting to adopt a financial program that will be continuous throughout the year.

During the summer two outside trips were made by the branch young people, to Fortesque and to Far West. Two religious dramas were given at the local vesper services and one of them was given at the Reunion. A pageant was recently prepared for the stake rally and repeated at the local church. After the first of the year the young people's division plan a banquet with the adult division as their guests.

At Englewood, in Independence, the young people's division has recently organized. The regular Sunday evening study hour is in their charge although one Junior and one adult class is also provided at this hour. They are hoping to extend the range of young people's activities and to interest all in a greater appreciation of the regular services of the church.

Hagerman, Idaho, reports training classes in public speaking and music in addition to regular church school classes.

At Deer Lodge, Montana, the church owns a recreation hall used for social and recreational gatherings. At a weekly meeting the young people prepare the music for the following Sunday both for the church school worship and for the regular services of the day. A large number of those participating do not yet belong to the church.

Seattle, Washington, with a membership of one hundred four young people, reports active participation in several district-wide projects. Those listed are: The attendance of 100% of the young people at all church services, a study of the Saints' Herald, a district young people's convention in February, active priesthood visits to all young people by the young men of the priesthood, a varied program of services on Sunday evenings especially attractive to young people, a local young people's banquet. Seattle also has a girls' glee club and a Scout Troop.

Here are some good suggestions for other districts and branches.

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, has three organized classes of young people with a well organized Young People's Council under which is sponsored an annual banquet, plays, food sale, oyster suppers, wiener roasts and a cantata. They report an active group of Temple Builders.

Buffalo, New York, with a membership of twenty-three between the ages of fifteen and thirty, reports three organized classes and a Young People's Council in charge of their program. They meet for class work on Sunday mornings and Friday evenings, for recreation two Saturday evenings each month and for a general social evening once a month.

The Outstanding Event of History

"The birth of Jesus, like that of every other powerful character, signalized the commencement of a new train of events. And, since of all characters born on this planet—He has proved to be the most powerful, it is realistically correct to say that His birth was in literal fact the outstanding event in history. Romance and sentiment aside, doctrine and theory eliminated, Jesus stands today in the presence of governments and social systems (as He stood once before the Procurator from Rome) as the personified incarnation of God's judgment upon the corruption of men, and as the embodied manifestation of God's unyielding determination to save men by sheer love from their sin and their folly."—Dwight Bradley, in "His Government Shall Increase," Church Management.

One of the most prolific sources of misunderstanding in regard to religion is the refusal to acknowledge that there has been a universal departure from the original gospel as taught by Christ. Most people are aware that such an event as the Reformation was the reactionary result of the great abuses which had obtained in the Roman Catholic Church; yet it seldom occurs to the minds of these people that to concede the need of a reformation is a tacit admission that an apostasy from the true gospel had taken place; otherwise the so-called reformation was not only unnecessary, but actually an evil. In face of this important piece of history it is really unaccountable that there should be so much indifference to this very important event and the consequences which necessarily result therefrom.—John W. Rushton, in "The Apostasy and the Restoration."

A Christmas Party in the Kentucky Hills

By Hazel Honaker

Around the middle of November, 1931, my husband, who, by the way, is not a member of our church, our eight-year-old son, my cousin, Pauline, and myself left Independence, Missouri, to go to the extreme eastern part of the State of Kentucky. Our plans were to take charge of the seven hundred acre farm belonging to my husband's mother. Although we had spent almost every summer since our marriage at this farm, I still did not realize what really living on a farm meant. Nor especially did I realize what living at all in these hills of Old Kentucky meant to a city girl, as I had always thought myself. Pauline was just as new at the farming business, so we walked into this new undertaking inexperienced together. My husband had spent fourteen years of his younger life here with his parents, so it was one grand home-coming for him, and has continued to be such to him through this entire year that we have been here. I have to stop and think whether it has been one year or ten. Now I can hear you laugh, and say "Poor silly weakling." But there have been days when it seemed to me that God or even his influence was so far from me that he was absolutely out of my reach.

At almost every time of the year these hills are beautiful, and when I could get myself under control and free from homesickness for any length of time, I really felt that there was a work for all of us to do here among these uneducated, but good-hearted mountain folk, and could see God's handiwork in every rock and brook and tree. When I look back upon the attempts at doing good that I have made I am afraid that I will not get many stars in my crown for the deeds even if they were good, because of my feeling of repulsiveness for their ignorance and unsaintly ways of living.

In the almost two months from the time that the four of us arrived here, we became speedily acquainted with the natives of our new neighborhood. My husband seemed almost like a god to them, because he was so big and straight and strong, and if I must say it myself, handsome; and from the time he arrived he took the burden of each family upon his own shoulders and tried to help carry it. Our little Junior assumed the role of leader among the children, as he was so far advanced in learning and worldly experience. Children much older than he were only in the primary grade in school. He was put in the class with boys and girls fourteen and fifteen years old. These mountain families are so poverty-stricken that they have to have every chick and child to help put the corn in the ground and the same help at corn-gathering time. It is a very rare case if we find a man, woman, or child, who can read or write his name. Pauline and I tried to clothe and feed every little ragged hungry urchin that came continually to our door and into our kitchen and stood with longing looks at the good things that we cooked and our pretty house aprons which we wore. They thought we were fairies or some sort of guardian angels sent from they didn't know where, to warm their little bare feet, wash their dirty faces and hands and make them pretty little dresses and wash and comb their hair. We soon became a little cautious in our face and head washings, as two or three of our victims nearly took pneumonia from the loss of the heavy coat of dirt. We tried to teach the older women folks to sew and keep their homes clean and when spring and summer came we taught them to can their fruit and vegetables, and prepare to take care of their families' needs for the winter. My mother and father collected all the articles of clothing, bedding, and all scraps of materials that could be used to make clothes for both young and old, and shipped an enormous big box to us, which we doled out to the needy in a way that reminded me of the big city's soup lines. This supply has been replenished many times and the demand still goes on as the days of this winter grow colder. My heart still aches for each pale little overworked ragamuffin that comes grinning and asks "Please, have you got a coat, or a shirt, or stockings, or shoes or dresses that will fit me or mother, or brother or sister, or grandmother, or grandfather? This is all we have and we are awfully cold." Only, of course, they use such poor grammar that they can hardly be understood.

Well, I have done a lot of rambling, but if you have time to read what I have written, maybe you will enjoy knowing that Independence is not the only place in the world where the extremely poor and needy are still in abundance. It is this continuous existence of poverty and dire need that makes me so homesick and dissatisfied at times that I can hardly content myself. And it was this same poverty and distress that caused us to give the Christmas party last year and invite in the whole neighborhood, young and old, to share our little surprise sacks which we prepared for the children. Their little hungry minds had hardly heard of Christmas, and could not imagine what a party was. We determined if our Christmas could not be what we wanted it to be, that we would give these children something to remember for a long time. Our son announced to every child that he knew that we were preparing for a party and wanted them all to come on Christmas day to our house for the occasion. Their faces beamed, but there was a big question mark stamped indelibly on every face. Several days before the big event were spent by us in making candy and popcorn balls and cakes. I walked to the closest little country village and it happened that on that day there was a truck that came into the same little village loaded with fruit from Florida. I picked up courage to tell the driver of the truck of my plan for the happy holiday for the children and he at once began planning to help me. He gave me many more oranges than I could carry home for seventy-five cents. So I left them at the village doctor's home and sent some one on the mule the next day for them. The mountain roads are mostly in the creeks and as soon as the fall rains begin to come, the roads are impassable. Our car sat in the garage for four months, during which any coming in or going out was done on horse back or mule back. This Christmas party was a new experience for our little son and also for us, but he seemed to gain the most from it. He had made big plans about how he would go to the hills and cut his own Christmas tree for the first time in his life. But he was much too slow for these early rising mountain children. Two or three days before Christmas upon the day that he had planned to go to get the tree, early in the morning before we were dressed we heard steps as if someone was coming bearing a heavy load. Junior ran to the door in his night clothes and there stood one of his most ardent admirers with a most beautiful cedar tree on his back, much larger and more beautiful than he had even thought of being able to get. His disappointment was almost too great to be concealed, but the child that had brought it was so excited about being able to serve him, that Junior took a second thought and acted pleased and thrilled. But the doors were barred as soon as the tree was fastened into the tree holder and no one was allowed to enter the room until the decorations were all fastened on. Only a very few were allowed to see it before the day appointed. On Christmas day we all arose extremely early, as the early arrival of the tree had taught us a lesson. We all worked like mad filling the paper

Thoughts on Hearing President F. M. McDowell Preach

By L. D. Campbell

It has been my pleasure of recent date to have met and listened to President F. M. McDowell. The fact that we have such great and conscientious men in the church would warrant (it seems to me) a note of praise through the columns of the Herald, not from church officials, but from individuals and branches where he has just recently labored.

It has been inspiring to sit as I have, and hear him as he delivered four of his soul-stirring sermons, one at Windsor and three at Detroit. To hear such sermons and leave the building not a better man seems humanly impossible.

As associate pastor at Windsor, I have this comment to make and would like so see it published in the Herald, not for publicity on my part, but for the encouragement it will be to Brother McDowell and to the membership at large. No man could sit within the sound of his voice, be he stranger or member, and not feel the presence of the power of God. No man could sit and listen and not be lifted heavenward. During these sermons I had a spiritual experience I will never forget.

While President McDowell was preaching at Windsor and during his sermon, there flashed before my vision and I saw clear and vividly Peter and John as they stood before the gates of the Temple. I heard Peter in response to the beggar say: "Silver and gold have I none; such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." The scene changed, I saw President McDowell in his official office stand before the people with outstretched arms and in the power of his office say, "Silver and gold have I none; such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and live." This experience then passed, and again I realized that I was one of his listeners, was listening to a real servant of God, one who had power and authority to represent God on earth.

Thank God for such men, for the faith of the early pioneers of this great work, for men who today are willing to carry on. As for me, I promise God before men that I will redouble my effort in this work of building men and women in the image of God, and take the baton which has been handed me in this great relay race of life and hand it to some one else seasoned with love, humility, and spiritual experiences.

In closing I wish to use the words of a man by the name of Gray (whether these words be poetry or prose, I can not say, but their sentiment bespeaks to me the character of Brother McDowell): "Next to the radiance that flows from the Almighty throne, is the light of a noble and beautiful life, that wraps itself in benediction around the destiny of others and as a reward finds a home in the presence of God."

A word of encouragement to our people, I believe, is expressed in the words of a poet unknown to me:

"Do you know that your soul is of my soul such a part
That you seem to be fiber and core of my heart?
None other can pain me as you, dear, can do,
None other can please me or praise me as you.

"Remember, the world will be quick with its blame
If shadow or stain ever darkens your name;
'Like God like son,' is a saying so true,
The world will judge largely of 'God' by you.

"Be yours then the task, if task it shall be,
To force the proud world to do homage to me;
Be sure it will say, when its verdict you've won:
'He reaped as he sowed—to this is his son.'"

This Is the True Church

By Lena A. Higgins

I wish to testify that I know the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the true church, and that if we as Saints live our religion, we shall receive the gifts and blessings Christ told his disciples would follow those who believed.

Many times I have been healed, and my children have been instantly healed through the use of the consecrated oil. We have ten children, three of whom are grown, but none have accepted the gospel; neither has my companion.

I ask the prayers of God's people that I shall be able to live the gospel so that my loved ones shall see what my religion means to me. I have many trials, but God has always given me strength to bear them.

There is no branch here, but Elder George Bailey is holding meetings just north of Harrison in an old town hall. We are looking forward to organizing a Sunday school as there are about thirty attending each Sunday. These meetings are food for my soul, it being the first time I have been privileged to attend services without driving at least eighteen miles since I united with the church ten and one half years ago.

I love the gospel and work and pray that I may be of some use in helping this great work. My prayers are always for God's people and Zion that shall be redeemed by the faithful.

Meetings at Beeville, Texas

By G. H. Wixom

At the close of the Southwestern Texas district conference, held at San Antonio, Texas, October 9, on invitation from Elder G. M. Hiles, of Beeville, Texas, I accompanied him to Beeville, where I held a series of services in a hall situated in the center of the city. During this series, the editor of the Beeville paper called the Bee-Picayune, asked me to give him a synopsis of one of my sermons, setting forth what we stood for as a church, as he felt that the people of that city would be interested in a subject of that kind.

Elder Hiles has lived there for a number of years and has many friends there, and while it was hard to get very many to attend the services, they would read our message in the paper. I submitted the sermon synopsis the editor requested, and it seemed to please him; he assured me that he would publish it.

Beeville is a city of about six thousand inhabitants and is situated about ninety-five miles southeast of San Antonio, Texas, on the highway to McAllen and Brownville. We have some twelve members living there and in that part of the district.

I am beginning a series tonight (November 29) in Marfa, Texas, which is situated about four hundred and fifty miles west of San Antonio, where we have a membership of seven-teen and some thirty-seven in their church school. Our work began here a year ago last September, when Brother Forest Gatrost and family who reside here, secured for me the Presbyterian Church, and at the close of this series, I baptized ten and organized this church school. Brother Floyd Gatrost was elected director and his wife was elected secretary.

While it is a long distance from any branch, I try to call and preach for them when going to or from my home in California.

The Missionary's Gethsemane

By Ella Brackenbury Lambkin

A missionary walked the streets of Jerusalem, walked un-seeing past old historic spots. There was no room in his thoughts today for reverie on the past of this ancient city. Even the noises and unpleasant odors of the narrow, dirty streets did not trouble him today.

In the pocket of his coat for two days had lain a letter from home. His mother, the letter said, was very ill. She was slipping very fast. If he did not soon return he might never see her again. But how could he return? The church had sent him here to stay until he was called back. How long a time that would be he did not know. It might be weeks, possibly months, maybe years.

The narrow, cluttered streets of the older part of the city, the city within the walls, gave way to the newer, more modern section without the walls where foreigners lived and where the mission house was. There came to the missionary thoughts of that day before he had sailed when a servant of the Lord had spoken to him and promised that if he would attempt this mission his loved ones should be cared for and protected until his return. He had felt then the assurance of the Spirit that this was true. Could he doubt it now? No, not that. He must not doubt. Yet the memory failed to bring the comfort that he needed. His thoughts traveled toward home, but became lost in the ceaseless beat of wave on wave through the endless miles that stretched between Judah's land and Joseph's.

On Sunday morning the missionary woke early, the burden heavy on his heart. The mission house was very quiet, but he could not sleep. The thought came, "Go to Gethsemane." Quietly he rose and took his way past the sleeping city. He came to the eastern corner of the old gray wall, descended the slope of Kedron Valley, and slowly climbed the Mount of Olives. Opposite the Latin garden of Gethsemane he turned to the left into an olive grove.

The air was chill. His shoes and clothing were damp from the dew wet trees and grass for the sun had not yet risen over Olivet. All was still save the twitter of the sparrows and the round clear notes of a distant shepherd's flute. Perchance Jesus, the Christ, had come to the garden here on just such a morning as this. Perhaps he noted the sparrow's call and heard the shepherd's flute. Mayhap his sandaled feet had pressed the dew wet soil in this very spot. Here he spent many happy hours with his disciples. And, somewhere in this garden he had knelt one night to pray. He had felt alone and depressed.

The servant is not greater than his Lord. In his troubled heart this servant felt a kinship with his sorrow-bowed Master. He knelt and prayed. For some reason no assurance came and no relief was granted to the burdened heart.

In troubled disappointment he went back down the hillside. He came to an old tumble-down stone fence and was about to step across it when there came over him so keen a sense of his own helplessness and of his urgent need for assurance that he decided he would try again. He might yet obtain mercy. Returning to the secluded spot in the olive grove he prayed again to the God who notes the sparrow's fall.

And as he prayed there came into his soul that peace that passeth understanding. Blessed hope drove from his heart the gloom and depression that had reigned there. His faith was strengthened. He felt sure that all of God's promises would be fulfilled. Gethsemane, so dear to the heart of all the world, would be henceforth doubly dear to him.

With a lighter heart he started again down the hillside. Doubt and darkness were swept away. He knew that God does live—he does hear—he does answer prayer. He knew that the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob who exercised his power hereabout so long ago—THAT SAME GOD IS WITH LATTER DAY ISRAEL TODAY.

The sun crowned Olive's brow with golden glory and in the heart of the missionary was reflected the light of a glad new day.

(Author's Note: This is a true story told to me by a missionary.)

Is Shown His Work in the Church

By L. R. Adkins

Living over ninety miles from a branch of the church I do not have the privilege of attending church as I should. Nevertheless I keep up a correspondence with our pastor, Fred Cousins, of Oshoto Branch, and in his last letter of November 5, he felt constrained to tell me that if I would be faithful God had a work for me to do.

I felt the power of the Spirit resting upon me as I read, and I have asked with a true desire to know what this work is. In answer to my prayer I have been shown that there is to be organized here a branch of the church at the Fairview Corner, four and one-half miles from my home. There is a fine school of more than twenty pupils attending at this corner.

There are numbers of good people in this community, and if I am allowed, I will try to place the Herald in these homes to prepare the way for the work further on.

Wishes Friend to Write

Mrs. Howard Westerman, of Center, Colorado, wishes to ask that Mrs. R. E. Smith, of Saint Louis, Missouri, write to her and send her address. Having lost the address, she has been unable to correspond.

Requests for Prayer

Mrs. Edward E. Melvin, of Pewamo, Michigan, requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her cousin, Mrs. W. L. Quick, who is afflicted. She is isolated from church privileges, but her faith is strong, and she is in need of the Lord's blessing.

PIPER CITY, ILLINOIS.

Sister Arie E. Cunningham, of Escatawpa, Mississippi, asks the prayers of the church that she may be healed of her afflictions.

QUESTION TIME

What was the "beginning" in which God created heaven and earth, stated in Genesis 1: 1?

Doubtless it was the beginning of the heaven and the earth referred to. It certainly could not have been the beginning of all existence, for of course God did not create himself at that or any other time. The Inspired Version is different, and states:

"Behold, I reveal unto you (Moses) concerning this heaven and this earth; . . . I am the Beginning and the End; the Almighty God. By mine Only Begotten I created these things."

This shows that Christ also existed before this heaven and earth were made. Evidently there is more than one heaven, as here indicated, and this fact is supported by Paul when he says:

"I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven."—2 Corinthians 12: 2.

From the above we may conclude that other heavens existed before "this heaven."

How does the church know that its revelations are from God?

The church is of course a collection of people who are substantially united upon certain teachings believed to be divinely commanded. Those baptized into the church are therefore presumed to accept at least its fundamental teachings, though differences of opinion may exist concerning less important matters. One of the fundamental and most important beliefs of Latter Day Saints is, that God reveals himself to his people in every age when they will observe his will, and that such revelations are received through prophets whom God calls and sends with his message. It is furthermore believed that the Bible contains the word of God to some of his people of former ages, so far as it is correctly translated and so far as the revealed word of those periods has been preserved, and that the Book of Mormon also contains inspired instruction to people anciently living on the American continent.

Pursuant to this belief, the church has three chief factors to consider in determining whether or not a revelation is from God. First, it must be in harmony with what has been already accepted as from him. Second, it must be received in the manner that God has provided, as indicated by scripture and express instruction. Third, it must be submitted for consideration in accordance with divine direction. One of the commonly accepted views of the Saints is, that when all essential factors concerning a purported revelation are in harmony with the previously accepted word of God, his people are entitled to receive the witness of the Holy Spirit to its truth. This, perhaps, may be termed a general promise, rather than a universal promise to every individual.

Absolute knowledge, however, is not the basis of acceptance of God's word, as a rule. We are instructed: "Have faith in God." But faith is not knowledge. Faith founded upon right reason and evidence is required of God's people. If we knew all about God and his will, there would be no faith required in the matter. The church, that is, its properly constituted officials and delegates, prayerfully and conscientiously examine revelations lawfully presented. By formal vote it then registers its convictions, and revelations thus adopted become accepted law to the body.

What was the ancient method of determining when God has spoken?

The inspired record does not tell us of many instances of the kind referred to. But in the days of Moses, he submitted the word to the elders and the people, and they promised to obey it. Two instances are illustrative of this:

"And Moses came and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words which the Lord commanded him. And all the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do."—Exodus 19: 7, 8.

"And Moses came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the Lord hath said will we do."—Ibid., 24: 3.

The Hebrew list of canonical books was handed down through the Jews, who in a council (of Jamnia 90 A. D.) limited the Old Testament canon. The eleven apostles in council prayed for God's direction to appoint one to be successor of Judas, who fell by transgression. The important doctrines concerned with circumcision and the Mosaic law were also considered by "the apostles and elders," and Peter and James appear to have been spokesmen of the divine will, though James seems to have occupied the presiding function at that time, if we may determine by his "sentence" in the matter (Acts 15: 19). The word sentence here used is from the Greek krino, which means "to judge." His word was accepted by "the apostles and elders, and the whole church."

ards, 102 talks on stewardship before the church school, 46 talks before the branch, and 104 visits had been made to the homes of juniors to give encouragement and to secure the cooperation of parents. In 1931 897 record books were in use in 60 branches.

New records should begin with January accounts. Our supply of record books is limited. Those who wish books should place their orders at once. Some branches make the initial investment and provide books for all who will agree to work faithfully with the sponsor. Sometimes the books are provided as an investment in Juniors by some individual or by the church school. Sometimes the boys and girls pay their own dimes to secure record books. Perhaps not all records will be kept faithfully for the year, but as an educational means of developing future Zion builders the project has great possibilities. Much of its success depends upon the genuine interest and leadership of the sponsor, and the encouragement given juniors in their homes.

Junior Stewardship Record Books for group project use may be had at 10 cents each, for individual home use at 15 cents each. Order from the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

For the beginner in tithing the church offers the Inventory form, and for annual checking, the Financial Statement. These forms* are available from every bishop, bishop's agent and solicitor, many pastors have them at hand always, and the traveling missionary keeps a supply with him as a matter of course. These forms have not reached perfection, and in course of time will naturally be improved, but they serve the purpose intended. In beginning the observance of the tithing law the tithe of the net worth is taken, thereafter, the net increase after the necessary living expenses have been deducted from the total income, is tithed. The forms themselves, and the methods of procedure have been discussed so frequently that repetition is probably not justifiable at this time. Should help be needed in properly filling out the appropriate blank, the solicitor, district bishop's agent, or local bishop will gladly assist. When in doubt it is probably a very safe rule to decide in favor of the Lord.

Since the majority of the members of the church receive their income on a weekly or monthly basis, they should at that time ascertain the tithe due by following the procedure outlined in the annual statement. The Financial Statement should then be filled out as of the end of each year, checking the results against the weekly or monthly figuring, using the Family Budget Book, available at the Herald Publishing House, as a basis, so as to be sure that the full tithe has been paid; then the Statement should be forwarded to the Presiding Bishopric in the manner indicated above. If the Statement is thus used each person will be satisfied that he has conscientiously tried to fulfill the law, he will have no regrets because of omissions, and will know whether or not his efforts in temporal things are making it possible for him to help build Zion and spread the gospel.

*The Inventory, or Financial Statement should be submitted to the local bishop, bishop's agent or solicitor, they forwarding same to the Presiding Bishopric, where the data involved are retained in confidence. If for some reason the member desires to forward the information directly to the Presiding Bishopric, this may be done.

bags which my husband had bought at the store. The treats were very meager, consisting of only an orange, popcorn ball and several pieces of candy, some homemade and some "store" candy canes. But the effects that these little surprises had on the children were most pleasing and amusing. We counted the number that we thought would possibly come and after every one was allowed for, there was one sack left and two or three candy canes. Junior took charge of these and, as we afterwards found out, he placed under his pillow. At least two hours before the time set for the big event, the guests began coming and by an hour before time the house seemed to be working with little kids with their faces washed in just a circle around the top of their face, like the top of a plate that had been washed and the underneath left black and dirty. As the children arrived their wonder and excitement were far too great for any talking. The girls lined up on a bench that we had prepared because of the scarcity of chairs, and with a fixed gaze took in each little funny shiny face and every beautiful star and all the other bright colored ornaments on the tree from top to bottom. After the spell had broken, they sat with folded hands and once in a while one would venture to whisper to the one next to her. The boys came in and refused a chair, but stood in the doorway with their mouths hanging open and it seemed that their necks must have rubber in them the way their heads shot out first in one direction and then another, endeavoring to see it all without moving their feet out of the spot they had selected. As soon as the boys became aware that they were being observed they would duck their heads and make for the yard.

Our son had received a big shiny red coaster wagon and two kinds of trucks from his grandparents at home and the boys took turns pushing and riding. The day was pretty and sunny, but much too cold for the bare feet and the scanty clothes and no coats or caps. We managed to keep most of the boys out in the yard playing games, most of which were all new to them, as our games were different from the few that they had learned in the limited time they had attended school. When the curiosity got too great to find out what was in the sacks, we all came in the house and Junior acted as Santa Claus and handed each one his prize. It was more entertaining than a good show to see the expression on each little dirty-smudged face. When one anxious little fellow got his package in his hands, he turned and darted under and between the legs of another little chap that was standing in his way in the door. He ran like he expected a dozen or more to follow and make him divide. As he went out he said, "Oh, boys, let me out of here." It surprised our little son so much that he stopped and looked as queer as the child's performance as the others had looked at the Christmas tree. One of the children that was supposed to come was sick in bed and did not come until the noise from the party got him so excited that he crept out and came pale-faced and weak, and tried to enter into the games. But it was not long until he was missed by his father and here he came stepping high to take the child home. We gave him his surprise package and he went home almost backwards, for he looked back at the other children while his father dragged him by one arm toward home. The children with a saving nature kept their treats for several days and made it last as long as they could, while others seemed almost to swallow them whole. There were several unexpected guests and our son gave the sack that was intended for him when the extra ones that we had prepared gave out. But he enjoyed seeing them enjoy it more than he would have eating it himself. So he was well repaid. He still had one popcorn ball stored away and two small pieces of a candy cane, and the party was over and all the happy little creatures gone home, when we looked up and in at the door came the dirtiest most wretched looking half frozen little fellow any one could imagine. We were all at our ropes end to know what we were going to give him, for as we thought, all the candy and everything else was gone. But we suddenly missed our own child and in a few minutes here he came with one big popcorn ball and the two pieces of candy cane that he had hid under the pillow and a big piece of cake. The paper sacks were all gone but he brought it piled high on his little contrastingly clean hands. When we got to reviewing the happenings of the day we found that it turned out that our own little Junior had one by one given his part away and had not had any at all. But we older ones had made provisions for ourselves to be enjoyed later, so he got all he wanted and needed of oranges only, but of course, it was much better for his health than all the candy he had missed.

This experience was very good training for our child and we have not regretted being deprived of our holidays at home.

We hope that this will give some one an idea for a somewhat different sort of a Christmas than the usual selfish way that it is spent. We intend to spend our holidays at home in Independence and are anticipating a very pleasant time.

We wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS

with some finer essence of forbearance and forgiveness temper our mind."

Those who are helping to make this a real Christmas are those who are looking at service to all men both stock holders and employees. We have much reason to feel that today we have Christmas and not "Xmas." Men today as at no other season of the year are finding the value of "X." There is real evidence that many, but not all, in positions of power are seeing the light of the Star of Bethlehem, which when they see its practical applications, will enable them to enjoy that peace that passeth understanding and to exercise good will toward all men.

Love's Response

By Joseph Luff

(While the writer was helping to sing that familiar song, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," at a Saints' meeting, he was seized with a constraint to write, and, yielding to it, the following lines were evolved.)

Why criest thou to me
So tenderly—
Breathing thy prayer the while
In melody?
Dost thou this thoughtfully
And in sincerity?
Wouldst thou in verity
Be nearer me?

Dost thou with fervor yearn
To know my way?
Wouldst thou new virtue learn
Each passing day?
Or is the blend of tone
The yield of lips alone—
Directed toward my throne
In formal way?

If from thy heart thou wouldst
Thus fondly pray
And thou wouldst sanctify
Thy word and way—
Pleasures of earth decrie
And each himself deny—
Bearing his cross, that I Might shine alway.

If, with my bread alone—
Fed thee from heaven,
Thou wouldst be content—
Seeking no leaven,
Then, by that faith made whole,
Each prayer would find its goal
And waft thy pleading soul
Nearer to me.

If thou wouldst near me be,
Enter this door.
Climb not some other way
As thieves before.
He pleads availingly
Who can behold in me
Immutability,
And ample store.

Seek not one stake to draw
Set by my hand,
Nor yet a wider path
Than I have planned.
Few—few, alas, there be
Who open their eyes to see;
Blind they prefer to be
To my command.

"Followers of Christ alone"
They sing in glee
While yet they tread the paths
Untrod by me.
Pleasures and shrines by me
Unsought, they seek, yet see
No insincerity—
No mockery.

Oh, heritage of grace,
Seest thou in me
Naught to be loved or feared Sufficiently
To rouse thy consciousness
And bring forth righteousness
Superior to this
In troth to me?

Oh, Israel, how oft
Must I implore?
How long in mercy, thus Knock at thy door?
These gods of self displace
And give me ampler space
Or seek in vain my face
For evermore.

All that now separates
Thy souls from me
Thou canst remove at will
And nearer be.
But while these intervene
Thy prayers but little mean.
Choose then, this day between These gods and me.

"Gout"

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Gout sometimes called podagra, is a disease characterized by a paroxysmal and painful inflammation of the small joints, particularly of the great toe, accompanied by a disturbance of the metabolism of the purin bodies in consequence of which an accumulation of uric acid in the blood and uratic deposits in the tissues. Some people have an inherited tendency which is usually manifest early in life. The acquired form seldom occurs before the age of thirty-five. Men are more often affected than women. Attacks usually follow the indulgence of too much food and over indulgence in alcoholic liquors. Some slight injury, too little exercise, sedentary habits, nervous strain is also a cause. Changes in the structure of the kidneys, enlargement of the heart, arteriosclerosis usually accompany or is the result of this condition.

This disease is often mistaken for rheumatism. The Pocket Cyclopaedia of Medicine and Surgery gives a table as follows which differentiates the differences as follows:

"Gout"

- (1) Chiefly affects small joints.
- (2) More pain redness and swelling.
- (3) Moderate fever 101° F.
- (4) Sweats not profuse.
- (5) Pain more periodic.
- (6) Cuticle desquamates.
- (7) Often occurs at irregular intervals.

"Rheumatism"

- (1) Affects larger joints.
- (2) Parts swollen but less painful.
- (3) High fever—104° F.
- (4) Profuse acid sweats.
- (5) Pain continuous.
- (6) Cuticle usually intact.
- (7) Time of recurrence indefinite.

The acute form is rarely fatal, but the chronic variety is less favorable.

When those suffering from chronic gout are attacked with acute diseases or injuries, renders the case much more serious than under other circumstances. Those having an inherent predisposition to this disease (diathesis) sometimes spoken of as having a "gouty tendency," are subject to sore throat and rheumatism. There seems to be an antagonism between those having a gouty diathesis and tuberculosis. According to some observers those having consumption have a better opportunity to recover.

In olden times it was customary to drink some kind of "herb tea," blood cleanser, or purifier, on account of the universal gouty aches and pains in the spring. Nearly every one knows now the best way to prevent gouty aches and pains and skin eruptions in the spring is to live lightly through the winter. Senility (old age) will be delayed through shielding against infection and the gouty and rheumatic symptoms more wholesome and simpler living. "The thorn tree," called gout and rheumatism, are gradually fading away by having a greater knowledge of the causes of infant and adult mortality; contagion, typhoid, tuberculosis, etc. It has truly been said "that most men earn their diseases."

WISCONSIN: "I believe my daughter has asthma; at times it is hard for her to breathe. She is troubled with shortness of breath. I am greatly worried. What can I do for her?"

REPLY: Without making a physical examination, I can only make a guess. My guess is she has asthma. Asthma is only a symptom and may be due to bronchial infection, heart disease or diseases of the kidneys. To save her life-long suffering or death, you must not delay in finding the cause. Have a very careful physical examination made by a competent physician.

Keeping the Sacrament Sacred

By A. B.

I am going to relate some of the things I have witnessed regarding the emblems of the sacrament, and from these you will see that there are many abuses in the handling of them.

In a little western town a man holding the priesthood prepared the emblems in his home. There were small children in that home. They watched him eagerly and with expectation. I wondered why they were so much interested. All during the service they were attentive to the passing of the emblems. When we returned home I discovered that the father had told them they were too young to have the bread and the wine at the church, but that they could have all that was left. Instead of putting the wine into a glass for them to drink, they were permitted to have the tray and drink from the cups. It was a play dinner to those children who were growing up with no reverence or respect for the sacramental emblems.

One afternoon in 1914 while reading, I chanced to look out of the window. I saw a tub turned upside down with a white cloth over it. I knew the children were playing. I watched them. They were all cousins representing three families. Their fathers were brothers and had a knowledge of the meaning of the emblems. As I watched, the children put some bread and a glass of fruit juice on their table. Covering it up, they proceeded with their meeting as they called it. They prayed and they sang and passed the emblems in such a way that I was touched.

One of the fathers discovered them and was about to rush out and put a stop to it, but the mother stayed him and told him to wait. We watched in silence until their little service was over. Each one arose and said how he or she would like to be better and grow to be good men and women. They closed their meeting, covering everything up and leaving it. Then they all climbed into the buggy left in the yard under a tree, and played they were going home.

These children were enacting the scenes they regularly witnessed in the little church.

The mother told the father, "Now go and remove the dishes and take everything away." This he did just as he did in church.

Later in the afternoon when the children were wanting a story, that wise little mother brought out some pictures of the Lord's Supper, Christ in the garden, on the cross, and leading through to his ascension; and she told them the story of this part of his life with much feeling.

Those little faces were upturned to her for almost an hour while she explained each step that Jesus took in his great trial, and told them that only in church should the emblems be served. Those children ranged in ages from five to seven at that time, but they are young men and women today entering into the work of the church, and they have great reverence for the emblems and their serving.

In the last several months I have witnessed some very disrespectful things. There is a place not so far from here where the sacrament is served and at the close of each service, children rush to the table and take the tray and rush to the basement to drink the remaining wine.

One Sunday we had a good meeting. The father of those children had spoken of how sacred the emblems were and how we should humble ourselves to prepare for this service. At the close of the service his own children, twelve and fifteen years old, made the rush to see who would get the wine. They did not wait until they got home, but snatched it from the table and ran to the basement with it.

The wine has been made by an elderly sister for a number of years. She chooses the best of the grapes and really does this as a service to the Lord. And then to witness these things every month! Those children have no respect for the church, and they set a bad example for the other children as they are drawing their companions into the same practice.

The permanent things of life are those which we build into ourselves and into the lives of others. These we shall take to the throne of God.—A. B. Phillips, in a sermon to the Enoch Hill congregation, Independence.

The Tie That Binds

By Dwight D. W. Davis

In life there are many ties that bind. "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives?" is one such tie. It sacredly unites the lives of two souls making them one; it has for a purpose the ennobling of character and perpetuation of mankind; it enhances the opportunity for greater service and the attainment of higher spiritual levels.

The blending of two personalities in marriage usually is creative. In time the home is blessed with children, and with the blessing the formation of another tie—kinship, that invisible force which binds all members of the family together in love. The marital knot forms a tie as sacred, as binding, and as beautiful in meaning as any to be found in life, but there are other ties.

The poet writes:

"Friendship above all ties does bind the heart;
And faith in friendship is the noblest part."

Such is the binding tie of friendship—"to bear a part in every storm of fate." Nowhere are we able to find a more beautiful portrayal of genuine friendship than in the eighteenth chapter of 1 Samuel. How striking the words; how appealing and touching the sentiment:

"The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul. . . . Then Jonathan and David made a covenant. . . . And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle."

Small wonder Chapman wrote so inspiringly of this tie:

"Friendship is the cement of two minds,
As of one man the soul and body is;
Of which one can not sever but the other
Suffers a needful separation."

The passing of time shall never be able to efface a series of experiences that have come to me the last eight weeks. They have given me a new thrill—the thrill that comes from knowing God's people are the same wherever one finds them; the thrill that comes from realizing, with greater clarity of vision than ever before, the blessings membership in this church brings; the thrill that comes in recognizing the divine "brotherhood of man" among God's people. These experiences represent still another tie. It is best expressed by the words of one of our hymns:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love,
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

May 27, when Graceland College closed its doors for the summer months, I went east for almost seven weeks' vacation. The further east we traveled from Graceland the more the thought, "I'm going to a foreign land to reside among strange people," came into my mind. This thought worried me for it was the truth: the east was new land to me and the people were strangers. But whatever fears I had were soon dispelled. The Saints of the Southern New England District made me a welcome son.

At the domicile of Mrs. Leah Traver, wife of Bishop E. L. Traver, in Boston; and at the summer home of the Chesworth's on the Onset reunion grounds, I was made to feel at home—home among Christian brothers and sisters. Typically the religion of the people in this church was the love and kindness of the Onset Saints to me.

The charity of Sister Rogerson, who frequently did my washing and often surprised my Graceland friend, Don Chesworth, and me by bringing us a warm pan of some appetizing food; the cordial and heartfelt reception always given me at the Traverses; the confidence and faith of the Saints in me as a servant of God, manifested by their willingness to give me a definite and active part to play in their religious services—all these things make meaningful, as nothing else could, the import of Christ's words: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

The Black family in Grand Island, Nebraska; the Buffehr family in Cheyenne, Wyoming (Saints in the church), by taking into their homes a servant of God, though a stranger to them, merit the blessings of God's servant:

"In whatsoever house ye enter, and they receive you, leave your blessing upon that house . . . and you shall be filled with joy and gladness and know this, that in the day of judgment you shall be judges of that house."

In the desert of Wyoming, Brother Mundy, whom most of the Saints attending conference always recognize by his cowboy regalia, fed me and unasked placed a five-dollar bill in my hand saying: "You may need this before you get home."

Indeed there is a tie that binds us together in gospel bonds. Many there are in the church who have learned the lesson of the Good Samaritan (the obligation of Christian love to our neighbor, who is anyone in need) and heeded the counsel of Jesus: "Go thou and do likewise."

As children of God, members of this great on-going church, there is need, if the church objectives set forth at the late General Conference are to be attained, that we become "all one in Christ Jesus." "Only in the peace of fraternity and the unity of those caught up in the spirit of Zion redemption can the work of the Lord be accomplished." (Doctrine and Covenants 136.)

Let us pray God for a strengthening of the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love, for its concomitant product shall be Zion, the forerunner of the millennium.

We'll Carry On

By Lee E. Root

(Author's Note: Recently at a district conference one of the officers of the church made the statement that he was glad that the younger men were coming into usefulness to the church, because it made those who were growing aged feel that there were those who would carry on when they were forced to lay the burden down. That statement has inspired me to write the article below.)

Yes, we'll carry on, Brother John. In fact, we are anxious to carry on. We have caught, in a measure at least, the vision of this great work. We see spread out before us as it were a panoramic view of all that is past and we hope in a measure of what is to be.

We want to tell you of our training, Brother John, so you can see that we are fitted for the task that is ours. We remember the time we spent on the "Yearling Squad" in preparation for the "Game of Life." We remember the skirmishes we had with the "Varsity." We remember how our strategy was often changed, but we also remember when we sometimes showed you fellows a few points of weakness and helped you to strengthen your attacks. We remember the days and nights we went to bed quite badly bruised and beaten and aching in body and mind. We remember the hard, cruel lesson that was taught us then. But we didn't lay down on the job, Brother John. Oh, no, we were out the very next night and, though our bruises still hurt considerably and our bodies ached at each move, we gave you a good fight. Our defense was strengthened and our wits increased. You remember that, don't you? You remember we didn't fail to show up for the next practice, don't you? And so we passed through those strenuous days of training until we were promoted to the "Sophomore Squad."

And now, Brother John, we are on the substitute team. We have learned a lot of the "Varsity" plays. We have used them time and time again. We can remember times that we have been used as "Subs" in the big "Game of Life." We have been warming up on the sidelines for a long time, Brother John, and we're anxious to get into the "Game." We're glad when the "Coach" tells us we can go in for a while as a "Sub." Yes, actually glad! We do quite well, too, Brother John. Oh, not as well as you fellows, who have had so much experience, but considering our inexperience we do quite well. We hold up our end of the line and sometimes carry the ball across.

Someday, Brother John, you fellows on the "Varsity" will graduate into the "Superannuated Class" and we'll then make up the "Varsity." But don't worry, we're ready and waiting anxiously for the opportunity to enter the "Game of Life." Mayhap by profiting by the experiences that we have had on the "Yearling Squad" and by our experiences on the "Second-String" we'll be able to carry the ball farther than you fellows did. Perhaps we will gain more yardage from line of skirmish than you did. We aren't egotistical, Brother John—we know our weakness. We know wherein we lack. We know the places we'll be thrown for a loss, but we'll avoid them until we're stronger. We know the places we'll gain points for dear old "Varsity." Shouldn't we carry on a little better because of our contract with you fellows? Shouldn't we do just a little better because of that?

We're trying to look two ways, Brother John, just as you fellows did. We're looking back and trying to train the present "Yearling Squad." They need help, too, just the same as we did. We're trying to help them over the rough places. We're trying to keep them from the errors we made. We're looking ahead to the time when we'll be on the "Varsity." When we'll be expected to take the brunt of the attack. But we're ready for it! We're anxious for it! Haven't you seen how anxious we have been out there on the "bench"? Our "Subs," we hope, will be stronger then. The "Varsity," we trust, will be mightier and we'll accomplish real results, Brother John. In fact, we expect to win the "Conference" then. We expect to receive the prize of ZION!

And someday, Brother John, when you sit on the sidelines as an "Alumnus" you'll cheer us on to victory, won't you? And someday when we see you fellows out there cheering us on we'll fight the harder for dear old "Varsity." We'll put in an extra ounce of strength to show you fellows our prowess and then you'll cheer, Brother John. Yes, you'll cheer to see the points go up for dear old "Varsity," the points made by the "Yearlings" of yesteryear. And you'll be proud of us then, won't you?

We'll carry on, Brother John, we'll carry on! We've caught the vision of it all and we're proud to accept your "berths" on the team. We're proud to be trusted with so great an honor as your positions on the team. We'll do our utmost to win for dear old "Varsity."

Brotherhood

'Tis not enough that Christ was born
Beneath the star that shone,
And earth was set that blessed morn
Within a golden zone.
He must be born within the heart
Before he finds his throne,
And brings the day of love and good—
The reign of Christlike brotherhood.

Illinois Branches Have Historic Background

Churches at Joy and Millersburg, Offsprings of Early Group

Joy and Millersburg Branches are offsprings of the old Buffalo Prairie Branch, organized April 28, 1862, which made that branch seventy years old last April. The church building was dedicated September 8, 1868, the first building of the Reorganization to be dedicated. The gospel message was brought to this community about 1857 by Wentworth Holmes, his wife, sons, and brother, Moses Holmes. They had heard it through a missionary on the sea coast of Maine. Grandfather Holmes, who had been a Methodist class leader, tried hard not to believe the message. He would read and study his Bible by the light of the fireplace, and say to his wife, "Elsie, this Bible has turned into a Mormon Bible. The message is there as the elder says." That missionary's name is unknown. He visited that place alone and on foot, but the seed he sowed there fell on ground that brought forth fruit. As a result of his work in that early day, hundreds have heard and obeyed the gospel from the old Buffalo Prairie Branch. Later Jessie L. Adams and family and many others were associated with the Holmes family in carrying on the work.

Many historic memories cling around the old place. Large crowds of people used to drive miles in lumber wagons, or walked barefooted, carrying their shoes to be worn after they reached the church. Big farm wagons with three and four seats of people were driven up and unloaded on a long, high platform with steps on three sides. They thought the platform a great convenience in those days. What would the Saints of those times have thought if they could have looked down the years and to the annual home-coming with its many incoming automobiles and overhead the roar of the big tri-motor United States mail and passenger planes on their way day and night between Chicago and Dallas, Texas?

In those olden days there was no other place to go but to church, and everyone went to church. All the Saints and many of the world came to hear such men as Joseph, Alexander, and David H. Smith, Zenos H. Gurley, W. W. Blair, John H. Lake, F. G. Pitt, John T. Kinneman, and many others. The gospel was preached in all the schoolhouses scattered over the country, and once a debate was held on the county fair grounds, drawing a large crowd. Such crowds came to the old church building that all could not get inside. Once a window was taken out, and Joseph Smith preached to a great number inside and outside. Another time David H. preached in the building and Brother Joseph stood in a wagon outside. Both preached to large crowds.

Now the old branch has merged with one of its offsprings, Joy Branch. No services are held in the old building, just a home-coming once a year in September, and sometimes a funeral service, for many of the Saints lie in that quiet churchyard. The Saints in this vicinity are preserving the building. Lately a new roof and two coats of paint were given it.

Saints of Three Branches Meet Frequently

Buffalo Prairie, Millersburg, and Joy Branches are situated in a triangle seven to nine miles apart, making it possible for the members of each place to join in all the activities such as all-day services of prayer and preaching with basket lunches at the noon hour. Joy and Millersburg have their separate services on Sunday, but once a week during the warm months, young and old join in an evening of music, readings, or debates. Once a month an evening is devoted to games with a lunch. For example, on Halloween, which was celebrated on Saturday evening, young and old met at Brother and Sister Earl Scranton's country home. All came dressed in hard-times clothes and masked, and there was much fun. Each family brought sandwiches and pumpkin pies and their own table service. Next morning everyone was at Sunday school on time.

Church Organization and Accomplishment at Joy

Now to speak of Joy Branch. This branch was organized July 28, 1899. Services were held in halls or homes until March 10, 1906, when the Saints decided to try to have a house of worship. They worked together and many non-members gave their money to help. On October 7, of that year, Brother Alexander Smith dedicated the building. Many, many elders have preached here in the past, on the streets, in halls, store buildings, schoolhouses, tents, and in the homes.

The present branch record now shows fifty-one members. Part of these are scattered too far to attend church. Regular services are held each Sunday: Sunday school at 10 a. m., under the leadership of Marjorie Holmes and Orpha Holmes with Ivan Holmes as secretary. This service with the help of music changes into a prayer or preaching service at 11 a. m., with sacrament the first Sunday of each month.

Elder W. V. Holmes is president of the branch and associated with him are J. W. Bean, Dale S. Holmes, Glen Holmes, and Earl Scranton of the priesthood.

Old-fashioned Religio sessions are held on Sunday evenings, Eva Bean and Grace Fifield in charge with Mark Holmes as secretary. The "Message of the Book of Mormon" quarterlies are studied, then a short program of a sermonet from Stepping Stones is read by one of the young folks; there is music by the orchestra followed by a few "Do You Know" questions on the gospel or church books. The last Sunday evening in the month is devoted to a preparatory service for sacrament on the next Sunday. Many times all take part in this service from the youngest to the oldest.

The young people, under the leadership of Sister Orpha Holmes, are attracting much attention in the community by their orchestra music.

Some of the families attended the Nauvoo services this summer, and three of the young men, Ivan and Mark Holmes and Vurl Bean attended part of the summer camp.

Throughout the past years a number of young people from this community have attended Graceland College. At present Vurl Bean, from Joy, is there for his third year, and Larlene Poland, for her second year. College Day was observed with a short program in each of the three services during the day, and the sum of fifteen dollars was taken up to help with the loan fund.

Recently the members of the branch worked together to beautify the little church. The roof was fixed by three of the men. Another built a new chimney. The ceiling was freshly papered, and side walls were redecorated. The women painted the seats and the men the floor. New aisle carpet was bought and new shades for the windows. The paint for the outside of the building is on hand and paid for; it will be applied later. All this was not done at once, but little by little as the Saints could spare their mites. Birthday offerings, etc., were used, and still the branch has done its part in the district. This has been heavy, for this community had not many heads of families, and all are poor. Nevertheless, the Saints feel that the Lord has blessed them. The elders are greatly blessed in administering to the sick.

Lately the president of the branch led four into the waters of baptism. Three young Sunday school children and later the mother of one of the young boys.

Prophecy Has Helped

Many prophecies have been given and fulfilled in this little church. One of these has given much comfort during the distressing time the church is passing through. It has been partly fulfilled, and the members are waiting for the fulfillment of the rest. The prophecy was given through Apostle E. J. Gleazer at a conference held at Joy in May, 1922. Brother Gleazer was a stranger here for just one day. He had no way of knowing the work done by the Saints stretching over the years from 1857. Many of the Saints had wondered why so few had obeyed the gospel when so much preaching had been done. That Sunday morning in the early prayer service the Saints were told through Brother Gleazer that the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard was in His hands and more had been accomplished than they had dreamed. They were also told that the church would go down into the depths and thousands would apostatize, but when the time came for the Lord to speak, his people should know his voice and the church should be triumphant.

Altogether the Saints here feel that the Lord is pouring out his Spirit upon them in the branch as long as they strive to keep his commandments and use the key of prayer to unlock his storehouse of blessings.

The branch voted to have no tree or treat this Christmas, but to have a vesper service Christmas night. The money which would have been spent for Christmas will go to the church.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

Cooperates in Sacrifice Drive

The Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Saints enjoyed a most inspiring and spiritual meeting on Thanksgiving morning. By prayers and testimonies deep gratitude was expressed to the benevolent Father for his grace and goodness. An expression of love in the form of groceries was received at this time for those in need.

The Young People's Cornerstone Society having ended a pleasurable summer of picnics and parties, now begins a new year of work. This group will have as a theme "A Personal God." The subject for the first quarter of the year is "What a Latter Day Saint Thinks About God." This subject will be developed by individual study and group discussion.

The young people greatly miss the presence of Earl Farbarik, whose death recently took from the branch a fine friend and helper in the young people's and Sunday school organizations. Earl was a scholarship student of honorable standing at the Carnegie Institute of Technology.

The members of this branch are cooperating enthusiastically with the bishop's agent in supporting the sacrifice drive. It is hoped that in spite of hard times, this branch will make a fine showing in this means of serving God. On the Sunday of the last drive this branch received one hundred forty-six dollars. Many of the contributions were a real sacrifice in this time of depression.

Thayer, Missouri

Missionary Meetings by W. E. Haden

In the past several weeks Saints of this branch have felt the spirit of this latter-day work with more power, more harmony, and more hope and courage to go onward to Zion. It has been their privilege to experience the blessings of the Lord, and the workers feel lifted up over their endeavors.

Sunday, November 6, the small son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hancock was blessed by Elder J. W. Hancock. Apostle J. F. Garver blessed Freddie Baker, son of Elder and Mrs. Baker, December 5.

Not long ago the Saints gladly welcomed the return of Elder W. E. Haden, who is an inspiration to the members of this district. He opened a meeting at Wayside, about fifteen miles from Thayer, and was well pleased with the response given. The series began in the middle of the week and by Sunday, attendance had increased from twelve to sixty-five. The people who were present were eager to hear the true gospel, and by the time the twelve-day series closed, the Saints were happy in the desire to learn, and the attention that had been manifested.

Sunday, November 20, a fine baptismal service was held, Brother Henry Pressley being baptized by Elder Haden. Brother Pressley is the son of John Pressley, game warden of Oregon County. Elders Cunningham and Hancock confirmed the candidate.

Saints from this branch attended the conference at Springfield, December 3 and 4, and returned home with greater faith and more determination to push on. Immediately following the conference Apostle Garver, Elder Haden and Elder Chrestenson, of Tigris Branch, came to Thayer. These with the bishop's agent, Elder Davis, Brother H. E. Waite and Brother Port McLain will go into the district in the interests of the sacrifice drive. The prayers of the Saints of this branch go with them.

Sympathy is extended the friends and relatives of Sister Sina Perkins Cook, of Rivertown, who passed away a short time ago. She was born in Carter County, February 6, 1855, and at the age of twenty-six was married to Roe Cook. Leaves three sons and ten grandchildren. She passed away at the home of her son, Thomas Oliver Cook, December 5. Interment was at Bardley, Missouri.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

Owing to a district meeting at First Church in observance of the centennial birthday of the late Joseph Smith, attendance here was small the first Sunday of November.

The women met November 10 with the spirit of sacrifice. The usual potluck dinner was sacrificed, and each member gave twenty-five cents to be given to the general church. Sister H. E. French read a splendid paper touching all the high spots in the papers read for the year. These papers were on the general theme, "The Church." Sister Mayme Morgan read an original poem, "His Bouquet," given by the inspiration of the Spirit and very impressive.

On that day, also, the women gave a get-together dinner in the basement of the church for their husbands. Speakers were H. E. French, C. H. Hamilton, Lepha McMillin, E. C. J. Swanson, J. E. Matthews, R. E. Madden, and Sisters A. H. Niaman and Mayme Morgan. Solos were sung by Hazel Gribben, Lucinda Madden and Carl E. Turvey; a duet by Carl E. Turvey and Gard H. Kirkendall.

Five new members were baptized November 20 by Patriarch J. E. Matthews. They are Mrs. Myrtle Swisher, Kathleen Swisher, Paul Zellers, Grace Zellers and Janet Gillenwater.

At a recent branch business meeting it was voted to have a junior church service. Brother Gard H. Kirkendall was appointed leader with Sisters Lucinda Madden and Ethel Kirkendall as assistants. Sister Madden is in charge of the music and has organized a junior choir. Their songs are a fine contribution to the services.

Sister Norma Ann Kirkendall has organized a primary band, and the little folks are adding their bit to the musical portion of Sunday school and junior church.

A member of the priesthood is speaker each Sunday at the junior church, and the primary teachers take their turns at story telling. The service is conducted at the same hour as the adult preaching service, and average attendance is over fifty.

Sermons for the past month have been edifying. The following elders have occupied: G. H. Kirkendall, C. W. Clark, A. E. Anderton, Bishop H. E. French, and Patriarchs J. E. Matthews and F. A. Smith.

Third Church

Services were dismissed at Third Church the morning of November 6, in order that the Saints might meet with First Church congregation in Joseph Smith memorial anniversary services. They enjoyed a Pentecostal shower—tongues, prophecies, and interpretation—commencing at seven o'clock in the morning and continuing until ten. In the evening Third Church members returned to the hilltop, where Elder W. P. Vickroy, of Lancaster, was the speaker.

Monday evening, October 31, the Saints had a social in the nature of a Halloween party. Pastor F. C. Welsh gave the members block tickets, each one representing a cement block in the new church which the branch hopes to build. The depression has no effect upon local hopes for a church home, and before the evening service several dollars' worth had been sold.

The Zion Circle served a fried chicken supper with good success, and it was discovered that the block tickets for the tabernacle are going fast.

The Gleaner Class held a wiener roast at Crystal Rock Springs log cabin which is one hundred years old. The rain poured all day and evening, but wieners were roasted, hymns were sung, and a happy time was had before the open fire.

Bill Moose, last of the Wyandotte Indians, recalls the time when he and his parents visited this spring in 1859. He told the present proprietor: "White Man, there are two springs. If you go down by the cabin where the boulder is, you will step off a few paces, and there you will find the other spring." Bill Moose is blind with age, over ninety years old, but has a very keen mind and memory. The other spring was uncovered by those who followed his directions, also part of the old Indian retaining wall. Water from these springs is shipped all over the United States. Bill Moose's Indian name is Crow Foot.

The little meeting place underwent a great change for Thanksgiving. All seats were given a coloring, and other parts of the room were beautified, making a cheerful atmosphere. Great credit is due the workers.

The Saints gathered there for Thanksgiving, taking baskets of food. Tables were laid and a big dinner prepared in the church kitchen. Then all sat down as one huge family, and everyone was happy.

That evening a wonderful Thanksgiving prayer meeting was enjoyed, Pastor F. C. Welsh and Ray Dougherty in charge. The gospel gifts were enjoyed, and helpful experiences were related in the testimonies.

But on that day news of the death of Sister Hazel Forst, formerly Hazel Campbell, reached the Saints. She passed away at the home of her mother in Indiana. She was a constant worker in the church, particularly helpful among the young in dramatic work. Sister Forst was a spiritual woman whose testimonies will live among the Saints.

On Tuesday evening Patriarch J. E. Matthews taught the Sunshine Class a lesson in the Book of Mormon. As usual the lesson was stimulating and instructive.

Priest Lewis Walters is improving. He was up Thanksgiving Day. Sister Nichols is also improving, but is still unable to leave the hospital.

The hand of death was again laid on this branch, taking the three-months-old baby of Sister Alice Pinkerton. Sister Pinkerton is the sister of Mrs. F. C. Welch. The prayers of the Saints are for the bereaved, that God will be near them.

Meetings during the past month have been of a high spiritual order. Among the speakers have been S. E. Dixon and W. P. Vickroy, of Lancaster; G. P. Myers, F. C. Welsh, J. E. Matthews, C. H. Foster, Charles Schafenberg, and George Ferguson. Pastor Welsh continues to hold weekly cottage meetings and interest is growing.

President F. M. Smith at Saint Louis Conference

Three-day Meeting—Large Crowds—Three Baptized

A record-breaking crowd greeted President Frederick M. Smith at the Saint Louis District Conference, December 2, 3, and 4, at Saint Louis Branch. Reviving a custom of former years, the conference was held three days, with class work and a business session preceding the Sunday spiritual services.

Representatives from the various branches in the district were invited to spend the three days in Saint Louis, provision being made to house some, and provide food for the visitors at the church. Sister Adele Moore donated the meals served Saturday, and Sister Myrtle Voyce Smith provided the food served Sunday.

"Beauty of Worship," was the general theme of the class work which was given under the direction of Patriarch and Sister Richard Baldwin.

Elder Roy Remington was reelected district president. He selected as counselors High Priests T. J. Elliott and B. S. Lambkin. Other officers chosen were: C. J. Remington, secretary; Clarence W. Dickens, treasurer; Edward Nicholson, auditor; Sister B. S. Lambkin, superintendent of Religious Education; Sister T. J. Elliott, director of the adult division and the women's department; Sister Dorothy Elliott, director of young people's activities, and Sister Roy Remington, director of the children's department. E. C. Bell was sustained as music director and bishop's agent.

Over three hundred participated in the sacrament service held at 11 a. m. Sunday. President Smith discussed, "The Objectives of the Church," at 2 and 6 p. m. "We Should Define Our Theology Without Restricting Ourselves to a Creed," was the subject of President Smith's first talk. The subject of the second sermon was, "We Should Preach Christ and Him Crucified—the Blood and the Atonement." Approximately two hundred and fifty attended each of these services.

President Smith also presided over the conference, assisted by the district presidency. Patriarch Baldwin performed three baptisms.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

Roscoe E. Davey Holds Missionary Series

The movement of the work in Council Bluffs is onward. This year the branch changed the fiscal year to begin on the first of October instead of January 1, as has been the custom heretofore. There were few changes made in branch officials. Elder Ray Whiting was retained as branch president; Lee Landon was chosen to succeed O. A. Currie as superintendent of Religious Education; W. T. Spanswick was sustained leader of the adult division; Paul Harding was elected leader of the young people's division; Mrs. Amy Thomas was appointed head of the women's department. Mrs. Blanche Currie was elected children's supervisor. Mrs. Neva Emarine was appointed superintendent of the primary department; Sister Irene Turpen was selected as junior superintendent; Mrs. Eva Bratches, superintendent of the beginners, and Mabel Rasmussen superintendent of the intermediates.

The women, under the leadership of Mrs. Thomas, have resumed the serving of chicken dinners on Thursdays at the church, and have been meeting with good success. Attendance has been getting larger each time. These sisters have been able to raise enough money to pay off a number of pressing branch obligations.

The adult division had their first potluck dinner the first Friday evening in November. This meeting was well attended and a good time was had. The women provided a wonderful supper, and after the meal those present joined in community singing; then there was an interesting talk by Brother Whiting on the benefits of social gatherings of this kind. Papers were read on such subjects as, "Who Was the First Republican President?" "Is Thanksgiving a Legal Holiday?" "The Origin of Halloween," and "Where Did the American Indian Come From?"

The most outstanding thing that has happened in Council Bluffs since Herald readers last heard from here was the series of meetings held by Elder Roscoe E. Davey, from September 25 to October 14. These sermons were a spiritual and intellectual feast. He had intended to stay only two weeks, but received so many requests to continue, that he finally consented to stay another week. Brother Davey won a place in the hearts of the people of Council Bluffs.

The time of the services have been changed during the winter months to 5.30 p. m. for the young people's meeting, and 7 p. m. for the preaching service.

A number of the young folks are taking up the study of dramatics in the Sunday evening classes, and considerable interest is being shown.

A group of the Saints from Omaha presented the play, "Milestones," here Sunday evening, November 27. The house was crowded and standing room was at a premium.

Council Bluffs young people attended a special young people's day at Crescent, November 27. The day's activities were in charge of O. A. Currie, district superintendent of Religious Education.

The communion service of December 4, was in charge of Elders P. T. Heuermann and O. A. Currie. Many expressed themselves as considering it one of the best meetings enjoyed in Council Bluffs Branch in a long time.

The choir is doing very well under the leadership of Sister Ada Darrington Hall. The singers' are working on Christmas music. Both the organ and piano are used to accompany the choir. Miss Edith Burton plays the piano, and Mrs. W. T. Spanwick the organ.

Port Huron, Michigan

Outstanding Fall and Early Winter Events

Port Huron Branch resumed usual fall and winter activities by giving a chicken supper September 22, which netted about seventy dollars, the sum to be applied on church indebtedness.

But the outstanding and most enjoyable event of the year was the harvest home festival October 14 and 15. The lower auditorium of the church was transformed by exhibits of the eight booths sponsored by classes of the church school and primary division. These were attractively arranged and decorated with autumn foliage, flowers, flags, and crepe paper. The church was thronged with Saints and friends who had come to view the display of hundreds of quarts of canned fruits and vegetables, staple groceries in abundance, fresh vegetables, fancy needlework, quilts, and wearing apparel.

On Friday evening the upper auditorium was filled to capacity with an audience ready to appreciate and enjoy the following program arranged by Pastor William Patterson: A one-act play, "The Church Rummage Sale," directed by Mrs. Patterson; Hawaiian selections by J. N. Muir and Junior Ledsworth; readings by Mrs. Mary Grey, Angela Patterson, and Tennyson Summers; vocal numbers by Bessie Lewis and William Patterson. Brother Patterson also gave a number of bird calls and some clever impersonations.

The junior division of the church school held promotion exercises Sunday, October 2, under the direction of the superintendency of Mrs. Ila Whenham and Mrs. Purl Bunker. A nursery department with its equipment has since been installed.

October 3, the men of the church demonstrated their ability as cooks and waiters by giving a successful pancake supper.

Two were added to the branch enrollment through baptism October 16, both candidates being promising young people.

A large gathering of young people enjoyed a masked Halloween party in the lower auditorium of the church, under the supervision of the church school director, Lesley Whenham, and C. E. Lewis, supervisor of the young people's division.

The annual rummage sale of the Laurel Club was held October 28 and 29, and this group under the presidency of Mrs. C. O. Farmer and Mrs. M. W. Liston, served an oyster supper December 1.

Apostle D. T. Williams was the speaker the last Sunday evening in October. "A God Who Speaks Today" was his theme.

District President B. E. Brown visited this branch recently and spoke the evening of November 13.

Members have been encouraged by the steadily increasing attendance of church services, which are characterized by a degree of the Spirit.

The annual business meeting and election of officers were held Monday evening, December 5.

The divisions of the church school are now busy preparing for the Christmas program. Also a cantata will be given by the choir directed by Mrs. C. C. Whitford.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

Sermons from the local priesthood have been inspirational and helpful. Among the speakers have been Pastor B. M. Anderson, E. J. Lenox, W. E. Poague, Grover Wall, and Francis Schrunk. The congregation was also favored by a talk on Prohibition by Audentia Anderson.

A new gas furnace has been installed in the church, and some improvements have been made in the kitchen of the building.

"Working together" was the theme for the rally day service. After a brief class session, each teacher gave a short talk about the activities of her students, and then presented them to the school. Some of the pupils responded with musical numbers and readings.

In September the intermediate class presented the playlet, "Faith," under the direction of Sister Esther Schrunk, at the church school service.

A Halloween carnival was the social affair of the junior class for the branch in October. After several dramatic numbers and musical selections, the guests were invited to the basement to participate in stunts. The fortune-telling booth was the favorite amusement of the crowd. Halloween refreshments were served by members of the class. The proceeds from the carnival will be used for a picture machine. Sister Margie Weller is the class sponsor.

The La-Da-Sa Club is the name for the young people's group, sponsored by Sister Francis Schrunk, assisted by Rogene Anderson and Francis Schrunk. Officers are: President, Richard Stake; vice president, Dorethea Hunt; secretary-treasurer, Rogene Anderson; sergeant-at-arms, Paul Baldwin; pianist, Virginia Poague. This group meets at six thirty each Sunday evening. At present the members are enjoying debates on current topics. Meetings are well attended, and there is an enrollment of twenty-six.

Miss Capitola Wright, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred G. Wright, of Beattie, Kansas, was married to George W. Mechling, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Mechling, of Lincoln, at the home of the bride's parents, July 16. Patriarch Samuel Twombly read the marriage service in the presence of the immediate families. Before her marriage Mrs. Mechling was connected with the Nebraska Hardware Insurance Company of Lincoln. Mr. Mechling has bachelor of arts and master in science degrees from the University of Nebraska. He specialized in geology. He is the assistant superintendent of Lincoln Packing Company.

Another bride of this branch is Mrs. Clifford Beck, who before her marriage was Miss Thelma Tabler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tabler, of Lincoln. She was married to Clifford Beck, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harmon Beck, at Marysville, Kansas, October 7.

There are three Latter Day Saint students attending the University of Nebraska, Margaret Jones, of Soldier, Iowa; Irene Lewis, of Missouri Valley, Iowa; and Alfred Jensen, of Blair, Nebraska.

The Loyal Workers, under the direction of Sister Katie Hale, assisted by Audentia Anderson, are busy. They meet each Wednesday all day; have luncheon together, and the remainder of the time is spent in quilting and sewing. In the afternoon Sister Anderson reads and discusses church history, biography, and fiction. In August they held an ice cream social in charge of a committee composed of Sisters Poague, Stake, and Pfanmiller. This committee was in charge of earnings in July, August and September, and added almost thirty dollars to the treasury.

Sisters Allen, Weller, and McWilliams compose the committee for October, November, and December. They are busy working and holding food and rummage sales downtown. They also served a chili supper at the church. The money earned will be sent to the Bishop of the general church.

Late additions to the membership of Lincoln Branch are Brother and Sister Ralph Harder, of Independence, Missouri; Brother and Sister A. A. Thiehoff and daughter, Aleene, of Omaha, and Clarence D. Williams, of Burlington, Iowa. Brother and Sister Henry C. Smith and family, of Beatrice, are frequent visitors here.

The district conference convened at Lincoln October 28 to 30. Apostle R. S. Budd was here and delivered inspiring instruction. The play, "Milestones," was presented at the opening session of the conference under the direction of Esther Schrunk.

Sister Margaret Farrar, for eight years secretary of the Honorable Edgar Howard, one of Nebraska's representatives at Washington, District of Columbia, visited her parents, Brother and Sister W. S. Farrar, of Lincoln, during the late summer months. She is a member of the church group at Washington.

District Missionary W. A. Smith, held one week of meetings here beginning November 28. His doctrinal sermons answered a need of local Saints.

The passing of "Grandma" Horn occurred November 28. She was ninety-seven years of age, and made her home in Lincoln with her granddaughter, Mrs. Florence Munsell. Her funeral was held the afternoon of November 29, Elder W. A. Smith in charge. Interment was in Yuka Cemetery. Sister Horn's faith was very strong and she joyed in the hope of eternal life.

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

President F. M. Smith There

Oklahoma City Branch was honored by having President Frederick M. Smith as its guest Sunday, November 27. It had been fifteen years since Brother Smith visited here, and everyone was eager to meet him again and listen to his counsel.

Saints from Seminole, El Reno and nearby branches took advantage of the ideal weather and motored to Oklahoma City for the privilege of hearing President Smith. About two hundred and fifty were in attendance at both the morning and evening service.

He spoke on the great objectives of the church at both these hours, and in the afternoon presided over a round table discussion. Questions pertaining to stewardships and tithing were answered and explained, and Brother Smith left no doubt in the minds of those who heard him as to what a Latter Day Saint should do with regard to this matter. It seemed to some that his evening sermon was a message direct from God to the church.

At noon dinner was served at the parsonage by the women's department. This group of workers is busy under the efficient leadership of Sister Ed. Dillon, and is now preparing a program the proceeds from which will be used as a Christmas offering.

The anniversary of Joseph Smith III was observed the evening of November 6, with an appropriate and instructive program presented by the young people's department, led by Brother Lloyd Harding.

The annual election of officers was held December 11, and the unity of this meeting again manifested the Spirit of God. All former officers were reelected for another period of service.

The Saints are happy to have Brother E. L. Kemp as pastor. Both Brother and Sister Kemp have endeared themselves to the members of the branch by their thoughtful and untiring efforts in behalf of the church. Surely under such leadership the church here will place its feet on higher ground.

South Bend and Mishawaka Branch

Mishawaka, Indiana

Continued unemployment among the members prevents this branch from doing what the Saints feel is their share in helping to solve the financial problems of the church. But if depression is hindering financially, it is also welding the members together in the strong ties of brotherly love as they strive to help one another. They are growing spiritually and numerically.

November 20, Pastor F. E. Myers led three candidates into the waters of baptism, Charles R. Torrence and his daughter, Naomi, and Clair Galloway, eight-year-old son of Brother and Sister Galloway. As one by one these candidates were buried with Christ, the Saints sang, "The Old, Old Path." Later at the Wednesday evening prayer service as the confirmations took place, the members, under the influence of the power of God, felt that the seal of approval had been set on each of these new Saints.

Elder C. F. Hoxie, of this branch, is in charge of the work at Elkhart, at present, and although hindered by lack of financial provisions, is making a real effort to help the Saints there establish the gospel work on a sounder basis. Sunday morning school and preaching service are being carried on at present. In the near future, Brother Hoxie hopes to have an evening preaching service also.

Workers rejoice to report the rapid advancement of the lesser priesthood, especially that of a young brother, William Hardy, who was ordained to the office of priest eight months ago. He is making a wonderful effort to execute the duties of his office. He with Deacon Albert Taylor ably fills pulpit appointments on Sunday morning. Brother Hardy is also branch secretary, solicitor, and assistant Sunday school superintendent.

Sister Margaret Tappan, who suffered a broken hip five weeks ago, is improving nicely although she contracted pneumonia about two weeks after her fall. This was instantly checked by God's healing power through the ordinance of administration.

Though affliction and sickness have been prevalent this fall, God has seen fit to bestow some wonderful blessings upon his children.

Elder V. L. Coonfare, now of Benton Harbor, Michigan, was here November 13, preaching at the morning service. Others who have lately occupied are Elders Hoxie and Myers, Priest William Hardy, and Deacon Taylor.

Independence

Independence music lovers look to next Sunday with anticipation. They are remembering that Handel's beautiful oratorio, "The Messiah," is to be sung by one hundred and twenty-five voices of the Independence Messiah Choir, at the Stone Church, beginning promptly at four-thirty in the afternoon. This performance will be broadcast over KMBC. Paul N. Craig is the director, and the soloists this year are: Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley, soprano; Mrs. Alice May Burgess, contralto; Edward Brackenbury, tenor, and Albert Brackenbury, bass. Robert Miller, organist, and George Miller, pianist, will accompany the chorus. The public is invited to hear "The Messiah." There will be no other evening service on Christmas Day.

The short story and play contests sponsored by the young people's council are over. Prizes of two dollars and a half each were awarded the winners at the young people's meeting Sunday afternoon at the Auditorium: Short story, junior division, first place, Joy Harder; senior division, Richard Maloney; play contest, senior division, Irene Roberts.

A special Christmas program entertained the young people at that hour, Roy Settles, of Second Church, and Cecil Walker, of Liberty Street Church, in charge. Members of the To-Ko-Lon Class, of the Stone Church, gave a one-act play, "Christmas in a Bethlehem Inn"; Miss Doris May played an accordion solo; a quartet from Walnut Park Church sang several numbers; Miss Opal Williams read, and Richard Maloney rendered a piano solo.

Pastor J. F. Sheehy is much improved in health. He was able to be up and about by the first of this week. While ill in bed he had the experience of performing a marriage ceremony, December 11. The principals were Ralph S. Baldwin, brother of Sister Sheehy, and Miss Wanda L. Fisher, both of Lamoni, Iowa. The couple were attended by Miss Chassie Fisher, of Lamoni, sister of the bride, and Elvin Baldwin, of Independence, brother of the bridegroom. The bridal couple left immediately for Lamoni where they will make their home.

Stone Church

President Elbert A. Smith based his Sunday morning Christmas sermon on the message contained in two verses of Scripture: "And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." This he called the epitome of the Christian message which has gone to the entire world, and delineated how much happier men would be if they sought to live this message.

The musical program which was broadcast over KMBC, was furnished by the Wahdemna Choral Club, directed by Paul N. Craig. The chorus sang a "Christmas Song" of the seventeenth century, arranged by Walter Damrosch, Miss Gladys Good, soloist; and "Reax Gloria," by Gaines, Gomer Cool, violinist, and Blaine Bender, reader. "The Birthday of a King," by Neidlinger, a vocal solo, was sung by Miss Fern Griggs, soprano. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee was organist.

"I Am With You Always," the promise of Jesus to his disciples, was the theme of President F. M. McDowell's lecture Sunday night. He illustrated his theme with stereopticon scenes of the Passion Play at Oberammergau and pictures of other famous places and cathedrals in Europe. Some of these pictures Brother McDowell took with his own camera on his trip to Europe two years ago. This was the second time he has shown these pictures to the Stone Church congregation, but each time a large crowd was much interested in his lecture.

In the past few days, several have been called away by death. Among these was Elder William Newton, ninety-two years old, who served as a missionary for forty years. He had belonged to the church since 1876. He had been ill for five years, and died December 16. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Malena Newton, of the home; two daughters, Mrs. Anna Franklin, of Independence, and Mrs. C. I. Wild, of Lincoln, Montana; one son, Doctor W. H. Newton, of Kansas City; three brothers, John Newton, of London, Canada; Charles Newton, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Thomas Newton, of Holden, Missouri; one sister, Mrs. Sarah Skinner, of Kansas City, Kansas. The funeral was held at the Stone Church Monday at one o'clock.

Brother William G. Bronson passed away at his home December 18, after a brief illness. He was born November 3, 1864, at Princeville, Illinois, and had belonged to the church since 1890. He served in the priesthood, occupying the offices of deacon, priest, and elder. Surviving him are his wife, Sister Mamie G.

Bronson, and two sons, Guinn and Clay. The funeral was held from the Stone Church, Tuesday afternoon. Brother Bronson was a member of the Bronson and Page Hardware firm, Independence.

Word was received of the death of Sister Ella D. Whitehead, eighty-four years of age, at Los Angeles, California, December 14. She formerly lived in Independence. Miss Kathryn Haberlein and Miss Ruth Haberlein, of Independence, are her granddaughters.

Clarence Smith, forty-five years of age, died December 10, and his funeral was held from Stahl's Funeral Home, Elders Samuel Smith and Frank McDonald in charge of the services. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The funeral of Mrs. Anna Marie Christensen, eighty-six years old, who formerly lived in Independence, was held here December 14, Elder U. W. Greene in charge, and interment was in Mound Grove. Sister Christensen died in Kansas City, December 12. She was born in Denmark and came to America with her parents in 1854. Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. John L. Casmaer, Mrs. Caroline Royer, and Mrs. T. L. Kiles, all of Kansas City, Missouri; two sons, James and Alvin H., of Denver; a sister, Mrs. H. B. Torrance, Maryville, Missouri; eleven grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren.

Christmas parties, entertainments, and observations have begun in this congregation. Unique among these were parties by Girl Scout Troops 37 and 46, on Saturday afternoon and Monday afternoon respectively, at which about forty-five needy children were entertained with games, a Christmas tree, and refreshments. The girls had made enough gifts so that each child received two. Troop officers happily cooperated in this holiday enterprise. The parties were given in the Girl Scout rooms at the Auditorium.

Second Church

Sunday, December 11, R. C. Conyers took charge of the eleven o'clock junior service. The theme of the meeting was "God's Greatest Gift—Christ." The pianist was Bethel Davis and the leader of the music was Nadine Inman. The opening prayer was by Brother Conyers. "There's a Song in the Air," a poem, was read by Fay Murdock. The Scripture reading by Brother Conyers was from Isaiah 7: 7-14. The story, "The Woolly Lamb of God," was told by Sister Agnes Edmunds. Brother Imal Burke talked on the theme, "God's Gift to Man."

At the eleven o'clock preaching service upstairs an organ prelude was played by Mrs. Sam Inman. The opening prayer was given by Elder E. E. Thomas. The choir sang the anthem, "Fairest Lord Jesus." Elder H. L. Barto was the speaker of the hour.

The seven-thirty service was opened by the organ prelude played by Mrs. Leslie Sellers. Assistant Pastor Ben Sarratt was in charge of the service. A male sextet, accompanied by Mrs. Gladys Inman sang "The Victor's Song." The opening prayer was by A. K. Dillee, former pastor. The sextet then sang, "Sweet Will of God." Elder J. E. Kelsey, speaker, used as his subject, "Jesus, the Christ and His Mission."

Brother John Bailey, who has been ill for a long time, died Sunday morning, December 11, at three o'clock. The funeral was held Wednesday, December 14.

Walnut Park Church

Sickness, accident, and death, have invaded the ranks of the Saints at Walnut Park during the past week, bringing suffering and sadness. On Tuesday Brother R. G. Blackburn suffered the fracture of an arm; on Wednesday his son, Edwin Blackburn, was taken to the Sanitarium for a serious appendicitis operation and at first little hope was held of his recovery. However, he is now showing improvement, and it is hoped that he can be brought home by Christmas Day.

On Friday morning, Sister Maud Price, fifty-three years of age, and a long-time resident of Walnut Park, passed to her reward. She was born June 2, 1879, and became a member of the Reorganization in 1896. Surviving Sister Price are her husband, William Walter Price; a son by a former marriage, Lionel E. Babcock, of Kansas City; two other sons, Joseph Price and Woodrow Price, and four daughters, Mrs. Retha LaGrece, Katherine, Fern, and Emeretta Price, all of Independence. Funeral services for Sister Price were held Sunday afternoon at the Walnut Park Church. C. G. Closson was in charge of the service, and the sermon was by the pastor, Frank McDonald. Three vocal numbers were furnished by Sister Marian Campbell and Sister Carlotta Norman, accompanied by Drexel Mollison, who also played the organ music for the service. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

On Saturday evening, A. C. Dempsey, father of Sister R. J. Harrington, fell on the ice while walking on the sidewalk and fractured his left hip. He will probably be bedfast for some time.

Friday evening, choir members met at the home of Sister P. B. Griffin and entertained themselves by mending the choir music. Due to the prevalence of illness among the members only thirteen were able to attend. Refreshments consisted of popcorn and candy.

Attendance at Sunday's services again was below average, due to sickness and unfavorable weather. Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker in the morning and Patriarch W. A. McDowell in the evening. No program was given at the Religio, due to the death of the mother of Fern Price, chairman of the program committee.

New officers of the Swastika Class, elected Sunday morning, are: Gomer Stowell, vice-president and chairman of the social committee; William Wilson, secretary; and Gomer Stowell, representative on the young people's council. Paul Anderson, president of the class, will serve another term.

The Galilean Class is sponsoring a pound party at the church Friday afternoon and evening, to help in preparing Christmas baskets for the needy families of the district.

Brother and Sister Royden Barnhardt and daughter, Bethene, have gone to Port Colborne, Ontario, Canada, to spend the Christmas season with old friends there. They expect to be gone for several weeks. Brother Barnhardt, prior to the recent church school election, had been superintendent of the local school for a number of years.

New Liskeard, Ontario

Many Church Helpers There During Last Year

New Liskeard Branch can look back over the year just closing with a great deal of gratitude for the many blessings that have come to its members.

Brother Shepherdson, sr., and his daughter, Velma, were in Toronto attending district conference in October, 1931, when Elder R. D. Weaver received notice of his release from the mission field. Brother Shepherdson invited him and Sister Weaver to return to New Liskeard with them. This they did. Brother Weaver immediately commenced a series of meetings, preaching Tuesday and Thursday evenings, and twice on Sunday, and working every day in Shepherdson's box factory. He was the means of awakening the Saints in the branch to their responsibilities and after six weeks sojourn here, it was with sad hearts that the Saints bade them farewell. Before leaving, he led three precious souls into the waters of baptism. God's Spirit was manifested many times during the local prayer services.

In November, 1931, J. A. Wilson of Toronto, district president spent a few days at New Liskeard. During the Wednesday night prayer service, the members again enjoyed an outpouring of God's Spirit. Brother Wilson spoke with the gift of prophecy, calling Brother Albert Shepherdson, local branch president, to the office of elder.

The first sacrament service in 1932, was one long to be remembered, for God again blessed his people with his Spirit, and during this service, Brother Albert Shepherdson, branch president, spoke in prophecy, calling Brother Wesley Shepherdson to the office of teacher.

The latter part of May, Elder Wilson again visited the branch, and held a three weeks' series of meetings, which resulted in much good, a number of non-members becoming interested in the angel message.

Then Elder S. G. Saint John visited New Liskeard. He held a series of meetings, but the attendance was not great. He left July 5, to spend a few days at Port Elgin reunion.

July 14 workers received the glad news that Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith would be here for Sunday, July 17. He motored up with Brother and Sister B. H. Hewitt and daughter, Margaret, of Toronto. Sunday Brother Smith had charge of the prayer service at nine o'clock, preached three times, and gave four blessings. Monday he gave four blessings and preached that evening. Tuesday they journeyed seventy-two miles farther north, and visited the gold-mining town of Kirkland Lake, returning in time to preach that evening, and he gave three blessings. Wednesday morning before leaving for Toronto, Brother Smith gave three more blessings. These were all recorded by Sister Velma Shepherdson on the typewriter. Although their stay was short, it was certainly enjoyed, it being twenty years since Brother Smith had been at New Liskeard. He organized the branch here at that time.

This was Brother and Sister Hewitt's first visit, but local members hope they will come again next year. This is an isolated branch. Toronto, which is 337 miles distant, is its nearest neighbor branch.

Just prior to Brother and Sister Hewitt's and Brother Smith's visit, word was received from Patriarch John F. Martin, bearing the sad news of the death of their son, and also that Brother Martin was contemplating coming North again during hay-fever time. Brother Shepherdson and daughter, Velma, motored down, and spent a few days at Lowbanks reunion, then went on to Niagara Falls, New York, and met Brother Martin. They returned to New Liskeard August 6, and on the seventh, Brother Martin commenced a series of old-time gospel sermons, continuing to September 25. Owing to his physical condition, he could preach only on Sunday and Wednesday evenings. He did not receive the physical benefit this year that he did last and had a slight touch of hay-fever, but he was able to fill every preaching appointment except one.

As a result of these meetings, on Sunday, the twenty-fifth, seven entered the waters of baptism, being baptized by Branch President Albert Shepherdson, and were confirmed by Brother Martin Wednesday evening the twenty-eighth. Before this service another was added by baptism. Brother Martin was greeted almost every night with a full house, and the last Sunday night he was here he talked to the largest crowd ever had at a preaching service. The little church was crowded to the doors, and after his sermon that night he played and sang a song which he composed the previous week while lying in bed sick, and which he gave as his parting blessing.

The Wednesday night service was an outstanding one, and one long to be remembered. Although there was no outward manifestations, the sweet influence of God's Spirit was felt to a marked degree.

As the Toronto district conference convened in Toronto, October 1 and 2, Brother Martin left the next day for Toronto in company with Brother Shepherdson, daughter, Velma, granddaughter, and grandson. Owing to Brother Martin's health, they stopped that night at North Bay, and were joined next morning by another carload from Liskeard, Brother Charles Niddery (one of the new members) and his wife, Brothers Albert and Wesley Shepherdson, and Wesley's son, Eldon, who went down to attend conference. Another happy experience came to the Liskeard Saints when, after the preaching service Sunday morning at Toronto, Sister Niddery entered the waters of baptism, and was confirmed that afternoon by Brother Martin. Brothers Albert and Wesley Shepherdson were ordained at this same service.

New Liskeard has just had a six weeks' visit from that grand old man, Patriarch John Shields. His fatherly counsel and admonition were inspiring to all who availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing him. He gave eight blessings.

This branch is blessed with an active women's department, who are putting forth every effort to help the church, both locally and general. This group is presided over by Sister Joyce Caswell, another new member who held this position for several months previous to becoming a member of the church, and is a very capable leader. The first of October they had a tea and sale of home-baking, realizing over fourteen dollars clear. The last of October they had a waist measuring social for members of the department (half the members of this department are not members of the church) and they realized over five dollars. Then they were requested by the Canadian Legion, (Great War Veterans) to cater for their annual banquet November 11. This they did, clearing over forty-two dollars.

Now the Sunday school and branch have entered whole-heartedly into the sacrifice movement of the church. The Sunday school voted, to send the money for the annual Christmas treat to the general church, and also to give the proceeds from the silver collection received at the Christmas entertainment.

In July, Sister Ione Copner was married to Brother Alfred Fletcher. Brother J. A. Wilson, of Toronto, performing the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents. Brother and Sister Fletcher are living in Niagara Falls, New York.

In September, Brother and Sister Basil Matchett lost their baby, Margaret Velma, from pneumonia. She was four months old.

November 12, an aged member, Sister Pacey, was bereaved by the death of her husband. The funeral service was from the church, the sermon by Elder Shields, assisted by the Reverend Omond of the United Church.

Far West Stake

Far West Stake has had several visits from general officers. On November 27, Bishop L. F. P. Curry, of Dallas, Texas, made his first appearance in the stake at a stake-wide meeting in Saint Joseph. He delivered a convincing message to a very good representation. Although his stay was very brief, the Saints were glad of the opportunity of becoming acquainted with him. Bishop G. L. DeLapp and Stake President Ward A. Hougas accompanied him on his trip here. Elder Hougas preached in the afternoon and also in the evening.

All sections of the stake have had the opportunity of hearing Bishop G. L. DeLapp also. These meetings have been divisional in order to expedite the transportation problem. On December 4, Bishop DeLapp was at Guilford morning and afternoon, where the groups in the northern part of the stake had met together. In the evening he preached at First and Second Churches in Saint Joseph. The groups from the other part of the stake met at Cameron on December 18, where Bishop DeLapp preached morning and afternoon. He was accompanied through the stake by Elder Ward A. Hougas.

Bishop C. J. Hunt reports good interest in most of the branches he has visited. He has spent considerable time in Far West Stake and has been in every branch in the stake. The sacrifice drive is under way in all places.

Stewartsville Branch

Although it has been some time since Stewartsville has reported, they have not fallen asleep but have been actively engaged in the work of the church. As a branch and as individuals they feel that they are becoming more and more an integral part of the church, in view of the conditions under which the church survives and under which the world labors at the present time. They also feel the necessity of rallying and giving their all to the cause when the future of the church is at stake. These conditions have served to heighten the realization of their dependence on God and His promises, and that they must, not only as branches, but as a church and as individuals, come closer to God and to each other, and yield obedience to His laws and ordinances in a more thorough and genuine manner than they have in the past. They are striving to carry on.

The church school has had the able directorship of Sister Madge Head throughout the past year. She has given untiringly of her efforts in this and the other departments for their joint development. Attendance and interest at church school, especially by the young people, has been increased recently by an attendance contest between two sides, one bearing the name of "Hustlers" and the other "Rustlers." It seems that these particular "Hustlers" hustled a little more than the "Rustlers" could rustle, and defeated them by a comfortable margin.

The recent young people's rally, held here and attended by the young people from surrounding branches, was a source of inspiration to all who were present. Brother Roy Chevill's interesting and helpful talks with the usual big help of Stake President Ward A. Hougas and with the splendid cooperation of the young people in all of the different activities, made for a profitable time. The young people look forward to similar gatherings in the future.

Bishop C. J. Hunt, of Independence, visited Stewartsville Branch a few days, speaking in the evenings and visiting with the Saints during the day.

Brother F. L. Hinderks on Sunday, December 4, gave a splendid and helpful talk concerning the partaking of the sacrament by the Saints. Elder O. Salisbury, of Saint Joseph, spoke at the evening hour and treated the subject, "Will Faith Be Found on the Earth When the Son of Man Cometh?"

A Christmas pageant entitled "The Place Where the Young Child Lay," will be given at Christmas time by the young people of the branch who look forward to this, the happiest and most joyful time of all the year, as their greatest opportunity to spread cheer and good will toward men.

First Saint Joseph Church

November and December have been busy months for First Church. Activities have been many and varied. All divisions and organizations have been laboring earnestly throughout this the Thanksgiving and Christmas season.

The women and the young people, as well as the local solicitor, have been working for the special sacrifice period. Although no reports are available as yet, there has been a fine spirit manifest. These efforts will culminate in a Christmas program on Christmas evening at the close of the sacrifice period.

The Ul-Lik-U's Players lived up to their reputation and presented a three-act comedy drama, "Eyes of Love," which was well received by a large audience in the Y. W. C. A. Auditorium, December 2. This is the club's fifth annual performance at the Y. W. besides the many religious dramas which have been given in the church. A nice sum was cleared from this production in spite of the depression. The regular monthly meetings of the club have been resumed since the play is over.

The O. T. Z.'s have not been idle. A "depression party" on November 8, was enjoyed by all the ragged and tattered guests present. For refreshments everyone was required to go through the "bread line" where crackers and a cup of water composed the "eats." Later the girls brought around some apples. Two Sunday morning prayer services were held, also a prayer service with the adults. The O. T. Z.'s also presented a pageant, "The Call to Youth," at the stake young people's rally at Stewartsville, which they repeated at First Church the following Sunday evening.

The women meet each week for quilting and have a study class in the afternoon. They served a soup supper December 9, and a sociable evening was enjoyed with a program and games by the O. T. Z.'s.

The Sunday services have been carried on as usual with good attendance and interest. Besides the local priesthood, Bishop L. F. P. Curry, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and Bishop C. J. Hunt have occupied the pulpit. Elder Ward A. Hougas, although living in Independence, has spent several Sundays here.

Portland, Oregon

Apostle F. H. Edwards at Young People's Institute

Classes conducted by Apostle F. Henry Edwards attracted an unusually large attendance at the district young people's institute November 25, 26, and 27, at Portland. Saints from outlying branches and missions crowded the church at almost every service.

Apostle Edwards taught for two class periods both Friday and Saturday. These were periods that made everyone pause to consider: Just why am I here? On earth? In this church? Does this church really mean anything to me? What shall be my contribution to its progress?

An early prayer meeting, young people's leaders' conference, and district young people's conference constituted the special services on Sunday. Apostle Edwards assisted in conducting each meeting and also preached morning and evening.

The young people's vesper service was in charge of Perry Hunt, district president, and was effectively carried out. The theme was "Working with God." At the same hour Apostle Edwards took charge of an adult vesper service upstairs.

There are now three young people's organizations in Portland district, one at Sherwood Mission, Gladys Tooze, president; another at Vancouver, Oliver Kimball, president, and the third at Portland, Perry Hunt in charge. It is hoped that Longview and Hood River will organize soon.

Elder and Mrs. Harold I. Velt, who have been at Sherwood for the past month while Elder Velt was conducting a series of meetings on the archæology of South America, were in Portland for the institute. They left for Willapa, Washington, where they expect to be for some time.

Portland carried out its Thanksgiving Day program as planned, prayer meeting at eleven o'clock; turkey dinner at 1.45 which was shared by about eighty people; a worship program at eight which included a picture appreciation of Hoffman's "Christ in Gethsemane," and a one-act play, "Dust of the Road," by Goodwin.

"The women of the church to the rescue," was the content of a recent article in the Herald. Portland women are making quilts to sell. They work together, coming early and working late. One woman was heard to say: "Oh, yes, the work is hard—we work until it gets dark. But we don't mind. You know the church has called on the women to help, and this is the best way we can find." It is to be noted that the quilting bee is largely composed of elderly women who work day after day. They are not kept at home by family cares, and humbly they give their time to the service of the church.

Muskegon, Michigan

Fourteenth Branch Anniversary on Thanksgiving Day

Thanksgiving was a time to be remembered by Saints of Muskegon for it was on this day that the fourteenth anniversary of the branch was celebrated. Prayer meeting was held at one o'clock in the afternoon and dinner was served at three o'clock. A round table was held at four thirty, Elder A. Whitehead in charge. A short program followed with Brothers Deal, Roberts, and Vern Swager in charge, and preaching in the evening was by Elder Whitehead.

Elder Whitehead has been pastor at Muskegon since the branch organized fourteen years ago. The Saints are grateful for the services he has rendered.

The choir, organized by Sister Deal, has proved a help to the group.

A program was given December 2, by the Temple Builders, Orioles and Blue Birds. A large number attended and enjoyed the numbers. Sister Eva Soper and Miss Lulu Holliday are the very capable leaders.

Fulton, Iowa

Chooses Officers for New Year

Fine attendance at Sunday school and church has encouraged the Saints of this small branch.

Two weeks ago the branch held election of officers. Sunday school began at ten o'clock and was well attended. The young people's class and the young married class went together and were taught by Elder E. R. Davis, missionary of this district. The eleven o'clock service opened with congregational singing, and the following officers were chosen for another year: President, John Heide; assistant, Amos Heide; clerk, Ethel Campbell; treasurer, George Jackson; branch solicitor, Lydia Campbell; correspondent, Mildred Heide; church school director, Alma Heide, and all other church school officers were chosen. The division directors are: Adults, Amos Heide; young people, Gladys Martens; juniors, Florence Campbell. The superintendent of women was referred to the ladies' aid.

A picnic dinner was enjoyed, and at two thirty occurred the installation of officers, Brother Davis the speaker. He also spoke in the evening.

Savanna, Illinois

Members Are Loyal Cooperating

Activities in Savanna Branch are given the loyal support of the Saints whose desire it is to grow in the knowledge of God's requirements of his people.

"Old Man Depression" has hit these members hard, as Savanna is a railroad town, and everyone knows the plight of the railroads at present with the development of keen competition with bus and truck lines, waterway projects and larger type engines, eliminating many men of over twenty years' service. There are many unemployed in this branch and others are working for small pay; but the Saints are going to contribute toward the sacrifice offering, trusting that all in the church will be able and willing to give something to demonstrate their love for Christ who was born to make the supreme sacrifice that men might learn the great lesson of living for others.

The three officers in charge are working together well, and with the members cooperation, progress is being made. Brother McCormac has charge of the midweek study of the Doctrine and Covenants and is trying to keep the members alert. He takes the time each study night to call the members by telephone, urging them not to forget the meeting. Besides this, he takes his car and fills it to overflowing, gathering up the Saints that would otherwise be unable to come.

The women's department is studying and each week takes up an offering for the sacrifice period.

Miscellaneous

Conference Notices

The semiannual conference of Northwestern Kansas District will convene at the church, 116 Clay Street, Topeka, Kansas, January 14 and 15. The first service will be at 11 o'clock Saturday morning, January 14. Apostle R. S. Budd will be present.—Mrs. H. C. Pitzenberger, district secretary, 2331 Buchanan Street, Topeka, Kansas.

A Correction

Elder Joseph Lane, of Lamoni, sends in the following correction: "In the Herald for December 14, page 1305, article, 'Outstanding Missionary Effort by Aged Ministers,' you say in the last paragraph that Joseph Lane was baptized at Cainsville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1868. That is a mistake. Cainsville, now Council Bluffs, Iowa, was my birthplace, November 10, 1851, and I was baptized at Farm Creek, Mills County, Iowa, in 1868, August 17. Was baptized by Elder Daniel Hougas."

Conference Minutes

NORTHWESTERN OHIO.—The seventeenth annual conference of Northwestern Ohio District convened at Sylvania, November 26 and 27. The Saturday afternoon business meeting was called to order by William Smith, of Bradner, Ohio; a hymn was sung, and prayer was offered by Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths. A motion was made that Brother Griffiths assisted with Apostle Ellis and Will Smith take charge of the conference. Brother Griffiths gave some timely remarks on the proper conduct in our business meeting. Fine representations from the branches at Saint Marys, Bradner, Oak Harbor, and Toledo were in attendance. Reports from the various branches and district and branch officers were read and approved. The conference voted to hold the conference of 1933, in September. The following officers were elected for the year: District president, Brother Slye; vice president, Brother Brough; secretary, Brother Ries; treasurer, Roy Yeager; director of church school, Floyd Clark; bishop's agent, Brother Wirebaugh. Clarence Holmes recommended to the conference that Brother Cramer be ordained to the position to which he was called. The recommendation was approved, and the business meeting adjourned, the members going to the basement where supper was served. At seven thirty a program of plays, songs, and readings was given. Sunday morning prayer service convened at eight thirty with Brother Griffiths in charge, assisted by Brother Holmes. In this service the Spirit of the Lord was felt. Sunday school was called at ten o'clock, Brother Floyd Clark in charge, assisted by Brothers Slye, Galousha, and Ries. The Sunday school attendance was one hundred fifty-eight. Preaching by Apostle Ellis was held directly following the Sunday school. Dinner was served for all in the basement.

The Sunday afternoon service was opened by Brother Slye, the choir helping with special music. At this hour Brother Cramer was ordained to the office of Aaronic priest by Apostle Ellis and Patriarch Griffiths. This was followed by a vocal solo by Sister Reed, of Toledo. Brother Griffiths contributed a rare treat, relating some of his experiences and memories. A vote of thanks was tendered Sylvania Saints for their accommodations and entertainment by Brother Griffiths in behalf of the conference, and the conference adjourned subject to the call of the district president. Apostle Ellis offered the benediction. The conference was marked by unity and harmony always present where the Spirit of God prevails, and members hope for many more such district meetings.

Our Departed Ones

SHEEN.—Emma Louise Fenton was born at Nauvoo, Illinois, March 4, 1865. Passed away at Pleasanton, Iowa, November 25, 1932. She was the daughter of Samuel and Harriett Fenton. She was married to Laurence Sheen in 1890. Leaves to mourn her passing, two sisters, Mrs. Nancie Robertson, of Franklin, Nebraska, and Mrs. Mary Morey, of Pleasanton, Iowa, and many other relatives and friends. She was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in which faith she died. She moved to Decatur County, Iowa, with her parents when in childhood, and spent the greater part of her life in that community, living a devoted Christian life which stands as a memorial in the memory of all who knew her. Funeral services were held at the Latter Day Saint Church, Pleasanton, November 27, at 2 p. m. Sermon by Joseph Lane. Elder T. J. Bell in charge. Many relatives and friends followed the remains to its last resting place in the cemetery at Pleasanton.

HODSON.—John Hyrum Hodson was born at Nauvoo, Illinois, October 13, 1844; died at Plain City, Utah, November 20, 1932. He came to Utah in 1853. Married Rebecca Marriott November 1, 1868. Was one of the early members of the Reorganization, and lived respected by all who knew him, witnessing to the truth of his religion. Sister Hodson died four years ago. Surviving are the following sons and daughters: Mrs. John Sneed, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. James Peterson, Wilson; Mrs. Earl McFarland, West Weber; Mrs. Parley Taylor, Plain City; John, Jed, and Ben Hodson, Plain City, all of Utah; and Mrs. C. A. Danley, Seattle, Washington; thirty-four grandchildren, nine great-grandchildren, and one sister, Mrs. James Bowler, of Tacoma, Washington. The funeral was from the Plain City meeting house November 23, Elder R. R. Robertson in charge, Elder A. M. Chase giving the sermon. Interment in the Plain City Cemetery.

DICKEY.—Anna Dickey was born February 13, 1870, at Myrtle Point, Oregon, and was the daughter of Daniel, and America Giles. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints June 17, 1897, and lived a faithful Christian life to the end. She leaves to mourn, one son, five brothers, two sisters, and many friends. A large number attended her funeral and manifested their love for her by beautiful floral decorations. She had been ailing for three years, and was ready to depart this life and enter into the rest prepared for those who keep the commandments of God. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder W. P. Bootman, of Tuscon, Arizona. Sister Dickey was a resident of Bisbee, Arizona.

MALKIE.—Elizabeth Malkie was born in Nassau, Germany, December 27, 1851, and died at Geneva, Ohio, November 26, 1932. In 1869, she came with her parents to America, and on March 10, 1877, she was married to Charles Malkie at Troy, New York. To this union five children were born, three boys and two girls. Two boys died in infancy and one girl at the age of six. Surviving are a son, Carl, and a daughter, Mrs. Sherman Fenner; four grandchildren; one brother, and many friends. August 24, 1924, Mrs. Malkie entered the church at Kirtland, Ohio, being baptized by Elder Clark, of West Virginia. Her life was one of devotion to her responsibilities as they came to her. Her end was one of peace and love for all.

BAILEY.—Katherine Anna Harris was born November 26, 1864, near Appleton, Wisconsin. When fourteen she moved to Lamoni, Iowa, where she was married to Earl D. Bailey January 10, 1880, the first couple to be married in Lamoni. Among the pioneers of those times, she and her husband took up their residence in western Kansas, later moving to Indian Territory and Arkansas. They moved to Tulsa thirty-one years ago, and have resided there and in the vicinity since. She was reared in the faith of this church, being baptized April 20, 1879. Her faithfulness to her Master, her consistent living, her devotion to the church have characterized her life and laid its fragrance on the lives of many whose good fortune it was to know her. Her grandfather and grandmother Cole were members of this church in its early organization, living near Nauvoo at the time of the assassination of Joseph Smith. She and her husband started the now Sperry Branch near Rock Creek, Oklahoma. She was the mother of nine sons and four daughters. All but three survive her. She also leaves four sisters, a devoted and grief-stricken companion, twenty-five grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. She came to her sudden death on Sunday, November 27, the result of an automobile accident which occurred near Wichita, Kansas, but forty minutes previous to her death. She was sixty-eight years old the day before. An impressive service was conducted in the Tulsa church by O. A. McDowell, assisted by the local choir. Apostle Budd delivering the sermon. She peacefully rests in one of Oklahoma's most beautiful burial spots, the new Memorial Park. The large concourse attending the services and the abundance of floral offerings attest the love and esteem hundreds bore this noble woman.

BURT.—Lula May McDonald was born in Montcalm County, Michigan, May 5, 1884, and passed away at her home near Stanton, the county seat, November 28, 1932. She was not a member but a friend of the church and a good woman. She married Richard Burt, a distant cousin of Elder Ernest Burt, in 1904. Leaves to mourn her husband and three children: Donald, of Detroit; Gladys, of Flint, and Lester, of the home; two sisters, one brother, one grandchild, and a host of other relatives and friends. Funeral services which were largely attended, were held in the Stanton Undertaking Parlors, the sermon being by Elder A. C. Barmore, Elder W. E. Aelick assisting.

HANSEN.—Hans P. Hansen was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, June 30, 1862, and came to America at the age of twenty years. He first located in Waterloo, Iowa. In 1888, he moved to Ronald, Washington, and there he was baptized into the church by Elder John Davis March 1, 1896. He was ordained a teacher by Elder J. C. Clapp in August, 1896, then to the office of priest in September, 1901, and in December, 1901, he was ordained an elder by Elder D. E. Powell. He married Donna Holmes October 26, 1898, at Roslyn, Washington. Passed suddenly from this life November 25, 1932, at his home in Filer, Idaho. Leaves to mourn, his wife; one daughter, Mrs. Donna Price, of West Los Angeles, California, and two sons, James R., of Filer, Idaho, and Edward F. of San Francisco, California; two grandchildren, other relatives and friends. Funeral services were from the Drake Mortuary at Twin Falls, Idaho, November 29. The services were conducted by Elder William Glanner, of Hagerman, Idaho, assisted by Elder Benjamin Pearson, of Filer. Interment was in Filer Cemetery.

VICKERY.—Nancy Catherine Mayo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Mayo, was born in Escambia County, Alabama, October 29, 1852. She married J. J. Vickery in 1872 in Alabama, and to this union eight children were born. Three of these preceded the mother in death; also her husband passed away sixteen years ago. Surviving are five children: Frank Vickery, of southern Missouri; Louis Vickery, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. K. W. Wilson, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. A. W. Jenks, Merriam, Kansas, and Edward Vickery, of Kansas City; seven grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. J. S. Sherman, of Kansas City, and Mrs. E. T. Bennett, of Independence, and many other relatives and friends. She died December 4, 1932, at the home of her daughter in Merriam, Kansas. The funeral sermon was by Joseph Luff, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

BLODGETT.—Mary Ellen Dillen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James P. Dillon, was born April 9, 1855. She passed from this life at her home in Independence, Missouri, November 27, 1932. The funeral was held from the Stone Church, November 29. She was baptized June 24, 1864, at Farmers Creek, Iowa, by M. G. Mandley; thus she became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. On July 10, 1873, she was united in marriage to William H. Barrett at Cameron, Missouri. To this union were born five sons and four daughters. Brother Barrett passed away in death, January 22, 1920. On September 7, 1927, she was united in marriage to Caleb E. Blodgett, by W. B. Barrett. Sister Blodgett was a upright, Christian woman. She was raised by parents that were strong in the faith of the latter-day work. She passed to the other shore with her faith fixed in God and the gospel of Jesus Christ, with a strong desire to meet her loved ones in that better land. She leaves to mourn their loss, her devoted husband, three sons, and two daughters, two sons and two daughters preceded her in death. She leaves also twenty-six grandchildren, four great-grandchildren, other relatives, and a host of friends. She was loved by all that knew her. Elder John F. Sheehy was in charge of the funeral; the sermon by W. A. McDowell.

The Pigeonhole

Happy New Year!

Scene: In a hall, just outside The Door.

Time: A few minutes before twelve on the night of December 31.

Characters: MANKIND, in a well used business suit. The Year 1932, in the clothes of a tramp. A NURSE. FATHER TIME'S scythe leans in a corner, and an hour glass is on the table. He and MOTHER EARTH do not appear.

MANKIND: Well, this is the critical time.

1932 (dejectedly): Yes, I suppose it is.

MANKIND: I hope she comes through all right.

1932: She always has come through all right.

MANKIND: But it is much harder for her this time. Poor old Mother Earth!

1932: I guess nothing can be done about it.

MANKIND: Maybe not.

1932: Who's the doctor?

MANKIND: Father Time. He attended when you were born.

1932: They say Time heals all wounds.

MANKIND (seriously): We wouldn't feel so bad—she and I—if only all the children would turn out well. Some are wonderful. Look at 1928. That was a child we were proud of! But then something began to happen to the family. I guess the stock is running down. Then there was 1931. One of the worst we ever had. My, my, what he didn't do to us!

1932 (with a whipped look): I guess he wasn't really so good.

MANKIND (turning savagely to 1932): And what he didn't do to us, you did! You've been such a disappointment to us. We had hoped for so much from you. But none has ever done worse. The record you have made will be a black spot in the family history!

1932 (with some heat): Blame it on the folly of 1914, blame it on the cruelty of 1919, blame it on the blind greed of 1927 and 1928. It wasn't my fault. They committed the sins. I get the punishment and the disgrace. (Emotionally) I tell you it isn't fair!

NURSE (appearing at the door): Gentlemen, gentlemen! Quiet, please. She's in terrible pain! (They stay very quiet for a little while.)

MANKIND (anger all gone): Maybe you're right.

1932: I've done my best. There ought to be a recovery in 1933. I have prepared the way. (Bitterly) But I won't get the credit for it.

MANKIND (consolingly): But thoughtful historians will know. The others will forget.

(A little squall, as of a tin squawker, or a crying doll, is heard inside the door.)

NURSE (appearing ecstatically at the door, with big white doll in her arms): It's a BOY!

(Mankind goes joyfully to look. 1932 sneaks out the other way.)

Pappadad says: "If the women would quit painting and powdering to excess and spoiling their natural beauty, and send the money saved to the church, it would be out of debt in a few months." Now if Pappadad will tell us how to get the women to do this, everything will be fine.

Looking To 1933

The New Year, like all others, brings its prospects of hope and its promises of better things. These promises are never completely fulfilled for us, but we are never entirely disappointed when we make all reasonable efforts to effect their realization.

Whether we like it or not, the great spiritual mission of the church is halted by financial conditions. And the financial condition of the church is very much a result of the financial condition of the members of the church. There can be no group prosperity until there is an improvement in individual welfare.

As we look forward to 1933, the matter of individual and family welfare is one of most serious concern. Whatever we can do to improve the individual lot will help to improve the condition of the church. This teaches us to watch for opportunities and to try to learn the lessons which present conditions should teach.

The coming year and what it will be are not matters of blind chance. The times affect us, but we can do something to mold the times. We are not the helpless creatures of environment. Environment will yield to a determined and organized effort. A few courageous people can move the world.

The year 1933 can be largely what we make of it. Either we can accept its conditions and mourn over the hardness of fate, or we can courageously set about to alter conditions.

To make specific suggestions: many a wage earner among the membership of our church is today destitute simply because of his dependence upon a job that he has not been able to get. His imagination has never conceived anything beyond getting a job. He has been a job slave. If the job comes he can work and live. If the job does not come he and his family starve.

This job slavery is a terrible thing. Our ancestors were not afflicted with it. They created their own jobs. They made and sold things. They were their own manufacturers, and their own salesmen. Nobody could fire them.

America needs to free itself of this very job slavery. People in other countries are not so bound to it as we are. There is a need for the return of the spirit of individual enterprise. We need more people who make and sell things that can not be handled in wholesale quantities by the great factories.

It is far better to sell hot peanuts, popcorn and "hot-dogs" and be independent than to be enslaved by some job and the fear of losing it. Many church members who were previously dependent upon employment for their support have gone into business for themselves and are making good even in these hard times. And when general economic conditions are improved, these people will find themselves far better off than before. We must regard this change toward economic independence as one of the positive gains of the depression.

Our people suffer from over-industrialization. It is inconceivable that the great factory should be the ultimate in our economic arrangement. The nation and the church, and the people as well, will be far more secure when business is carried on by many smaller units promoted by individual enterprise rather than by a few large units. Something must be done.

It is a question what to find to do. Ventures poorly planned without experience are in danger of failure. It is much easier to fill the requirements of an employee than of an independent manager. Careful study is required.

Yet we feel that, until stewardships can be effectively established, this is the only way out for a great many of our people. The accident of losing a job has often been the first step toward economic independence. One woman started making a superior kind of doughnuts, and she has been able to turn thousands of dollars in tithing to the bishop. Others have manufactured and sold many other kinds of commodities and succeeded. When our people are better able to help themselves, they will be better able to help the church.

We look to the New Year with hope for better things. Something is dependent on the constantly changing circumstances, but much more is dependent upon us. Let us go forward with faith, determined that 1933 shall be better.

L. L.

"O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life that shall endless be."

CHANGE IN QUARTERLY PRICES

Quarterly prices for small quantities have gone up. Those who do not know the new scale of prices should consult the list below, in order to save time and disappointment to themselves, and inconvenience to the Herald Office. This has been announced previously.

New Quarterly prices are: In quantities of one to three of one kind, 25 cents each; per year, 90 cents each. In quantities of four or more of one kind, 15 cents each; per year 50 cents each.

This change has been found necessary because some schools are ordering copies of Quarterlies for teachers only. The loss of business thus entailed makes it far more difficult to finance the Quarterly business, and the Herald Office must warn its customers that there is a limit to how far this practice can go, if the supply of Quarterlies is to be kept up. Schools that order for teachers only are playing parasite on other schools, and endangering the whole system.

Another practice that has caused difficulty is that some customers order for the yearly rate, and then change their order each quarter. This defeats the purpose of the yearly rate, and can not be allowed. Customers who change their orders in the middle of the year will lose the advantage of the yearly rate, and will be charged the quarterly rate.

For the New Year

Lord of all new life,
We pray thee for this new year,
That in it we may be renewed in thine own life,
And walk through it in thine own companionship.

We pray thee for new freedom of spirit
New zeal in thy service, new forgetfulness of ourselves
New power to forsake the lower path,
And to climb ever upward to the heights.

We pray thee for a new breaking down of barriers this year
Between man and man, race and race, nation and nation.
We pray thee for a new thinning of the obscurity
Which hides thee from the dim eyes of men.

O Father, in this new year
Lift us out of this stagnant morass of delusion,
Where we are choked in the muddy depths,
Content with an existence which is one long death.

Lift us out and away into the clear glory of thy presence
Where the darkness is cleansed from our eyes,
Our form is changed, and—whilst still dwelling in the flesh—
We meet thee, day by day, face to face, in Eternity.

—J. S. Hoyland.

A Christian is

A heart through which Christ loves;
A voice through which Christ speaks;
A hand through which Christ helps;

CURRENT EVENTS

They Want Beer—

By a vote of 230 to 165 the House of Representatives went on record as favoring permission to sell beer of 3.2 alcoholic percentage as being "non-intoxicating." It is expected by some that the Senate will reject the measure, and, failing that, President Hoover may veto it. Even if the bill could get that far, it would still have the Supreme Court to deal with, as long as the Eighteenth Amendment is still in force. The parade of the thirsty still has a long and rough path to follow. Those who dread the effect of liquor on traffic hazards are not sorry to see the evil day postponed.

An Amusing Spectacle—

Perhaps it is expecting too much to look for consistency in the tangle of European relationships. The same France that would have bled an impoverished Germany white to get reparations, moves to repudiate its justly contracted debts with the United States, although there is plenty of money to pay. It is pointed out that the biggest part of these debts are not war debts at all, but peace debts, for rehabilitation, trade, and industry.

Repudiation of debts, like the legalizing of beer in our own country, is much easier to talk about than to achieve. There are bristling obstacles in the way, one of which is the destructive effect on French credit. What the French parliament did in a moment of heat is soon recognized as a faux pas. France is now willing to "talk it over" once more.

The Gap Can't Be Bridged—

The long wait between the November election and the inauguration of March 4 was designed for the days of horseback and stagecoach travel. It is as incongruous with our present conditions as medieval armor and moated castles would be. The effect has been to leave the country without constructive government for the several months. President Hoover, willing to forget the nasty and untrue things said about him in the recent campaign, tried to bridge this gap, in view of our many pressing problems, by giving Roosevelt a hand in directing things. Roosevelt's cool replies to Hoover's generous overtures have intimated that each should stay on his own side of the March 4 deadline. In the face of what amounts almost to a snubbing, Hoover can do nothing but let time wear on while the settlement of the debt problems with Europe waits. Apparently our political parties are not big enough to cooperate, at least with some of their present leaders.

NEWS BRIEFS

The Good Wish of the Church

Practically every letter written by Herald correspondents, in the past three weeks, has brought either in the salutation or in the closing, the best wishes of the season. Because of many demands for Herald space, it has been impossible to print all these good wishes, and so they are here condensed into one big wish for you from all over the church—A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Quorums Gather for Joint Council Meeting

Members of the three quorums, First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and Quorum of Twelve, are gathering to Independence for the Joint Council meeting to be held January 3 and 4.

It is thought that all members of these quorums will be present for the meeting with the exception of the foreign appointees, Apostle John W. Rush-ton in Europe, and Apostle George G. Lewis, in Australia.

They Work Together at Long Beach

The following notes from their recent letter show that everyone is busy in the interests of the church at Long Beach, California. The letter appears on page 1366 of this issue:

"The women are taking the lead and doing much good both financially and in the promotion of fellowship. . . .

"The priesthood present a solid front. . . .

"Long Beach is justly proud of the young people's division. This fine group is finding opportunities for preparation and work that promise a well-qualified church for the future. . . . They have been a wonderful help to the pastor and priesthood."

Unique Experience for President F. M. McDowell

President F. M. McDowell, on his recent trip East and North, was scheduled to address the Saints of Central Michigan District in the church at Saginaw, December 8. Imagine his feelings, therefore, when he drove up at the curb, to find the church in flames. The fire department had preceded him. The fire, it was said, was caused by an overheated furnace. A late report from the correspondent of that place says that the church was "badly burned."

Visitors from a distance and many from Saginaw drove with Brother McDowell to Bay City, Michigan, where the district meeting was held.

Detroit Women Are Organized and at Work

This year the women's organization of the branch at Detroit, Michigan, has paid one thousand dollars into the mortgage fund, besides doing a great amount of welfare work.

The women are completely organized in eleven groups, each with a leader. And when economic conditions recently discouraged their raising funds, they launched a quilt contest to promote sociability. This contest closed and prizes were awarded the winners at a mass meeting of the women December 6. At that hour also the women listened to an address by President F. M. McDowell.

The G. G. Lewis Family in Australia

An enthusiastic crowd of Saints welcomed the arrival of Apostle George G. Lewis and family at Sydney, Australia, November 18. After the long journey and a two months' stay in Tahiti in the interests of the church, the travelers were very weary. Now, however, Brother Lewis is entering heartily into the work of his mission.

Musical Christmas for Stone Church

Carol singers did their bit to make a merry Christmas for the Stone Church congregation at Independence. Seventeen carols were sung by six different choruses at the morning program given by the children and young people of the church school on Christmas Day.

In the late afternoon (4.30 to 5.45) The Messiah was broadcast over KMBC from the Stone Church auditorium by a part of the Independence Messiah Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. The annual performance of this oratorio at this season is the choir's Christmas gift to the community.

Well-kept Church Speaks Well of Congregation's Religion

Waterloo, Iowa, Saints believe that a neat, well-kept church speaks well to the community of a people's faith and religion. Accordingly their little vine-covered church home at the corner of Parker and Columbia Streets, is always an attractive spot. People have stopped to inquire about the church from nonmember neighbors. In this little edifice a warm welcome awaits all traveling Saints.

The Moral Crisis of Today

By A. B. Phillips

A careful search of history fails to show that any of the fallen nations of the past were conscious of the fatal nature of those internal forces operating to produce their sad end. Doubtless there were some who foresaw the disaster that must follow if remedies could not be found and applied, but the efforts of such individuals were swallowed up and crushed under the greater forces of the vicious and reckless multitudes or the corrupt aims and methods of their leaders. The discerning student of today is able to point out some of the chief causes which contributed to their destruction, but to convince those of our own times of the similar dangers that threaten them is by no means an easy task.

It will doubtless be conceded that the value of history is to be realized mostly by what it teaches us. Our ability to learn from the experiences of those who lived before our day, is an important test of our own intelligence. This is well suggested in the old saying that, "Experience is a dear school, but fools will learn in no other way." We may congratulate ourselves in the supposition that our intelligence is superior to that of ancient nations whose errors and tragic end we deplore, but there is good reason to believe that such an idea would be unwarranted egotism on our part. Dare we apply the true measure of intelligence which the English historian, Froude, offers us? He states:

"That which especially distinguishes a high order of man from a low order of man—that which constitutes human goodness, human greatness, human nobleness—is surely not the degree of enlightenment with which men pursue their own advantage: but it is self-forgetfulness; it is self-sacrifice; it is the disregard of personal pleasure, personal indulgence, personal advantages remote or present, because some other line of conduct is more right."—Modern Eloquence, volume 5, page 457.

THE INTELLIGENCE TEST OF NATIONS

If we make this the intelligence test of the social body, which is also prescribed by no less an authority than Jesus himself, the ancient Babylonians at one time were our superiors by a considerable margin, and the old Maya nation of Mexico was far more advanced than either of us. In both of these ancient nations arts and sciences were well developed, and social fraternity and cooperation far exceeded that of our people today. More extended comparisons might be made. Eminent thinkers today admit that some of the great nations now lying in the forgotten valley of the dead reached some heights of scientific, literary, and social achievement that our boastful people have never attained.

Mechanical knowledge, wealth, and sordid aims have given our nation a false feeling of pride and security. The startling fact is that we are groping in a valley of spiritual depression far more dangerous to our future than the industrial depths of unemployment in which we temporarily find ourselves. The English anthropologist, Francis Galton, well notes that the caliber of our race is easily gauged by a glance at the contents of a railway bookstall. In making a scientific comparison of the English and other races, he states:

"The average ability of the Athenian race is, on the lowest possible estimate, very nearly two grades higher than our own—that is, about as much as our race is above that of the African Negro."—Library of Entertainment, volume 5, page 352.

However humiliating this statement may be to our self-esteem, let us remember that it is the result of a careful study by one of our eminent scientists. The ancient peoples of superior worth rose to their eminence because of their broad vision, social comprehension, and mental and physical vigor. They fell into the dark pit of national oblivion after vice and immorality had destroyed their foundations, blinded their eyes, and perverted their humanity. No nation of the past, however intelligent and strong, has long endured after morality and justice had yielded to vice and favoritism.

THE CHARACTER TEST OF LEADERSHIP

One of the most harmful of all influences in a nation develops when its leaders are men of low morals and selfish aims. The power of example is very great in such places of trust, and soon spreads like a malignant cancerous growth to the vital sources of the social body, causing its decay. The body can be saved only by removing the member which exerts this poisonous influence upon it. Most self-seeking men who clamor for public office betray themselves to those who observe closely. He who yields right principles to gain votes, will serve those he believes are necessary to his own aims; while he whose moral views are loose or weak, will join forces with others of no higher principles, and will cater to selfish groups of sufficient influence to make it seem expedient for him to do so.

Leaders of real integrity and ability will not seek advantage by misrepresentation, evasion, trickery, flattery, rant, insinuation, claptrap, or sophistry. The time-serving or bogus politician may resort to any or all of these crafty methods to gain his ends,

A Short Talk for Home Missionaries

"Repent and Be Baptized"

By Leonard Lea

Not long ago I saw a young couple with their little boy; and while the proud father looked on, the mother was telling the little fellow a story. As I sat observing I noticed how his wide brown eyes resembled his mother's, and how the strong cut of his chin resembled his father's; and everywhere in his physical make-up there were reminders of one or the other of his parents. I thought, "What an inheritance he has; what a man he ought to be!" And then it occurred to me that it was impossible for that tiny lad to understand how great was the love of his parents for him, impossible for him to understand how much care and suffering, worry and danger, they had undergone to bring him into the world. Probably he could never understand until years later, when he should, if fortune favored him, have another such little son of his own. No, he could not understand, for such understanding could only come with the passing of the years and the spreading reach of experience.

That little fellow's resemblance to his father and mother was more than superficial and physical. He was learning to shape his speech like theirs, his mind was something like theirs, and his soul was something like theirs.

In a cold and merciless world that little boy could not sustain himself for one day, so his parents provided him with sustenance. He could not protect himself, and they provided him with protection. He could not prepare himself for life, and they provided him with an education. It came to me at that moment that God himself could not be more important to that little boy than his parents were; and that if he ever should come to understand God at all, it would have to be in terms of his mother's graciousness and love, and his father's strength and care. And certainly, with parents such as his were, it was easy to see that the little boy could learn of them a great ideal of the heavenly Father—benevolent and wise, just, good, and powerful.

And while I was thinking of how little that boy understood of the love his parents had for him, what a great sacrifice they had made for him, it occurred to me that we who are grown likewise understand very little the measure of the love of God, very little of the sacrifice that Jesus, His Son, made for us. In the midst of the great universe we live all uncomprehending of the forces that surround us and of the rich meaning of it which passes our understanding.

"For God so loved the world," the Scriptures tell us, "that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The full meaning of this greater gift may not be clear to us now; but we may be sure that it is not a vain and empty thing, because from that love and that gift proceed many other blessings that are ours to enjoy and profit by. One of these great blessings will be apparent to us from the discussion that is to follow.

You will probably remember in that passage from the third chapter of Matthew, which tells of the baptism of Jesus by John, that Jesus also received the spiritual baptism at that time.

"And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting on him."—Matthew 3: 16.

This dual baptism was not for Jesus alone. By his example he indicated that it was for all men; and we find him at a later time telling Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of the water and of the spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) John the Baptist foretold the spiritual baptism when he declared to his disciples, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance, but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

Some would have us believe that baptism is only a symbol, an "outward sign of an inward grace," and some would have us to believe that it is not a necessary part of the Christian experience at all. It is not consonant with the spirit of the work of Christ that we should attempt to dictate the terms of our entry into the kingdom. Jesus found it a part of his work and ministry to obey the law, and it is not a seemly part of humble discipleship to hunt for reasons for not obeying that which is so patently a part of the gospel teaching. Since so many people are bent upon following their own wills in this matter, it is not to be wondered at that so many of them have not had the spiritual blessings and experiences which the gospel has promised to those who believe and obey.

This brings to mind Saint Paul's encounter with certain men who were disciples of John, but who had not heard of the work of Jesus.

"And it came to pass, that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus: and finding certain disciples,

"He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost."

A great part of the world at large, and even some of the religious world, have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. Truly, there is a revelation of knowledge awaiting such persons, if they anxiously seek the truth. But to continue the story:

Saint Paul proceeded to explain things to those disciples. And it is recorded that,

"When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied."—Acts 19: 1-6.

It is therefore quite apparent to all that everyone who sincerely repents of his sins, who exercises faith, and truly endeavors to comply with the requirements that the gospel places upon every believer, has a right to expect the gift of the Holy Ghost, and to enjoy divine communion of the spirit. If the professing Christian has not enjoyed that experience, he may know that something has prevented the fulfillment of the promise to him, something probably in his own life that stands in the way.

The promise of the spirit is to everyone. When Peter was preaching on the day of Pentecost, certain ones asked him, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter replied to them, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Acts 2: 37-39.) If the promise applied to the people of that early day, it also applies to us. It comes as near to being a universal promise as anything in the language could well be. Contrary to much common and popular opinion, God shows no historical favoritism in his promises. All men have ever had to do was to obey the provisions of the law, and God was ready, and is ready, to fulfill his promises.

There is no reason why the great experiences of the Pentecost could not be reproduced today. So many people sigh as they read these ancient passages and say, "If we could only have lived in those times." It is not the time that determines the state of our faith and our enjoyment of spiritual blessings—it is the condition of the heart. There is no reason, so far as the eternal purposes of God are concerned, why every generation could not have its Pentecost, and every man have some part in that marvelous experience.

I can go further in my statements. There are men and women living today, and no small number of them, who will testify positively to having experienced the fulfillment of the promises I have been reading to you. They will tell you that they have obeyed the law, and that God has sent his spirit to them according to his promise. It is not a dead God that we worship, but a living one. He is not alone the God of the past, he is the God of the present. The students of ancient parchments will read to you of the works of a God who lived and spoke to men in that time. But there are Christians who will testify to you today that God is. Jesus declared in answer to one of the questions of the Sadducees, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living."

If the Spirit of God can not come to us, it is without meaning so far as we are concerned. If we are only to read of promises of which we may never see the fulfillment, then we should just as well be heathens as Christians. If God amounts to nothing more than a few pages in the records of the history of a race, he does not exist at all for us, and the Christian message is of no significance to the modern world. Perhaps it is because so many ministers have taught a dead God embalmed in the past that they have lost their power over the hearts and lives of men. It may be because so many churches have put a dead God into their teachings that the Christian religion is losing its power to save men and to redeem them.

The world can not be reached by any but a living God. Men demand the presence of his Spirit, not a story of how his Spirit came to other men who are long dead and forgotten. This modern age is skeptical, it requires a religion of realities and power to convert it, not a religion of rituals and memories.

What the world needs today is to be able to testify of a certainty, as Job did, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." (Job 19: 25, 26.)

We live in an age that has not forsaken the living God, but the stale traditions of a dead God. Men have not forsaken a vital and living religion such as Saint Paul knew, but they have forsaken the cant and empty formalism, the husks of what was once a living religion, the smooth and meaningless phrases, the pretty catch words conjured up by men without a living faith.

Perhaps the people of our age are not altogether to be blamed that the churches are empty; men will not worship at an altar when the fires are all reduced to ashes and cold.

Campus Life

A talk delivered at the Stone Church on College Day, October 30, 1932.

By Olive E. Curtis

"Graceland Blues,
How I hate to leave this place;
No more Campus frolics,
No more College days.
Got to get a job
Where I can earn my bread and shoes,
Is it any wonder that I've got those Graceland Blues?"

THERE is something to that little ditty that just grips the hearts of old Gracelanders. Tonight as the words were recited I couldn't help thinking about the many Gracelanders all over the land who are singing "Graceland Blues" in their hearts. I know that they, too, are just a little lonely, as I am—lonely for the old winding path that leads to the hilliest home of Graceland, longing to join once again the happy throng of Graceland students.

It was my privilege to attend Graceland College for one year. I sincerely regret that it was not more, because I shall always regard that one year spent at Graceland as one of the most wonderful years of my life. No matter what comes or goes, no matter what future life holds for me, memories of that year at Graceland will never become extinct, and will always be a great influence in my life.

Tonight I want to share with you some of those fond memories of happy days spent on the hill. I want to tell you about some of the common, ordinary things that we do at Graceland every day. I want you, even though you may be ninety, to wish along with me that you were going back to Graceland next fall.

There are some things at Graceland that it takes a student a long time to find out about, and then there are other things that a student finds out about in a hurry. One of the things I found out in a hurry was that Graceland is the home of the thirty-six-hour day and the eight-day week. I arrived at Graceland at four o'clock on one afternoon. At four-thirty o'clock that same afternoon N. Ray Carmichael asked me if I would like to go to work. Five o'clock of that self-same afternoon found me dishing out salads fast and furiously. By continuing to dish out salads and also to serve meat, potatoes, and gravy, and by sleeping more or less I succeeded in filling the twenty-four-hour day to overflowing. Soon after there were some more duties added to my list. I began going to classes and lamenting because the lights went out so early. Some people will tell you that Lamoni, Graceland's home, is just another place where the sidewalks are taken in at precisely eight o'clock each night. They may say what they like, but they will have to admit that Graceland is the first place in which they have had no time to loaf. The hours that had once been mine to use as I pleased became a part of a new system—the Graceland system. Graceland's decree is a fully rounded day and the long week.

The Graceland campus is a land of songs. Everyone sings. It certainly is a good habit, too. Singing spreads so much good cheer. It seems to me that if I were to express the real spirit of Graceland, I would do it in song, because Graceland has a song for every occasion.

This Graceland habit of singing seems to stick, too, because long years after one has passed out of Graceland life, he still sings the same old college songs with the same old vigor and enthusiasm.

One Gracelander tells this story about his little brother: "While I was home this summer my brother said to me, 'Sing that song about hit 'em in the eye, and sock 'em in the head.' At first I wondered what he meant, but I soon recognized it as part of 'Graceland's Spirit Never Dead,' a football song. After we had sung it with great gusto and hilarity he ran off to play."

Graceland's spirits are never dead. They're always full of pep and life, boosting at all the games. Whether it be football or a heavy semester exam Graceland students will be right there with a big smile and a song on their lips.

"Opening of the Gowns" is always a very auspicious occasion to the A Cappella Chorus. On this occasion the box in which the choir gowns have been kept for the summer is opened and its contents carefully sorted out from among the mothballs. The odor which fills the chapel as the lid is raised is always a test determining whether or not the last year's caretaker has done his work well. Always when the box is opened it is found that the gowns have been carefully folded and packed in between hundreds of mothballs.

The student body is proud to call the Yellow Jackets, or the football fellows, sons of Graceland. Always they go into the games to win, and they go in to win by clean sportsmanship.

Every year they crack heads, crack bones, and buck all kinds of teams. They play on dry fields and in muddy fields. They play night games and day games, and they carry the Graceland spirit to other fields.

Every year they win and they lose, knowing well both how to be good winners and how to take a beating. But they always win more than they lose, because they play the game. Even though the game may not always be football, we who are on the side-lines will always cheer with the old gold and blue, for we want them to play the game.

Graceland's roll call is a truly extraordinary list of young people. From North and South, East and West, the young men and women of the church are gathered. Graceland is one big friendship circle where young people of nations all over the globe join hands in friendly clasp. There we find almost every State in the Union represented, not to mention foreign countries. There are big, broad-shouldered Californians, tall, lanky Missourians, and corn-fed Iowans, young men and women from historic old Plymouth and Boston, lumbermen from Canada, and bushwackers from Australia. These and still others from all parts of the world find the friendly, social atmosphere of dear old Graceland desirable.

At Graceland College every person is a friend, and as a result everybody has lots of friends. When I went to Graceland there was nothing that so warmed my heart as to see friendships spring up between students from different countries. I used to like to watch Pete Duyzer from Holland prepare supper and bake rolls for breakfast in the commissary. I used to wonder about the land from which Pete came and if it was very different from America. I used to watch Pataha Samuella from the South Sea Islands, play football on the Graceland eleven, and wondered what he thought of playing side by side with what seemed to be aliens rather than with native friends. Pataha, dark, with black, kinky hair, thought that Pete Duyzer with his light hair and blue eyes was just the thing, even if Pete did forget to salt the rolls every now and then.

It may sometimes seem to be a mystery to some how a South Sea Islander can become a true friend of a Dutchman, but it is not a mystery to Gracelanders, for once you have gone to Graceland and have lived and strived toward the same goals, and loved the same ideals, then it is that you cease to be American, Dutch, or English. You become a new nation, the Gracelanders. There is a bond there that can not be broken. That's why the saying, "Once a Gracelander, always a Gracelander," is true.

Then after nine months at Graceland comes the close of another school year. Happy is the student who has realized his ambitions. Proud is the student who has left a good record behind him, and proud is Graceland College to call that kind of a student a son of Graceland.

Now is the time when Graceland students begin to sense fully just what Graceland College means. Graceland holds before its students the highest ideals of the church—the highest ideals of all mankind. While in Graceland the students struggle to reach this high standard of living. As a result of this attempt the life at Graceland College is more ideal perhaps than most of the students have ever experienced before. Now when the call comes that Graceland days are over, the sudden realization comes that the program of the world is not Graceland's program. We realize more intensely than ever before that Graceland's ideals are not the ideals of the world. It is not so hard to live and grow at Graceland, but out in the world things are different. All living is topsy-turvy and out of this chaos we must pick that living that is most ideal. It is a challenge to every Graceland student.

The last thing I remember about Graceland College is the prayer meeting. The last prayer meeting of the season is usually held outside on the campus, but, if the weather is unsuitable, it is held in the reception room of Walker Hall. I can vividly remember my last prayer meeting on the hill.

The young men and women were all gathered in the reception room. Every chair and divan was used. For the last time the students were in a group. For the last time each student looked into the eyes of the next student and wondered what life held for him. There was a quiet hush over the group as we sat there thinking about leaving Graceland. Oh, it's hard to leave the old school! I thought my heart would break as I sat there on that last Wednesday night wondering if this would really be my last Wednesday night, or if I would get to come back the next year.

Then slowly, one by one, the students rose to their feet for the last time in that room and told with voices choked with emotion what Graceland meant to them and what they intended to do to honor their alma mater, Graceland College. The tears just would come. Lumps rose in many a throat, making it impossible to speak. After a last song and benediction the meeting was over and I fled to my room. There I found one of my Graceland friends. Somehow we always understood each other, and we began to talk about the thing nearest our hearts—leaving Graceland.

I began: "Margery, you know, how at the first of the year, we never could understand what it was all about when two old Graceland girls met here after a long separation and shrieked and laughed

The Awakening

By Mabel A. Sanford

MARY listened with fast beating heart to the discussion between two of her schoolmates on the subject of prayer. Not for worlds would she have them know that she had never been taught to pray.

The three little girls, homeward bound, were wending their way down an old English lane. As they neared Mary's home, her footsteps quickened in an effort to escape before being forced to admit that she had never offered a prayer in her life.

Left fatherless at an early age, the only home Mary had known was that of her grandparents. She made her way now to the living room, where grandfather sat reading the news of the day aloud to grandmother and Aunt Helen who were comfortably seated by the fireplace, their knitting needles flashing in and out.

Mary, with flushed face and troubled brow, stood in the doorway and looked from one to the other. Grandmother raised her eyes and greeted her with a smile.

"Come in, dearie," she called.

Mary walked to the center of the room and paused.

"Are we heathens or infidels?" she demanded.

"Mary," cried grandmother, in a shocked voice, "What are you talking about?"

"Fanny and Louise said heathens and infidels never pray. Are we heathens or infidels?"

Grandfather's paper fluttered to the floor, Aunt Helen looked her astonishment while grandmother's face flushed angrily.

"Fanny and Louise better be careful what they're saying," she declared.

"But we never pray!" asserted Mary.

There was a dead silence. Grandfather and the two women looked from one to the other, then grandfather beckoned to Mary.

"Come here, child," he said gently and gathered her into his arms.

"When I was a little boy, I always said my prayers at my mother's knee. When mother died, father told me I needn't pray any longer. He was angry with the Lord, I guess, for taking mother from us and was never reconciled. When I grew older and went out to learn my trade, the man I worked with warned me to look out for the men that offered long prayers and sure enough, they were the first to cheat me out of my wages. Father taught me to be honest—said if I had money in my pocket and owed anyone anything, that money wasn't mine. I learned to my sorrow that people used religion as a cloak to hide their sins, so I was determined to have none of it. If I am a heathen or an infidel, better that than a hypocrite."

"But grandfather, Fanny, and Louise say their prayers every night," persisted Mary.

"Father," ventured his daughter, Helen, "she musn't seem different. Let me teach her the Lord's prayer."

Grandfather sighed deeply.

"Very well," he assented.

It was a happy little girl that knelt that night by her Aunt Helen's knee and repeated the Lord's prayer. As the elderly couple, seated near, listened to the familiar words, their hearts were strangely stirred.

"Perhaps we have been wrong," said grandmother in a troubled voice, when Mary had been tucked away in her little bed. "We needn't have discarded religion because others chose to dishonor it. We do not want to be classed with the heathen so we must be infidels if we do not believe in prayer."

"I've never thought much about it," admitted grandpa.

He was to think more about it during the days that followed. It was a time of religious awakening in the home and ere long Mary demanded that a blessing be asked upon the food as was done in the home of Fanny and Louise. Then the family altar was established and one beautiful Sunday morning, a sedate little maiden, prayer book in hand, walked beside her beloved aunt to the Episcopal church some distance away.

The memory of that day was to go with her down the years of time.

THE GREAT bell on the old church tower tolled solemnly and Mary thrilled to the tips of her little toes at the sound. A handsome young man in hunting costume, his dog by his side, stood leaning upon his gun, watching the old belfry as it rocked precariously to and fro with the swing of the great bell. He was the squire's son, said to be sowing his wild oats—a familiar figure to the church goers as he always loitered about during the ringing of the bell, declaring that some day the old tower would come toppling to the ground and he wanted to be there to see the fun.

Mary had heard it whispered that he had once tried to keep company with her Aunt Helen, but her grandfather had forbidden him the house. She wondered if Aunt Helen still cared. Her face was very pink as she walked with downcast eyes. The squire's son raised his hat gravely as they passed and when Mary ventured a look back, she saw him standing, hat in hand, watching her aunt with such a look of adoration in his eyes that her heart went out to him in sympathy.

She forgot him, however, when they turned in at the old churchyard. The church stood well back and was surrounded with the graves of the dead. Many of the head stones were very old and lay flat upon the ground, side by side, clear up to the door of the church, like a paving. A little shiver ran up Mary's spine as she went tiptoeing over the stones inscribed with the names of those lying beneath.

The deacon, in long black robe, met them at the door and led the way down the silent aisle, opened the door of a pew, ushered them in and closed it silently. Mary knelt with her aunt on the little footstool and repeated the prayer her aunt had carefully taught her: "Lord, we are now in thy house; assist I pray thee and accept of our services. Let thy Holy Spirit help our infirmities, disposing our hearts to seriousness, attention and devotion to the honor of thy Holy name and the benefit of our souls. Amen."

She arose and looked about her. There were beautiful, stained glass windows. Her eyes rested upon the one above the altar. It pictured the Christ, hanging in agony upon the cross. She shrank from the sight and thereafter never allowed her eyes to rest upon it again, but kept them upon the more pleasing scene of Christ blessing the little children.

The minister, arrayed in a long black robe, entered and began solemnly to read the prayers while between pauses the congregation murmured, "Lord have mercy upon us, miserable sinners."

It seemed very strange. Was she a miserable sinner, she wondered. She glanced up at her aunt, looking so sweet and lovely. Was she, too, a sinner?

The minister changed to another pulpit and began to read the ten commandments. After each one the people responded, "Lord have mercy upon us and incline our hearts to keep thy law."

It was Lent so all had been required to memorize the fifty-first Psalm. As Mary listened, a feeling of resentment entered her heart. She had never committed the sins enumerated—why should she ask forgiveness for them?

The sermon that followed was long and tiresome. Mary was glad when it was over and they again went tiptoeing across the grave stones, out into the bright, warm sunshine, leaving the dim old church behind them.

Aunt Helen glanced swiftly about. The handsome young hunter was nowhere in sight. A look of disappointment swept across her face and suddenly Mary remembered a remark made by old Betty Heckles one day when she came to help with the cleaning.

"It's a pity that darling Helen of yours has given her heart to that young scapegrace. Tom Harper would make her happy if only she would let him."

Grandmother had been very indignant and had declared that Helen had given her heart to no one, but old Betty Heckles was right, thought Mary.

Tom Harper was a nice fellow. He brought Aunt Helen the most wonderful boxes of candy and beautiful flowers, though Aunt Helen was never as thrilled over them as she was.

Although the church services were a disappointment to Mary, the tolling of the bell, the solemnity of the old church and the crumbling headstones were not without their thrill, so she and her Aunt Helen continued regular attendants.

There came a day, however, when the old bell ceased to toll, for the squire's son was shot and killed by his own gun when his dog leaped up, striking the trigger, as the young man stood leaning upon it in the old familiar attitude.

THE YEARS passed swiftly. Grandfather and grandmother were laid to rest in the old churchyard. Aunt Helen had long been the happy and contented wife of Tom Harper when Mary met and married a young man about to sail for the new land of America.

Days of happiness and days of sorrow were intermingled. Mary attended churches of various denominations in the new land, but none brought the peace of mind that she so much desired. All worship seemed but a dead form and the worshipers for the most part, careless and indifferent, with never a word of welcome to the stranger who had come to worship with them.

Three children brought joy to her heart and then more than ever she sensed the need of a closer communion with God that she might train them aright, but so far as her religious life was concerned, she seemed to be drifting in a little boat upon a vast ocean.

She prayed earnestly for guidance and one day her next door neighbor, who had but recently moved to the neighborhood, came to call. She brought with her a message so uplifting that Mary felt carried away to heights she had never dreamed.

Her new friend invited Mary to go with her the following Sunday to her church services. How strange it seemed to be going to church in a dance hall, for such it proved to be. A covering of green denim was stretched tightly over the highly polished floor which accommodated the dancers during the week. The little group that had gathered seemed lost in the wide space of the room.

The minister wore a business suit. He was very earnest and seemed filled with the spirit of his message. As Mary listened, a peace such as she had never known, filled her soul.

At the close of the service, the minister came forward with words of greeting and a hearty handclasp. Others followed and Mary was led to marvel at their sincerity. They were interested in her—a stranger—and desirous that she should become a partaker of the inward joy that permeated their faces.

There followed a period of study, earnest prayers for guidance, and then came a deep assurance that all was well.

One memorable day, she and her three children entered the waters of baptism. Although her companion was present and sanctioned the step his family was taking, it was nine long years before he was ready to lay aside the things that he deemed necessary for his happiness. Mary never ceased to pray and it was a happy day when her prayers were answered and the family circle was completed.

Years passed. Mary had received the promise that she should live to behold the fruit of her labors. This promise was fulfilled when she beheld her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren taking their places among the faithful and dependable ones, that were always ready and willing to carry the burden of the work she loved so well.

As she sits dreaming of days long ago, she sees again, three little girls, wending their way down an old English lane and thrills to the awakening in the heart of the little girl who had never learned to pray.

conceal his ignorance or inability, or to cover his selfish intentions. But you will not find these specious subterfuges among the appliances of great statesmen, jurists, or executives, though the great of every age are quite liable to fall into errors of littleness at times. The chief obstacle to progress in government is, after all, the manner in which we pervert our own powers. A profound truth was expressed by Phillips Brooks when he said:

"The trouble is not what we hold to be mistaken ideas with regard to policies of government, but it is the absence of lofty and unselfish character."—World's Best Literature, volume 4, page 2421.

THE POLITICAL MERRY-GO-ROUND

It is useless for us to complain of corruptions in political affairs, while we seek to influence office-seekers to work for our own selfish purposes. He who can be persuaded to serve the selfish interests of one group will transfer his service to another group whose interests are opposed to it, if he thinks his own interests will thus be served. It is true that many honorable men support those for office who are believed to be sincerely seeking the public good, but the balance of voting power in many instances is held by those with vicious or selfish motives. So long as the pernicious influence of many such cross currents remains unchecked, we shall suffer betrayal of the public good.

When self-seeking politicians are elected to office, they usually oppose capable and unselfish leaders with whom they can not bargain for personal advantage, thus perverting to a great extent the good these leaders would otherwise be able to accomplish. In too many cases the great mass of the people, many of whom form their opinions from superficial sources, make the deplorable mistake of blaming the innocent and re-electing to office the guilty ones who caused the trouble. Thus encouraged, these unworthy officials increase their corrupt activities, causing misery, disruption, and perhaps revolution among the people.

Material things alone have never yet caused the splendor or happiness of a single nation. The greatness of a people can not be measured by such insecure and temporary things, and if they are permitted to rule the ambitions of men in our own nation, we must suffer the same disastrous results that have always followed in the ages of the past. The most enduring governments of the world have been those with the greatest spiritual possessions. Temporal things alone may prove our destruction. The incomparable philosopher, Emerson, says:

"Many facts concur to show that we must look deeper for our salvation than to steam, photographs, balloons, or astronomy. These tools have some questionable properties. They are re-agents. Machinery is aggressive. The weaver becomes a web, the machinist a machine. If you do not use the tools, they use you."—Works and Days.

POLITICAL USE OF MOB. PSYCHOLOGY

Another grave danger which threatens us is the adroit and vicious use now being made of the lower passions of men by selfish interests and organized forces of vice, supported in many instances by subtle politicians. Enough designing criminals were mixed with the bonus army at Washington to incite the ex-service men to acts of defiant lawlessness, though most of them would probably have opposed such acts if their passions had not been perverted by social vipers and treacherous politicians seeking to arouse resentment against executives of our government. The farmers and their organizers, who unlawfully stopped traffic, threatened lives, and destroyed property, were manipulated for similar detestable ends, encouraged by crafty politicians and law-breakers.

By such means many people are incited to acts of violence and dishonor which in saner moments they would have censured if committed by others. They are the misused tools of evil plotters who despise the cats-paws they so easily

Is the forgiveness of sins promised the sick through anointing and prayer?

A statement concerning this matter is to be found in the epistle of James. As most versions differ from the King James text of this verse, I will quote the Emphatic Diaglott, which is substantially supported by The Weymouth, Twentieth Century, Moffatt, Revised, and other modern versions, on one or two minor points. All, however, appear to agree as to the forgiveness of sins. Most of them indicate that the prayer is to follow the anointing, and they connect the following verse as a part of the subject of healing. The statement is as follows:

"If any one among you is sick, let him call for the elders of the congregation, and let them pray over him, having anointed him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick person, and the Lord will raise him up, and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. Confess therefore your sins to each other, and pray for each other, so that you may be healed.—James 5: 14-16.

It does not appear from this statement that forgiveness of sins is dependent upon the anointing. Rather it is implied that the "prayer of faith" and confession of sins are required. Evidently this passage should not be understood to disregard the requirements of scripture elsewhere, and therefore it follows that the confession of sins must be accompanied with repentance; for Jesus said: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Administration of the anointing is not commanded for the purpose of obtaining forgiveness of sins, but for the healing of the sick. But it seems clear that in order to approach God in faith, one should repent of his sins, and thus place himself in the proper condition to receive such blessing as God sees fit to bestow. Healing would then be accompanied by forgiveness.

Are the priesthood the only ones in the church that can commit the unpardonable sin?

What is termed the unpardonable sin is sometimes called "the sin against the Holy Ghost," and is referred to in the Inspired Version as follows:

"All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men who receive me and repent; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him; neither in this world; neither in the world to come."—Matthew 12: 26, 27.

A similar statement is also found in Mark (3: 24), and it is stated that Jesus said this because the scribes said, "He hath an unclean spirit." This seems to imply that the scribes, though not his followers, were perilously near to the unpardonable sin. Various other statements (see Hebrews 6: 4-6; 10: 26, 27; 2 Peter 2: 20, 21) would indicate that any person who had obtained the Holy Spirit might commit the unpardonable sin, the question of priesthood not being the determining factor. Alma records this explanation:

"Know ye not, my son, that these things [leaving the ministry for a harlot] are an abomination in the sight of the Lord; yea, most abominable above all sins, save it be the shedding of innocent blood, or denying the Holy Ghost? For behold, if ye deny the Holy Ghost when it once has had place in you, and ye know that ye deny it; behold, this is a sin which is unpardonable."—Book of Mormon 445: 7, 8.

The Doctrine and Covenants states that they are the sons of perdition:

"Concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame."—76: 4.

Does "hot drinks" include hot water, as referred to in Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1?

Some think it refers specifically to tea and coffee, and give certain reasons why they believe this. Others think it includes all drinks properly denominated "hot drinks," as distinguished from "strong drinks," which are also condemned in the same paragraph. The words used evidently make a distinction between strong and hot drinks. Alcoholic liquor is commonly called strong drink when it possesses a considerable proportion of alcohol, but wine appears not to be included under this term, as it is mentioned separately in the same sentence. When the revelation was given, both strong drinks and hot drinks were commonly used, various combinations of material being combined for the purpose. Some of the world's greatest medical authorities condemn any kind of hot drink as being harmful to the stomach, including hot water.

Prayer and Testimony

The Measure of True Sainthood

By Hubert Case

Forty years of my life have been spent in the active service of the church of the living God. I love all the Saints and believe they love me for the work's sake. The real life is the life of a Saint of God, and the only real sainthood is measured in terms of Jesus' own saying: "If ye love me, keep my commandments."

The call of the voice of the Good Shepherd today is for us to do our duty, great or small, and this will move the cause of Zion forward. It is the only thing that can move it. Do we need to pray? Then as Brother Joseph Luff said, "To your knees, oh, Israel." As a church we need to go down on our knees, pray, and do the needed work to make those prayers come true. Some branches are doing their duty as every branch should do. Some of our faithful members are doing their duty as all the members should be doing.

Apostle D. T. Williams and family visited us a few weeks ago. The Saints were glad to see them. Brother F. M. McDowell also visited us early in December, one day in the district. We are sorry it was not more.

Sunday night, November 27, the Saints of Saginaw dramatized the life of Joseph Smith, second Prophet of latter days. The house was crowded and all appreciated the performance. We feel they became better acquainted with our leader as all should be. While in Detroit it was my pleasure to oversee the dramatizing of the historical sketches which were written by Brother Elbert A. Smith. They did much good in getting our people acquainted with events and persons of worth in the early history of the church.

Some have inquired about the accident in which I was injured about three weeks ago. This accident inflicted several wounds but no bones were broken except for Sister Taylor. I am again at work. I would give a warning to youthful speed fiends: Be more careful lest you kill some one.

The Still Small Voice

By Walter H. Kuhn

In my early years in the church I well remember one time when my very life was saved when I responded to the "Still Small Voice." Several years later this same voice spoke again . . . this time I was to know of something that was soon to come about. I was so sure of the message that I actually waited for it to take place, and it came just as I anticipated. Weeks passed and again the voice came to me, but this time I failed to heed the instruction and as a result a great loss came to me. Years later further instruction was given to me and in a way perhaps more emphatic than ever before, but again I failed to take the council. Had I taken the lesson, all the years of my life would have been different as a result. Certainly I believe that the "Still Small Voice" often speaks to us. The difficulty lies in the fact that too often we do not live near enough to the Master to be able to interpret the message to our advantage. On the other hand, when we do live near to the master we are able to understand these promptings as they come to us. Sad is the condition when we fail to observe the instruction. If we continue to live as Jesus taught that we should live I don't believe that he will let us go very far astray without giving us a warning to be careful. As the most critical moments in life arrive, he will instruct us in the way we should go. Let us so live that when we are in need of special blessings that we can call upon God and know that he will answer, and that in the critical moments in life that we may be directed to safety and that continuously his Spirit may strive with us. Let us trust that when this "Still Small Voice" speaks to us that we may be in possession of enough of his Spirit that we will be able to heed the instruction. Let us not conduct ourselves in such a way that after the fulfillment of the message has come that we will be forced to say to ourselves, "Yes, the voice spoke to me, but not loud enough for me to hear." May we so live that we may be able to detect the faintest whisper and turn it into usefulness wherein can come happiness to ourselves and all others involved. I believe that prayer is one of the avenues through which this may be accomplished. I hope that this important lesson to me may be of some help to some one else.

Convincing Reasons That This Is True Church

By Mrs. James McPhee

As I was told in my patriarchal blessing to rejoice for I was a member of the true church of the living God, I thought I would write of some blessings I have received from Him who cares for us all.

A year ago last September I fell, hurting myself inwardly by opening up old wounds. The doctor wanted to rush me to the hospital for an operation, but I put him off by saying that I would have to send word to my husband first. He consented to wait, but advised me not to delay as I was in a critical condition and cancer was likely to set in. I was not frightened for I knew that there was One whose healing power is above our finite understanding. I was then with my mother who is a Catholic. I wrote to the Saints of Sault Sainte Marie Branch, asking them to remember me in their prayers. This they did. At once I began to get better, and when I got well enough to go up to meet with them, I did, as we are told in James 5: 14. And though I had not had any sleep for nearly a month I went to bed that night, after the administration, and slept soundly. When I awakened in the morning my pain was all gone and I have never since been bothered with it.

About a year ago my little daughter, then nine years old, was taken sick with infantile paralysis. The doctor had some difficulty in getting in touch with a specialist, and in the meantime made several trips to see his little patient who was suffering greatly. While he was out trying to get in touch with the other doctor I called in Elders H. A. Dayton and G. A. Edwards. Again the power of God was manifested. The disease was rebuked. Elder Dayton said after the administration that when the doctors came, they would find nothing. This was just what happened. When the doctors arrived to inject the serum, they again examined her and could find nothing. "You can see by her eyes," said the specialist, "that she has been very bad, but there is nothing now."

The child is now strong and healthy and suffers no ill effects of the disease.

When we receive such great blessings, have we not reason to rejoice that we belong to the true church of the living God? I feel that I can not thank the heavenly Father enough for all his blessings to me, for I have had many, and am promised many more. I ask the readers of the Herald

An Opportunity for Service

By E. J. Hayden

In some ways the following clipping from the Bangor Advance for November 24, will be self-explanatory, but I feel that some of the isolated Saints will be encouraged to press on in the work if I tell that which led up to the opportunity indicated in this press story. First, however, is the clipping:

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Harold J. Hamilton, Pastor

The Church at study at 10:00—Bible School. Wm. Loveland, Supt.

The Church at worship at 11:00—the Lord's Supper and sermon.

The Church in Training at 6:00—Christian Endeavor meeting.

The Church in Soul Winning at 7:00—Popular evening service. Preceding the sermon, Mr. Hamilton will answer the questions sent to him during the week. Mr. Hamilton's sermon theme will be: "The Man Who Refused a Cheap Religion."

The fourth of our "Get Acquainted meetings" will be held at 8 o'clock; Rev. Ezra Hayden will be the speaker. His theme will be: "Why I Am Identified With the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Mr. Hayden will tell why his denomination uses the Book of Mormon, and will explain the difference between the Mormon Church of Utah and the Reorganized Church. Mr. Hayden will also answer the question often asked, viz.: "Does the Book of Mormon Teach Polygamy?" At the close of his address, Mr. Hayden will answer questions asked by the audience regarding the teachings of his church.

I have been isolated for about six years, of which time, I have lived in Bangor four and a half years, and have attended the Christian Church, where I have taught in the Sunday School, and occasionally supplied the pulpit.

I have not hesitated to let it be known to what church I belonged, but have not forced our own doctrines upon those with whom I have had to do. Yet I have always been "ready to give an answer to any that should ask," or that seemed willing to hear of our position.

When I first came to Bangor, the air seemed to be fairly vibrant with prejudice; and the pastor of the church, on one occasion, made a very unwarranted attack upon Joseph Smith: to which I did not at that time reply publicly. But knowing that it would be almost out of the question to try to get a hearing, I went to him, in his own home, and explained the facts in the case: with the result that he did not again attack us in public. Though he did tell the members of the church that I was not what I pretended to be. He said that I pretended to be a Mormon elder. But that he had written to Salt Lake City, and that they knew nothing about me.

I was very thankful for this bit of information, coming from the source that it did. For it proved just what I was telling people, that I had no connection with the Mormon Church.

Then, with a change of pastors, Rev. Harold J. Hamilton, (whom some of the Saints in the eastern part of the state will remember, as pastor of the Christian Church in Algonac, Michigan), came to Bangor. And I found in him a man who is fair, and open-minded, and who knew something of our faith.

While Reverend Hamilton has not told me this, in just so many words, I believe that the "Get Acquainted Meetings" mentioned in the clipping were prompted very largely, by the unfair attacks which some of his members were continually making upon our position.

The first three of these meetings were given over to the Seventh Day Adventists, Christian Scientists, and Baptists, in order. And there are still two to follow, in which the pastors of the Methodist, and the Congregational Churches will speak.

Of course there was the usual amount of fear about hearing our position. And many of the members of the Christian Church remained away, or left just before I took the stand. But I felt very much encouraged, and gratified to see a good attendance from those outside of the local church. And one member of the Utah Church, who was present, came to me at the close of the service, and told me that he felt that I had been quite fair with his organization.

Two of the young ladies of the church sang "Tenderly Lead Thou Me On," while Mrs. Hamilton, the pastor's wife, presided at the piano.

The invitation to ask questions was well accepted. And I feel that much has been done in the way of a better understanding, and a breaking down of the prejudice which has so far stood in the way of anything definite being done in Bangor.

Give Credit and Support to Present Leaders

By George A. Cunningham

I wish to add my testimony to the nice ones I have been reading in the last Herald. I subscribed for the Herald November 6, 1932, and we have received the second one. We are looking forward to Friday of each week to get it.

We are forty-five miles from Denver, the nearest branch, and attend services there at every opportunity offered. Brother Glaude A. Smith is the pastor and a fine one, too. He has a good interest aroused in Denver, and everyone seems to like him.

I enjoyed Brother Gomer T. Griffiths' writing on memories of the late President Joseph Smith. It gives us more courage to press on when we read the testimonies of men who have given their all to the church; but I am not one who thinks we should wait until workers pass on to give them credit and honor for the things they have done. We have good men leading the church today. Let us uphold them in our prayers, and give them our complete cooperation in bringing about God's righteous purposes among the children of men. Please pray for me.

manipulate. But men of strong principles and integrity invariably denounce such flagrant violations of rectitude, and therefore mobs are not composed of upright and superior men, or led by them. It is generally criminal and vicious elements that dominate unreasoning mobs.

The same underlying methods used to arouse mob action are also applied to classes of individuals in order to secure general response. Politicians with selfish or vicious aims often use subtle forms of misrepresentation and jugglery, supplemented by flattery and false promises, to gain support. The freedom and progress of the nation are being jeopardized by these unstable and disruptive forces, for when vice reigns the government becomes an agency of oppression and servitude. The German writer, Heine, notes this danger when he remarks:

"The Englishman loves liberty like his lawful wife, the Frenchman loves her like his mistress, the German loves her like his old grandmother. . . . And yet, after all, no one can ever tell how things may turn out. The grumpy Englishman, in an ill-temper with his wife, is capable of some day putting a rope round her neck, and taking her to be sold at Smithfield."—Library of Entertainment, volume 1, page 182.

READING THE DANGER SIGNALS

There is a very real danger that American citizens may yet sell their birthright for a mess of pottage. The various groups which have been incited to coercion and lawlessness in recent years have often manifested to an alarming extent an utter disregard for the nation and the rights of the people. Unity and cooperation often exists only so far as selfish interests exist. Men who with little or no provocation unite with criminal or disruptive forces, whatever may be their object, are dangerous and disintegrating factors. In the past, such combinations have caused the downfall of governments, and they require the prompt application of effective remedies.

It would be inexcusable not to be alarmed at the menace of crime waves which are sweeping over our shores and over our very thresholds, for with our present knowledge of them it is not easy to subdue all of the criminal and disruptive forces within so great a nation. If not restrained, these virulent scourges of civilization will in the course of time complete the moral and material destruction of the social body, for ages of experience show that indifference to crime, injustice, and immorality, results in revolutions and civil wars.

Some of the serious dangers confronting us are pointed out by the subcommittee of the National Crime Commission. In its report of March 1928 it was charged:

"1. That crime was a safe business. 2. That few arrests were being made in proportion to the crimes committed. 3. That the police were woefully inefficient, and important factor being the lack of intelligence in the supervisory branches. 4. That the sheriff's office was an anachronism. 5. That politics influence the police. 6. That prosecuting attorney's have too great power and not enough responsibility to their public."—International Year Book, 1928, page 196.

PRESENT ASPECTS OF CRIME

Some of the aspects of our moral and material state are strikingly similar to those which marked the decline and final overthrow of important nations of past ages. The breaking down of moral rectitude is being manifested in many places and in divers ways, including murder, robbery, smuggling, perjury, fraud, forgery, and unnumbered forms of immorality. However, in this connection it is but fair to state that while many of these crimes show an appalling increase in recent years, those crimes directly resulting from alcoholic liquors have shown a marked decrease since the prohibition law was enacted. The false claim of the Wets that crime is mostly due to prohibition is disproved by the fact that, of 127,940 convicts in federal and state prisons in 1930, only 5½ per cent were prohibition violators.

A significant form of the increasing demoralization in the social body is found in our marriage problem. Since 1890 divorces have increased from 33,461, in that year, to 201,475 in 1929. This deplorable condition may be traced to four fundamental causes: 1. The increase of selfishness. 2. Disregard for law. 3. Lack of natural affection. 4. Licentiousness. An alarming factor of our moral crisis is the fearful showing of insanity, which is largely traceable to immoral sources. Since 1880 inmates of asylums and hospitals for mental disease have increased over 800 per cent. They would make a city about twice the size of Des Moines, Iowa, Grand Rapids, Michigan, or Hartford, Connecticut.

The devastating tide of corruption is sweeping away moral, social, economic, and political moorings, and has brought much physical suffering. Taxes more than doubled soon after the World War, and political corruption greatly increased the people's burdens through the cost of graft, patronage, and crime protection. Excessive taxation is estimated to have taken real and personal property from almost a million citizens, and revolutionary seeds are growing fast in hearts embittered by injustice and corruption.

REFORMATION MAY PREVENT REVOLUTION

New facilities and methods of crime also confront us, of which Silas H. Strawn notes:

"1. The development of hard roads and automobiles, making getaways easy. 2. Increased wealth, making purchase of automobiles and firearms possible. 3. Organized crime so that criminals can support politicians and buy protection. 4. Delay in the apprehension of criminals and the meting out of justice. 5. Indifference of citizens to their duties as jurymen, etc. 6. Unrestrained sale of firearms."—Ibid., page 196.

Unless this nation constitutes an exception in the history of world problems, we are facing a time when we must engage in either a reformation or a revolution. And unless we choose ere long which it shall be, the inexorable tide of events may sweep the power of choice beyond our control. Reformation is sorely needed in both our social and political body, including its profession and industrial methods. Our law enforcement agencies should be kept outside of political control, and strict penalties should be enforced upon those who betray a trust or shield the guilty.

We are in great need of higher ideals of honor in political, social, and industrial life. The spirit of fraternity, truth, and justice must be reborn among us. During the century ending the World War we had 88 wars, including Indian wars and expeditions, costing millions of human lives and over forty billions of dollars. Let us now end the cause of war by uniting in one great spiritual and moral war against crime and immorality, and for ever remove from our midst the most insidious and most dangerous enemy that ever attacked our nation.

"REPENT AND BE BAPTIZED"

Either religion is real or it is not real. Either the promises of the Bible mean something or they do not mean something. If the promises are false, the church of Christ is useless, and men will have to look to something else for their inspiration and their hope.

I believe that this promise of the gift of the Holy Spirit is true. I have listened to the testimonies of men and women who have declared that it is true. And the truth and sincerity of their statements are attested by the quality of the lives they have lived, by the change which the presence of that Holy Spirit has wrought in them. I believe that the promise is true because that spiritual experience has been granted to me. I testify that God lives, for I know with a certainty which can not be denied, from the many experiences of life, that he does live, and that he sends his Spirit to men.

Jesus said: "If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you.

"But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

"Howbeit when he the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come."—John 14: 15-18, 26; 16: 13.

CAMPUS LIFE

and then cried as they gave each other bear hugs. You know, how that was always a mystery to us? We thought they had gone crazy.

"Now I know just how they felt. Why, if next year you got to come back and I got to come back, I'd just shout till the old "Ad" Building fell down. I'd be so tickled and so grateful for being able to be back again that I couldn't help laughing and crying at the same time.

"Oh, Margery, if only we could come back next year! Both of us! Now I know what Graceland College really means."

"We Have Just Begun to Fight"

A Call to Action for Believers in the "Dry" Cause

(A statement issued by Daniel A. Poling, chairman of the Allied Forces.)

Unmistakably the recent elections bring to the cause of national Prohibition a new occasion. "New occasions teach new duties." We would be blind, and inexcusably blind, were we not to recognize facts, facts however startling, however disheartening as of the present moment. The national administration aside, Dry stalwarts of a generation have been defeated and nine states have, by overwhelming popular vote, repealed their enforcement laws, while two others voted to petition Congress for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

But recognition of these facts has for us no bugle of retreat. There are other facts and these other facts will more and more emerge as time passes and our opponents begin to administer their real or fancied triumph.

Now is not the time to state a detailed program for the Drys, nor is it the moment to indicate the details of what we believe should be their strategy. But we may and should restate certain principles and justify the faith within us that accepts the present crisis as a challenge to go forward.

First: We are against repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and we shall fight accordingly.

Second: We are against any measure for "legalizing" beer, or for liberalizing the Volstead Act, that circumvents the Constitution. Also we shall have no part in any program of mere obstruction. To illustrate: If we could at least hold the Eighteenth Amendment in the Constitution by thirteen states against thirty-five the "victory" would be worse than hollow. Such a program would be repugnant to the ideals and spirit of American democracy. Nullification, direct and complete, if not revolution, would be the result.

We believe that the Eighteenth Amendment, or the cause for which it stands, can be saved and advanced without a subversive policy. Drys should unite to defeat in the short session of Congress any bill providing for the legalization of beer. Other considerations aside, there is not time to work out vital details that involve public welfare. Certainly the "thirsty" who were promised "relief" by Christmas will be disappointed, but those responsible for the promise must bear now and eventually the full weight of their responsibility. There is a growing awareness in the opposition camp of difficulties ahead. The proposed two million dollar brewing combine in New Jersey has recently made inquiry concerning "protection" against the racketeer. And we were assured that legal liquor would eliminate lawlessness! Also it is agreed that when a tax sufficient to affect the Federal revenue situation is placed upon beer, the incentive for the bootlegger will be correspondingly increased. These are only two of many matters that justify Wet leadership in its new role of near humility. Perhaps more and more the defeated party will see the wisdom of "allowing" the incoming administration, which will control both houses of Congress, to have full credit for any and all liberalizing liquor legislation that may be passed.

If, as claimed by the opposition, the recent national elections are to be taken as a mandate from the people to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment, then certainly there is a mandate equally binding to keep out the saloon and to protect Dry territory. Both party platforms carried these specific pledges. No solution calling for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment can be submitted or even considered in good faith that does not make provision, definite and adequate, against return of the saloon and for protection of Dry territory. Every Dry and every Dry organization should keep this basic principle constantly before the American people. Nor should we be deterred or disturbed by the charge that will be shouted from the Wet housetops that such an honest fight is a filibuster.

Increasingly it is apparent that the brewers are premature in washing their kegs, in preparing their malt, and in getting steam up under their boilers. Increasingly it is apparent that repeal is more than a day's journey ahead.

As to Dry strategy, at least this may be said without prejudice to any future and more complete statement. The organizational unity that we believe is essential to the ultimate triumph of this cause, and without which we have suffered unnecessary defeats, may be still impossible. It may be inevitable that we shall disagree on important matters of the future educational, organizational and political program. But surely in the immediate crisis we can and must unite—first, to defeat both beer and repeal in the short session; second, to demand for every measure proposed specific and adequate provisions against return of the saloon and for protection of Dry territory—and this without consenting to the principle of repeal or compromising our position in the final vote.

Finally, our goal remains unchanged, our destination unaltered. Ours is at last not a fight for any law or amendment. Ours is a war to destroy the man-exploiting liquor traffic, legal and illegal. Ours is a continuing campaign to solve the liquor problem. This war does not end in, nor is it fatally affected by, reverses and defeats. This campaign does not rest its case at last with any statute or with any amendment. The Eighteenth Amendment is a means toward the great end. It never has been, and it is not now, the end in itself. We go on with the Eighteenth Amendment, or from the Eighteenth Amendment if necessary, to reach the goal, to solve the problem, to win the war. Under the standard of this fight we would unite with all citizens of patriotism and good will who move toward the goal, who would solve the problem, who would win the war.

Beautiful City

By Mrs. L. J. Rudd

I long for that City of Beauty—

A City so pure and fair.

Its dwellers are doers of duty;

Sweet peace and contentment are there.

All those who abide in that City

Are those who abide in the Lord.

The poor and the needy they pity,

And lived by the power of His word.

Zion, our Beautiful Zion,

God's City, our refuge, our rest.

His promise his Saints may rely on

His City and people to bless.

Santa Ana, California

Santa Claus Interested in Sacrifice Period

The Santa Ana Saints are making a determined effort to do their part during this sacrifice period. Sister Lola Mitchel was put in charge of the women, and, consulting with the district bishop and the branch president, she set a goal of two hundred dollars to be raised by Christmas. The branch is small and the goal seemed very high. Then Sister Aaron Engel came forward with a suggestion. She would like to give a turkey dinner at her home, asking Saints and friends to come and pay a dollar each, the money to go into the sacrifice fund. Her plans were successfully carried out and on Saturday evening, December 10, sixty guests presented themselves at the beautiful Engel home. As the dinner progressed, Brother D. B. Sorden, pastor of Los Angeles Central Branch, gave a short address; the Crum quartet, from Los Angeles Central Branch, sang, and the Misses Mustol, of Santa Ana, young cousins of the hostess, gave instrumental duets. Then, just before the dessert, Santa Claus walked in and astonished everyone by making a friendly speech, expressing his interest in the sacrifice period. He then handed Sister Mitchel the sixty dollars raised from the dinner. She was about to thank him when he reached into his pocket and brought out an envelope which when opened was found to contain one hundred dollars. In the midst of the excitement, Santa disappeared without ever telling who gave the hundred dollars, though members of Sister Engel's family are strongly suspected as they seemed to be on intimate terms with Santa Claus. The evening came to a happy close when the hostess called in the cooks from the kitchen who received an enthusiastic welcome. Sister Myrtle Knowlton and Sister Lottie Newton with her daughter, Phillis, had driven down early in the morning from Los Angeles and helped all day along with Mr. and Mrs. Butterfield to make the dinner a success. This time they gave as part of their sacrifice offering for the church. Nonmembers were interested and contributed in many ways to the success of the evening. One good woman, not a member of the church, ironed all the table linen after the dinner as Sister Engel is not physically very strong.

Sister Engel is known to many as the granddaughter of two greatly loved missionaries, Brother Josiah Butterfield, a former president of the seventies, and Brother Glaud Rodger, who worked so successfully in the Australian Mission.

Other efforts have been made by members of the ladies' aid, under the enthusiastic guidance of Sister William Kuhn, so that the two hundred dollar goal has been reached.

The many friends of Brother and Sister James Farley will be interested to know of the birth of a son to them, Alma Harold.

Santa Ana Saints were saddened at the passing of little Martha Mills, only daughter of Brother Clarence Mills, on Thanksgiving Day. Apostle E. J. Gleazer came down from Los Angeles to give the funeral sermon.

Detroit, Michigan

President F. M. McDowell Talks to Mass Meeting of Women

About two hundred people attended the mass meeting of the women's department, December 6, at First Church. A chorus of sixteen young women and a harp ensemble from the Cass High School furnished a splendid Christmas program.

The Detroit women's organization consists of eleven groups, each with a leader and complete organization. Economic conditions had recently discouraged the women from trying to raise funds so a quilt contest was waged to promote sociability. Each group was allowed to spend five dollars for material, the quilting to be done at the meetings. Prizes of five dollars, three dollars, and two dollars were offered. Five Detroit women, competent to judge, were called in to award the prizes.

The first prize was won by Mrs. Henrietta Davis's group; the second prize went to Mrs. Margaret Miller's group, and the third to Mrs. Betty Ayer's group. The second prize quilt sold for fifteen dollars and a duplicate was ordered at the same price. The third prize quilt sold for twelve dollars. Sacrifice envelopes were received with forty-two dollars and sixty-five cents for the general church, and ninety dollars was contributed to the local fund for mortgage reduction. These women have paid in one thousand dollars this year to the mortgage fund. They have also done a vast amount of welfare work.

President Floyd McDowell was present at the mass meeting and gave a short address. He was delighted with the fine work being done and the spirit shown. Mrs. Fred Curtis and Mrs. Percy Ayers are to be congratulated on the refreshments served and the jovial reception given everyone.

High Points in Year's Missionary Experience

District President Finds Many Reasons to Rejoice

In the first part of 1932, we were favored with some outstanding experiences as we held a week of cottage prayer services at Burlington, Iowa. These were well attended by the membership, and concluded with the sacrament service of February 7, when an unusual outpouring of the Spirit's influence was granted, and for two hours the people seemed to sit at the table of plenty and partake to the full. When the time for the closing of this service arrived, the general expression was that another two hours could have been as fully enjoyed. This was only one of the many fine meetings enjoyed. It seemed when the membership met, their desire for a continuation of such spiritual experiences was strong, and God was mindful of our needs.

Then came our June conference at Montrose Branch. This is only a small group and attendance exceeded our expectations. On Sunday the services were fraught with a spirit good to behold. Meetings for that day were held at Bluff Park, an ideal spot, and from the opening service until the close of the day a sweet, peaceful influence prevailed.

Next came the two-day meetings at Nauvoo which have been written up by others, and so we pass on with only mention of them.

The November conference of Nauvoo District was held at Burlington on the fifth and sixth, and while there was not a large attendance on the first day, a peaceful influence was felt and the business was harmoniously transacted. When Sunday dawned, people began to come from various parts of the district, also from other districts, and when the opening hour arrived, a goodly number had assembled in the spirit of reverence and worship.

During the month previous we had urged the local congregation to comply with the suggestions sent out by the First Presidency, that we make this a month of preparation so that when the time came we might be in a more fitting condition to commune at the table of the Lord.

This service was outstanding in several ways. Those entering the building were conscious of a feeling of peace and reverence which increased as the service progressed. Following the church school session and the necessary re-arranging of the service, two singers sang, "Take Time to Be Holy," and the communion service had begun. After all had partaken of the emblems, the time was given to prayer and testimony, and was profitably spent. Near the close, Elder J. F. Garver arose and under the power of the Spirit gave the assembled gathering a prophecy full of commendation, counsel, and admonition, which, if heeded, will be productive of good.

In the afternoon a special service had been designed to remind the Saints of the day and its memories. This service commemorated the birth of the late President Joseph Smith. That evening Elder L. G. Holloway was the speaker, entering upon a two-week series of services.

Brother Holloway's series was not as well attended as we had hoped, but, all in all, we are sure that good was accomplished and that the faith of the Saints was strengthened.

October 10, I went to Ferris, Illinois, to assist Brother Charles Fry with a series of meetings he was holding at Rock Creek Branch, and here, too, light and blessing were given to those who occupied. The general sentiment seemed to be that it would be profitable to continue longer, but other arrangements precluded this, and we had to close.

As the series at Burlington was nearing an end, I went to the assistance of Brother Fry at Bevier and Macon, Missouri. He had been preaching there a week when I arrived, and had had a good response. We intended to continue there for a longer period.

But on the twenty-seventh I received word that a nephew at Des Moines had been overcome by gas and his life snuffed out. It was my duty to return home and render what assistance I could. He was a young man twenty-eight years old, and leaves a wife and two small children besides his parents, Brother and Sister J. W. Rudkin, and one sister. Thus my stay at those places was cut short, and Brother Fry closed his effort during the week.

We found there those who are contending for the faith that was once delivered to the Saints. They seemed encouraged by our work with them.

After a short sojourn with homefolks, I returned here (to Burlington), and now we are looking forward to Christmas time when we shall hear the time-honored story and song, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

In many ways the year now passing has been one that has brought peace, comfort, blessing, and joy, notwithstanding there have been some conditions that we would have preferred otherwise. We are thankful for our blessings, and as we shall soon take up the activities of the new year, we do so hopefully and with courage in the final triumph of the angel message.

Church Events in Utah District

Sacrifice Month—Preparations for Christmas—a Visit From Apostle McConley

Sacrifice month is here, and workers are having even the children do what they can. Five hundred small envelopes were secured before the sacrifice envelopes came from the Bishopric, and Brother William Winkworth who does the job printing for the church, donated his service in printing on the face of each envelope, "Sacrifice Offering," with a line for name and month.

Each church school throughout the district is using these envelopes, giving them to the members with the request that they return them each Sunday with whatever amount they have saved or earned in some way during the week, this offering to apply on the church debt. Whether they can bring much or little, the fact that they bring a sacrifice offering means that they have thought of the church.

The Saints of Utah District are expecting a treat during the holiday week. Elder A. M. Chase is securing the slides, Ben Hur, by Lew Wallace. He will present them one night in each branch of the district with an interesting lecture or story of the Christ and the Holy Land.

For Christmas the Saints of Salt Lake City will enjoy a play by the juniors of the church school, accompanied by musical selections and tableaux by older young people, also a Christmas tree for the smaller ones.

An interesting time is expected at the church in Salt Lake City in January. Apostle Wheaton of the Church of Christ (Temple Lot), and Elder A. M. Chase of the Reorganized Church will hold two weeks of meetings, beginning January 8. Each will speak on alternate nights, presenting in an affirmative way the message of the Restoration and the ideals held by the churches they represent. Two young sisters who are stenographers, Miss Jensen and Miss Lohmolder, have consented to report these sermons.

Apostle M. A. McConley favored the Saints of this district with a short call, speaking at Ogden the evening of November 26, and at Salt Lake City the morning of the twenty-seventh. His discourses were inspirational. Those who went to Ogden, Saturday evening, to hear him, felt well repaid for the drive.

Brother Charles Wardel, of Union, attended a Mormon cottage meeting at that place. The Mormon elders who spoke paid special attention to Restoration, then asked him if he had anything to say. After he had presented the position of the Reorganization on the questions treated, they expressed a wish that they might meet and have a friendly conversation with a representative man of this faith. The outcome of this encounter was the appointment of a meeting two weeks later to be held at the home of Brother Wardel, and at his request Brothers Chase and Robertson and their wives, with others of the Salt Lake City Branch were present. This service was in charge of the Mormon elders, and after three of them had spoken and though they seemed to think that the whole story had been told, they asked the Reorganized men if they had anything to say on the question under consideration.

Brother Chase had taken notes on the talks, and beginning at the point at which they had started, he treated each question from the standpoint of the books. Some of the questions considered were: Brigham Young, the legal successor to the Seer; plural marriage; plural gods; preexistence, and over all, their personal testimony to all these things. Opposed to their teachings and testimonies were placed the teachings and testimony borne by Christ. When Brother Chase gave liberty for questions, none were forthcoming.

When the elders asked if they could have another meeting there, Brother Wardel answered: "Subject to the same conditions, yes." They consented to this, but asked for time to study these matters. The next meeting was appointed for December 14. District workers of the Reorganized Church hope that these meetings will result in a quickening of the interest among the members of Union as well as those outside the church, giving opportunity for an opening of the work at that place.

No man can be satisfied until his deepest nature is satisfied. Deep longings require something deeper than man's wisdom can offer. Christ comes from the depth of God's love to satisfy, and when we come to him and awake in his likeness here and hereafter, we shall be satisfied with his forgiveness, likeness, and love.—John L. Brandt, in Finding Christ.

Life is like breath: if we hold it we suffocate. Joy can not be withheld. A telegram announcing the arrival of a firstborn son is seldom democratic; it is more than a telegram: it is a rhapsody; Grief can not be withheld: it rends its garments. The conviction of God can not be withheld: it bursts any prison.—George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

Topeka, Kansas

1116 Clay Street

During the week of city-wide Religious Education in Topeka, Wendell Kelley, son of the church school director of Topeka Branch, was one of the fine juniors representing different denominations in the city to tell a Bible story from the past year's study. This occurred at the First Methodist Church, September 29. Those who heard it, report a nice story and excellent delivery by Wendell. His story was, "The Boy Christ in the Temple."

Proceeds from a chicken supper given by the juniors in October, went to purchase twelve suitable chairs for their department. This event was directed by Sister Weedmark at the home of Brother and Sister Sheets. Entertainment was by junior and senior young people.

About sixty-five Saints and friends attended a masked Halloween party October 28, at the B. F. Deller home. The rural school of Menekon, Kansas, with the teacher, attended in a body.

College Day was appropriately observed with an excellent sermon morning and evening by Elder Evan Fry, of Kansas City. He was accompanied by Sister Fry and the ladies' quartet of Central Church, Kansas City Stake. Special numbers by this quartet made an enjoyable feature of the service. Brother Fry was assisted by Elder George Harrington, of Independence, Missouri, to whom he used to listen when a little boy.

On November 6, the centennial anniversary of the late President Joseph Smith was celebrated with all-day services and basket dinner at the church. Elder C. B. Woodstock, associate director of Religious Education of the general church, was present, and ably depicted not only the life of this man, but the character of the message of the Christ, whose living exponent he was.

The morning sacrament service was in charge of District President Dave Little assisted by other members of the priesthood. Preceding the afternoon service a program was given by the young people in charge of Sister Deller. A short play written by Elbert A. Smith, presented early experiences in the life of the Prophet, and there were other appropriate numbers. Saints were present from Wichita, Kansas City, Manhattan, Netawaka, Burlingame, and Scranton.

Proceeds from a chili supper at the church the evening of November 18, went to the sacrifice fund. This was sponsored by the women's work group, and Sister F. O. Kelley was in charge of the program.

The Sunday preceding Thanksgiving the children brought gifts of food to the church in connection with their Thanksgiving sharing project, sponsored by the juniors, and with the assistance of the grown-ups, two bushel baskets containing thirty different kinds of food were given to a family who had lost all in a fire. The children enjoy the spirit of giving expressed in a practical and helpful way.

The prayer meeting at the church Thanksgiving morning was a feast of the Spirit's presence for all who attended. O. E. Weedmark was in charge.

In the evening of last Sacrament Sunday, Charles Fry, of Ottumwa, Iowa, was the speaker. He was accompanied from Kansas City by his son, Evan, and wife and her mother, Sister Eden, and son, Richard. Special numbers by Brother Evan, who played his own accompaniment, enhanced the musical part of the program.

Cottage prayer meetings are being held now, not only in the interest of economy during the winter months, but for some who are not always privileged to attend.

The pleasure of a visit to his father-in-law's home in Iowa, was marred for Pastor G. G. Caldwell, when the older man passed away.

Surveying the educational activities among the members of this branch for the year, the record shows one accredited with a gold seal certificate, Sister C. J. Sheets; another with a second grade, Sister B. F. Dellar. Sisters F. O. Kelley, Fern Weedmark, and C. J. Sheets have secured credits for the first quarter of Herald Study Outlines. Four are attending the Meninger Bible Study Class held in this city. Others are making special preparation in educational lines. Three juniors were awarded the first three places in the junior notebook contest conducted for the juniors of the general church. They are Helen Cramer, Gerald Hays, and Wendell Kelley. This bespeaks much for the local teacher in keeping up interest and enthusiasm for a year with the extra work in additional class preparations.

Sister Helen and Clyde Hays are the proud parents of a new son, Charles Harvey, born December 6.

The women are working in every way they can to aid in the sacrifice fund, making aprons, doughnuts, candy, etc. They also have a penny jar on the stand on the rostrum.

Longview-Kelso Mission, Washington

The Saints of the Longview-Kelso Mission in Washington, located about fifty miles from Portland, Oregon, are maintaining a Sunday school which has an average attendance of about forty, many of whom are nonmembers.

Unfortunately there are no members of the priesthood at that place to give the necessary leadership, and it is difficult for priesthood members to come regularly from Portland. The Saints of the mission promise a warm welcome to traveling missionaries, and pray for the day when they will have priesthood members located there.

Long Beach, California

Everyone Works Together Here

November was a very busy month for the Saints of Long Beach Branch. The Joseph Smith Centennial was fittingly observed November 6. Regular church school worship before classes was dispensed with and a special worship program featuring the late Prophet, was arranged for the thirty minutes between classes and the Sacrament service. The sweet influence of the Spirit was felt during both of these services.

In the evening Pastor J. L. Milner began a special missionary series. These services were held nightly except Saturdays during the ensuing two weeks. The pastor preached the first ten nights, using as a general theme, "The More Abundant Life." He sought to show the desirability of this life which Jesus promised and how it might be obtained here and hereafter. Attendance was good, averaging seventy-eight for the thirteen nights. Apostle E. J. Gleazer came on the eleventh night and finished the scheduled services, preaching Sunday, November 20, at the eleven o'clock service, too. Brother Gleazer's sermons were fitting, and left a new feeling of inspiration among those who heard him.

The Saints were happily surprised to hear Brother N. T. Chapman deliver a sermon on the morning of November 13. Brother Chapman was pastor here for many years and did much toward laying the foundations for the work now being done. It was indeed gratifying to hear him preach with much of his old-time enthusiasm. The Spirit of God blessed him abundantly in presenting his message.

Sacrifice period was launched Thanksgiving Day with a special Thanksgiving worship program. The attendance was not as large as it might have been, but the Spirit of the service will long be remembered by those who were there. Long Beach Saints are planning various ways for doing their bit in this time of financial stress. The women are taking the lead and doing much good both financially and in the promotion of fellowship.

The priesthood of this branch present a solid front. All of the ordained men, with one exception, are alert to their responsibilities as men of God. Two brothers were ordained at a beautiful service Sunday, October 23. Robert C. Leibold, who held the office of deacon, was ordained an Aaronic priest, and J. C. Crum was ordained to the office of deacon. Both of these men are moving steadily forward in presenting the Master's work. President Elbert A. Smith was present and delivered the charge in his sermon of the morning.

Long Beach is justly proud of the young people's division. This fine group of people is finding opportunities for preparation and work that promise a well-qualified church for the future. In dramatics, song, and service they find ample opportunity for carrying out their plans. They have been a wonderful help to the pastor and priesthood.

Fanning, Kansas

Winter Time Brings Many Activities

Days of zero weather with temperature ranging from sixteen degrees below zero to seven above, have failed to daunt the spirits of the young people in this locality. For with several inches of snow on the ground sleigh riding is excellent, and almost every night finds groups of young people enjoying this old, yet ever popular sport, in this community on the hills.

Although outside, the rapidly falling snow "was heaping the fields and highways with a silence deep and white," Friday night, December 9, Saints and friends were enjoying a get-together party in the little schoolhouse at Fanning. Sister Frankie Marsh Davies had charge of the program which consisted of musical numbers by Fred, Vergie, and Beulah Marsh; readings by Evelyn Jeschke and Marie Sheppard and a one act play, "When Mother Pulls the Strings." Those taking part in the play were: Evelyn and Ethel Jeschke; Hazel Johnson, Velma Wiley, Beulah Marsh and Virgie Marsh. Sister Mabel Mortimore, Maggie Hopkins, and Sylvia Marsh had charge of the plate supper for which a charge of ten cents was made. Popcorn and peanuts were also sold and there were two "cake walks." The money so raised will be used for branch expenses.

December 14, the annual branch business meeting was held. The following officers were elected: Pastor, William Twombly; president of the department of women, Sister Marie Sheppard; musical director, Laveta Thomas; publicity agent, Inez Pilcher; librarian, Sammie Twombly; Sunday school superintendent, Fred Marsh; head of department recreation and expression, William Gurwell; branch clerk, Sylvia Chesnut.

On the following day the department of women met at the home of Sister Wilma Twombly to finish work on a comfort which they were making and to elect the rest of the officers for their department.

Brother Samuel Twombly was called to Rulo, Nebraska, Friday, December 16, to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Mary Elizabeth Bryan. Sister Bryan was seventy-two years old and had been a member of the church for many years.

The children of the branch are practicing for the Christmas program which will be given at the church on Christmas Eve. The junior choir, under the direction of Sister Mabel Mortimore, will sing Christmas songs. The rest of the program is in charge of Sisters Evelyn and Lucille Jeschke, and Velma Wiley.

Patriarch Samuel Twombly, who is known all over this section of the country as an able public speaker, is often called upon by different organizations and churches for addresses. He rarely refuses such invitations as he feels that by mingling with many people he is able to spread the gospel and build up respect for the church. On Thursday night, December 15, he addressed the brotherhood meeting of the Methodist Church in Highland, Kansas. About seventy men were present to hear his talk on the subject, "The Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man."

Although there is much distress in the land, this group feels that it has much for which to be thankful, and at this Christmas time the hearts of the Saints go out in gratitude to the heavenly Father.

Nowata, Oklahoma

As the year is closing Saints of Nowata Branch are greatly encouraged in the gospel work, and feel that they have been abundantly blessed in their efforts to serve. The work of the church is moving forward.

Elder Lee Quick held a meeting in June, baptizing four, and in July, Branch President O. A. Duncan baptized three. Five have been added to the branch by transfer, making the present membership ninety-six.

The Saints were sorry to lose Brother Lloyd Harding and family, who are residing at Oklahoma City. They were valuable members of the branch. Brother Harding holds the office of priest and Sister Harding was music director.

The members were saddened by the passing of Brother Bert Lumm, October 22, at the age of sixty-five years. He died after an illness of six years. His companion, Sister Effie J., and several brothers survive. The funeral was held at the funeral home by Elder Amos T. Higdon; sermon by Elder Lee Quick. Brother Lumm was held in high esteem by all who knew him.

District President Amos T. Higdon was here in October, and preached on several occasions, encouraging the Saints to go forward.

Nowata enjoyed a visit from a former pastor, Apostle Roy S. Budd, November 27. He preached morning and evening. Brother Budd is very dear to the Saints here, and they enjoyed his sermons.

On November 28, Apostle J. F. Garver and Elder Higdon were here. This was Brother Garver's first visit to Nowata and the members enjoyed his sermon.

The business meeting for the election of officers for the branch was held December 11. Branch President O. A. Duncan and Sister W. T. Hayworth, secretary and treasurer, were sustained for the coming year. Elder A. J. Bly was selected counselor to the branch president; Sister Bertha Simms, superintendent of church school; Sister Effie Lumm, superintendent of women's department, and publicity agent. Sister Oafer Place was chosen as sponsor of the young people. Brother George Hayworth was sustained as branch chorister. This branch is moving on with faith and courage for a more spiritual and progressive year.

Essex, Ontario, Branch Is Organized

Latter-day Work Has Grown There Since 1908

In the winter of 1908 and 1909, Elder George M. Shippy, then laboring in Chatham district as missionary, secured an opening for preaching services in a schoolhouse about two miles north of Essex, Ontario. Immediately he commanded a good interest and attendance at his meetings. The gospel rang true to the convincing of a number of listeners, and on February 4, 1908, twenty-four years ago, eleven candidates were led into the waters of baptism by Brother Shippy.

This effort established a footing in this part of the vineyard for the latter-day evangel, and was the nucleus for the development of the gospel work in the years that followed. An interesting account of the circumstances that took place during this interim could be written if space permitted, but workers are happy now to know that the majority of these Essex charter members remained true to and active for the cause.

With a gradual gathering of members through the years, they found themselves sufficiently strong a short time ago to break away from the parent branch, Windsor, Ontario, and request separate organization. This movement had been under way for approximately a year and had gathered force and favor until this fall when the group leader, Elder J. W. A. Kettlewell, called a special meeting to consider the advisability of launching out alone as a branch. An almost unanimous vote in the affirmative resulted. Immediate steps were taken with the district president, Elder D. J. Williams, who in communication with Apostle D. T. Williams, minister in charge, granted Essex Saints permission, and on Thursday evening, December 8, they effected the organization. A fitting program and pleasing response from the members who accepted the different responsibilities as officers, paved the way for the charge later delivered by Apostle D. T. Williams as to the significance and importance of their relationship as a branch to the church.

This organization has served to enlarge the groups consciousness of duty and to more directly centralize their efforts in service. A bright future looms before the Saints in presenting the gospel story there. Numbers of openings are already available for preaching, visiting, and supervising. So, with these demands upon time, the local priesthood of three elders, find themselves busily engaged, apart from the temporal duties of life, in meeting the challenge of a greater work in service. There are other young men of this group who have been admonished to prepare for priesthood responsibility, and older workers trust that the day is not far distant when they will be placed in their office to more fully supply the branch needs.

Waterloo, Iowa

Parker and Columbia Streets

District President E. R. Davis held meetings here a few nights in October and had business meeting and installation of officers. A good spirit characterized each service with peace and harmony.

The officers elected were: President, W. H. Wood; first assistant, Robert H. Allen; second assistant, Guy Haynes; secretary, P. M. Hinds; financial committee: P. M. Hinds, J. A. Talley, Robert H. Allen, R. C. McCormick; solicitor, W. H. Wood; auditor, W. H. Hinds; publicity agent, Thelma Wood; correspondent, Ivy Fisher; attendance recorder, Howard Grapes; director of music, Zella Allen, assistant, Emma Talley; pianist, Roberta Allen; director of church school, Robert H. Allen, and director of women, Freda McCormick.

At the sacrament service November 6, in charge of Robert Allen, God's Spirit was strongly in evidence. Prayers were offered for Sister Ellison, who was at one time a member of Waterloo Branch, but now lives near Anamosa.

Dinner was held at W. H. Wood's in honor of A. J. Fisher who was to go to Camas, Washington, to make his home with his son. The branch is fortunate in having Sister Fannie Wood to manage dinners. She seems to know how much to prepare, and the best part of it all is she knows how to cook. In the evening Brother Fisher gave his farewell sermon. He has been branch president twice and a member of the Waterloo Branch for twelve years.

At the adjournment of the sacrament meeting, who should appear but Elder C. A. Kress, at one time a leader in the branch. He left again on Monday.

Due to the sacrament service and farewell dinner to Brother Fisher, the Joseph Smith III centennial celebration was observed November 13. Elder Robert Allen gave a talk on Joseph Smith. The songs used in the services were those composed by Brother Joseph.

The priesthood of the branch met the last Sunday of the month to study and discuss branch problems, and to ask God's aid in their work and his blessing and presence at the sacrament meeting on the next Sunday.

Tuesday, November 1, a party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hinds in commemoration of the sister's birthday, also their silver wedding. The program was in charge of the young people.

Patricia and Emma Louise, little daughters of Leland and Gladys Roosa, were blessed by Elders Haynes and Allen, and Allen and Wood. This family has since returned to their home in Vallejo, California.

Since winter with its snow has come Saints do not see so much evidence of the excellent care taken of the building and grounds during the past summer. Some of the men of the branch hold the opinion that the respect of neighbors must be gained before they can be interested in the gospel message. These men have accordingly put forth much effort in keeping the lawn mowed and looking spick and span. The lot is one hundred and twenty by one hundred and twenty-one feet and the church building is small, so the mowing of the lawn, together with the grass between the walks and the paving, makes, as one brother says, "lots of walkin' in them there acres." Brother Howard Grapes has been the prime mover and operator in this work, and deserves much credit.

W. H. Wood painted the wooden part of the church also the new woodshed a glossy white. Flowerbeds were also planted, and bore many beautiful blossoms. A nonmember neighbor is always ready to loan his lawn mower and tools to help, and many times has offered his assistance. He also planted a row of flowers along the entire one hundred and twenty foot line of his lot adjoining the church property. He says that people have stopped and inquired about the church. They are interested in something that shows evidence of other people's interest. Who wants something that no one else is interested in or wants? The little vine-covered church on Parker Street is not large and wonderful, in fact it is too small for the Saints' activities, but they are proud of it and happy that they have a church home. They are always glad to welcome Saints that may be visiting in Waterloo. Take the Litchfield car in the main business district and get off right at the church door, corner of Parker and Columbia.

Most of the members are having a hard time to get along, but no one is going hungry or cold. All thank God for his many blessings. Brother McCoy, an eighty-year-old member, is very sick and losing strength as his heart grows weaker.

The midweek prayer meetings are being held at the various homes.

Artland Branch, Saskatchewan

Young People Assume Their Responsibilities

Some progress can be reported for Artland Branch. Edwin Chase and family have moved back into the groups. R. Vawter and family came last spring. These have added a number to the branch, and their young people are taking place in the front ranks, making a group from which good work is justly expected.

Two young men have been ordained this year. Noble Harper was ordained a priest, and Dan Laverty, a teacher. Elgin Clark, of Saskatoon, received his ordination to the office of elder at Artland, November 6, under the hands of Elder J. J. Cornish.

On the evening of November 15, the Saints gathered at the hall where Brother J. J. Cornish united in marriage a promising young couple, Daniel Laverty and Miss Vivian Davies, both of Senlac. These young people are to be commended for the help they have given Artland Branch.

Elders James Cornish and Elgin Clark are now out in the district visiting and preaching.

October 17, was the birthday of Brother J. J. Cornish, and he was seventy-eight years old. His six children came home. He has thirty-nine grandchildren, and sixteen great grandchildren. Brother Cornish received more than fifty cards and letters by mail.

Sacrament for Saints Near Orlando, Florida

All Saints living in or near Orlando, Florida, are invited to meet at the home of Brother Theodore Smith, 1410 Philadelphia Street, Orlando, Sunday, January 1, at 3 p. m., to partake of the Lord's Supper. We are happy to be in this favored, warm climate, but regret that the scattered condition of members make it impossible to meet often. It would be well, therefore, for those able to come, to meet the first day of the New Year, to renew their covenant.—F. G. Pitt, 712 Maxwell Street, Orlando, Florida.

Our Departed Ones

LAUDIE.—Charles Lucius Laudie was born at Wadesboro, North Carolina, February 27, 1859. He married Margaret Elizabeth Davis at Chesterfield, South Carolina, June 16, 1880. To this union five children were born, four of whom with his wife survive him: Mrs. J. E. Mangun, of Independence, Missouri; Charles L. Laudie, of Ogden, Utah; Mrs. A. R. Burton, of Glendale, California, and Andrew B. Laudie, of Independence. George F. Laudie died in infancy. In addition to the survivors named are fifteen grandchildren. In early manhood Brother Laudie was a member of the Methodist Church in South Carolina, and for a time was an active steward in that church. In 1901, he moved with his family to Utah, where they lived for a number of years. In 1913, they moved to Independence, where he was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder M. F. Gowell. He was a printer by trade and for the last seven years had been employed by the Swan Printing Company at Independence. His death occurred December 3, 1932, as the result of an automobile accident. The funeral sermon was by Joseph Luff, and interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

RUDKIN.—Bernard William Rudkin, son of J. W. and Mary J. Rudkin, was born July 11, 1904, at Bevier, Missouri. At the age of three years he with his parents moved to Des Moines, Iowa. He was baptized in the church when eight years old. On August 25, 1923, he married Miss Helen Carr. Two sons blessed their union, Bernard Warren, aged seven and John Alexander, aged two. Bernard was at his employment with the gas company, November 2, 1932. He went to see about the pressure in a manhole in the street, and was overcome by the fumes. He expired before help could reach him. The funeral services were held from the Lilly Funeral Home in Des Moines, December 1, 1932, by Reverend William Knight and Elder F. T. Mussell. A large concourse of friends, relatives, and neighbors gathered to share the grief of the sorrowing family. The services at the cemetery were conducted by the Masonic Fraternity. There are left to mourn, his wife and the sons mentioned; his parents, and one sister, Mrs. Dale Finch; his aged grandmother, Mrs. Rudkin, a number of other relatives, and a host of friends. Thus we are made to keenly realize the truth of the statement, "In the midst of life we are in death."

SWAINSON.—Margaret Hayes was born in Garafraxa County, Ontario, November 4, 1856. Died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. H. Lewis, in Port Huron, Michigan, Sunday, November 13. She was united in marriage to John G. Swainson who preceded her in death thirteen years. To them were born eight children of whom four survive: Thomas, of Sarnia, Earl, of Toronto; Mrs. W. F. Clifton of Toronto, Canada, and Mrs. Claude H. Lewis, of Port Huron, Michigan. She is also survived by twelve grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. In early womanhood she united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints under the ministry of Elder Benjamin St. John, and for over forty years remained true and faithful to her covenant relationship with Christ. Was valiant in her testimony of the angel's message, and constantly expressed a natural religious life. Services were conducted in the Sarnia, Canada, church by Elder William Patterson, assisted by Elder W. L. Phillips. Interment was in the Southerland cemetery at Court-right, Canada.

WURM.—August Wurm was born in New State, Germany, March 14, 1855. He came with his parents to America in 1869. March 31, 1883, he married Miss Wilhelmena Neitzel at Hastings, Michigan. To this union four children were born, Oscar, Mrs. Edith Fuhr, William, and Aldo Wurm. His widow, six grandchildren, and one great-grandchild survive him in addition to a host of other relatives and friends. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in September, 1927. He was a faithful member until his death September 24, 1932. (Continued on page 1377.)

BRONSON.—William G. Bronson, son of Ovando and Amanda Morrow Bronson, was born November 3, 1864. In 1877, the family settled in Andrew County, Missouri, and engaged in farming. William G. assisted his father on the home farm until he became of age and then followed farming and threshing on his own account for ten years. In 1896, he married Mamie Belle Guinn, of Fillmore, Missouri, a daughter of James F. and Mary Guinn, both deceased. In 1901, he went to Saint Joseph, Missouri, and embarked in the dairy business. He followed this business for four years, and then was in the employ of the Saint Joseph Transfer Company for two years, and of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for two years. Mr. and Mrs. Bronson came to Independence, Missouri, in May, 1909. In the following October the hardware firm of Bronson and McCord was organized. This firm was succeeded by the firm of Bronson and Page in 1914, which has since that time been doing business. Mr. Bronson was baptized into the church at Saint Joseph, August 3, 1890, by Elder J. M. Terry. He was ordained a deacon May 15, 1904; a priest, November 11, 1908, and an elder February 7, 1909, all at Saint Joseph. He continued to be an active church worker after his arrival in Independence. Became ill with a heart attack December 14, 1932, which developed into pneumonia and other complications, resulting in his death the morning of December 18. He is survived by his wife; two sons, Guinn and Clay, of the home; two brothers, Lant, of Fillmore, and Arthur, of Omaha; one sister, Miss Ella Bronson, of Fillmore, and many friends. The funeral was held from the Stone Church December 20, Elbert A. Smith preaching the sermon, Leonard Lea in charge of the service. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.
